Mr. WORKS. I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that the amendment he proposes would have no effect whatever, because the territory of Japan is absolutely excluded from the provisions of the bill. Therefore the amendment to that amendment would not effect what he has in mind. It is effective in the House bill, because that is made a condition upon which they may be admitted into this country; but the amendment to the amendment would accomplish nothing, I think.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will allow me, the whole object to be attained can only be attained by a new treaty. If it is desired to attain the object that all the Senators are speaking of here who are opposed to the Senate committee, if they want to exclude them, just abrogate the present treaty and tell them openly and aboveboard that we mean to have a new one and exclude them.

Mr. WORKS. That is precisely what we ought to do, but we are not ready to do that yet.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, it is not a function of the Immigration Committee to write treaties.

Mr. WORKS. It is a function of Congress, however, to legislate against the admission into this country of objectionable immigrants, whether they come from Japan or somewhere else. There is no reason why one nation should be excepted from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Not when we have an agreement with a separate nation. We solemnly pledged ourselves to observe it as long as the other side observes it.

Mr. WORKS. Very good. The bill as passed by the House anticipates the provisions of the agreement.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But objection was made——

Mr. WORKS. One moment. What I am insisting upon is that when that agreement for any reason is violated we should have some sort of protection.

If the Senator from Oregon will permit me, I want to say that the gentlemen's agreement, so-called, with Japan is not protecting us. While it is lived up to, I think, fairly well by Japan, there is a class of Japanese subjects who are coming into this country who are exceedingly objectionable. They are what we call in our part of the country picture brides. They are permitted to come in under that agreement. It is estimated that there are something like 1,000,000 Japanese in this country. These picture brides are permitted to come in under existing conditions, and in that way we are bringing up Japanese-American citizens, made so by the fact that they are born in this country. I think that is one of the most serious difficulties that is presenting itself to us at the present time. We ought to have some means of protecting ourselves against that condition of things, and it ought to be done in this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am in thorough accord with the views of the Senator, but the Senator knows, as I know, how difficult it is to get Congress to take a positive position in reference to certain people in the world.

Mr. President, it is not that I have a poor opinion of Japan or any of the oriental peoples. As a matter of fact, I believe that Japan is one of the most efficient as well as one of the most powerful of nations. I recognize her great intelligence, I recognize her great efficiency in whatever walk of industrial life they seek to enter, but it does not suit our civilization, it does not suit our institutions or our national life, to have them, or, rather, particular classes of them, amongst us in such great numbers as to interfere with our institutions, domestic or other.

I agree with the Senator from California that we ought not to be afraid to insert in this bill or in any other measure of legislation language which will fully and amply protect our own country and our own people.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I want the Senator to know that I was not taking exception to his position or what he said. I was only calling attention to the fact that I was afraid the amendment would not accomplish what we both desire.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not intend to criticize the attitude of the Senator, because I know very well from past experience how he feels about this bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the junior Senator from California?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In just a moment. I think the junior Senator from California is going to suggest an amendment which will be more forceful and more effective probably than the one I have offered, and I will withdraw my amendment until that one has been submitted to the Senate. I think it will do the work better than mine.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to submit an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "act," in line 11, page 8, insert the following:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the amendment submitted by the Senate committee undertakes by drawing lines of latitude to include a large part of Asia and purposely and by intention excludes territory of Japan and of China. They exclude China because there is now an existing treaty of exclusion, and they exclude Japan because there is an existing treaty and a supplemental agreement restricting immigration.

I desire to call attention to the fact that inasmuch as this amendment excludes these countries entirely from the operation of the bill there might be in the minds of some people, diplomatists or attorneys, an avenue found for the escape of the peoples excluded by treaty or by agreement. For instance, this bill, the latest expression of the legislature, if it passes, leaves the Republic of China out of consideration, so far as the exclusion of its laboring people are concerned, and the same may be said of the Empire of Japan; and this latest expression of the legislature having done so, there might be by implication a repeal of the treaty or the agreement or the understanding by which we are now protected against the immigration of the people of those countries.

This strikes me with particular force in view of the fact that the treaty for commerce and navigation with Japan negotiated in 1911, and which superseded the treaty of November 22, 1894, provides that—

> The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel, and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established.

Here is a treaty which admits the citizens of Japan into this country and the possessions of this country for trade purposes. It is to that extent, apart from any agreement, a restriction upon their coming. I do not know that it can be contended that coolies who come for the purpose of offering their labor for hire can be called persons coming to this country for the purpose of trade and travel. Therefore, if the Senate amendment as proposed is made a part of this latest expression of the legislative will, the people of Japan, if you please, without restriction, may enter the United States. It might well be considered a nice question whether the proposed bill has not modified in some degree the language of the treaty of 1911, which I have just read and which to some degree safeguards us against inundation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PHELAN. Let me finish, if you please, on this point. I have before me the treaty which was superseded by the treaty of 1911, namely, the treaty of 1894. In Article I of the superseded treaty I find that there is no restriction upon the coming of the Japanese. On the contrary, they are given free charter to come. Therefore the subsequent treaty, by limiting their coming to trade, is in fact a limitation which should not be ignored. Article I of the superseded treaty of 1894 reads:

> The citizens or subjects of each of the two high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party, and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property.

It is therefore plain that the later treaty is a restriction upon the freedom of entry given to those people in the treaty of 1894.

Now we come to enact a law, and Congress by law can repeal or abrogate a treaty. If there is anything inconsistent between the act of Congress and the treaty, the act of Congress, being the latest expression of the legislative will, shall prevail. Therefore I consider it extremely dangerous to pass the Senate amendment unless, as provided in the amendment which I have submitted, it shall appear that there is no intention on the part of Congress to repeal or abrogate any treaty or any agreement which has existence at this time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, this matter seems so perfectly plain to my mind that I will admit I am a little impatient at the object sought to be obtained by those who oppose it, when that object can only be attained by an abrogation or by a radical change of the existing treaty.

The Senator from California has just said that the last expression of the legislative will, without referring or relating to an agreement, might be taken to mean that it has abrogated that agreement. That can hardly be argued in this case, when in the process of the formulation of the proposed legislation the foreign power affected called attention to the language we proposed to incorporate and said:

> That language is in violation of our understanding; we propose to observe, as we have already observed, that agreement; and now you are about to incorporate into your last legislative expression a practical violation of our understanding. We kept it, we propose to keep it, and intend to keep it.

The remedy the Senator from California proposes is not the remedy of broken faith or a violation of the self-respect of a great nation, but if you are seeking to abrogate the treaty and exclude them, what possible benefit will accrue to us by referring to an agreement which has met all the purposes for which we are now striving without any question, without any clash? To go to work and put an absolutely inoperative, ineffectual provision into the bill that can serve only to irritate the other party and leaves you no power in your hands, where is the statesmanship of it? You say we are going to refer to it and we mean to enforce it. You can only enforce it by the good faith of the other party. The other party has kept good faith and we, as American citizens, I propose shall by my vote and voice keep faith as to the agreement.

If you refer to it, as you propose in your amendment, as an indirect way of doing the same thing as by the treaty which the Senator has read, one succeeding the other and being a subsequent treaty, you have disclosed the fact that in our treaty relations we have extended to them what they so earnestly sought, putting them with other first-class nations including the favored-nation clause. But when conditions arose that were acute, and in some instances we considered intolerable, they met us on this ground as to the thing complained of—"If you will not abrogate the treaty, if you will not push this thing further, we will see that the source of your annoyance ceases; provided you will not change our nominal status in relation to you and among the other nations of the world by changing that treaty, we will render inoperative and ineffectual certain rights guaranteed by the treaty by a side agreement and keep it." They have kept it.

Now, what do you propose to do? You propose to say, "Yes; you have kept it, but we do not trust you. We have not any faith in your keeping it, and believe that you will take advantage of this last expression of the legislative will and flood the country." Suppose they did keep it; they have a right now to abrogate it. If they saw fit, they could have done it in all the eight years between 1908 and 1916, and they have not done it.

Mr. PHELAN. Abrogate what?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Their agreement is not to issue certain passports. They have kept it. This is not the place nor is this the manner for you to abrogate treaties, unless you are ready to abrogate them. If it is the intent and purpose of the United States Senate here and now to abrogate a solemn treaty entered into and disregard the good faith of our country with reference to another solemn treaty—if you choose, call it a compact—that has been kept in good faith, I, for one, shall not vote for it.

Mr. PHELAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the Senator contend that the treaty of 1911 giving liberty to the people of Japan to enter this country for trade admits laborers under that provision, or does it exclude laborers under that provision by necessary implication?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the illustration the Senator seeks to use is one in my favor. In spite of the treaty of 1911, that was subsequent to the agreement of 1908, Japan has kept her compact.

Mr. PHELAN. I do not think the Senator understands. I have contended that by the treaty of 1911 no Japanese laborers may enter the United States, because manifestly they do not enter for trade. I am not sure of my contention as a legal proposition. Then the agreement by which Japan undertakes not to issue passports for laborers is an act of supererogation if the treaty bars that same class of laborers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think by the State Department or those charged with the administration and the execution of our laws that has been so construed. It can only be by implication. I think the treaty of 1911 has reference entirely to our trade relations. But the State Department and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations will agree that our real treaty with Japan includes all the favored-nation clause. She has by an agreement with us, so far as the objection raised by certain citizens of our country is concerned, made that treaty inoperative without doing violence to her national self-respect. We have observed it; she has observed it. Why now inject that which will create friction and discord without giving you any remedy whatever?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the Senator a question for information. How many Japanese have come to this country in the last few years?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have not the data before me. So far as I have been informed she has kept her agreement by keeping out the class we have objected to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No laborers can come in at all?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Not in the last few years.

Mr. PHELAN. In reply to the Senator from South Carolina, there is no favored-nation clause, of which he speaks, in the treaty of 1911 or elsewhere, except what "concerns commerce and navigation"—not immigration. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Mississippi, there is grave question as to whether or not the Japanese have increased in number on the western coast. They may not have come in through the open ports of the United States, but, as a matter of fact, the Immigration Department knows that they do come over the border surreptitiously and without passports. Many of them have been caught; and in violation of the spirit of the agreement, certainly the importation of the picture brides should be taken into account. With the picture brides coming in through the ports unchallenged, it means a very large increase in Japanese immigration, because the Immigration Department informs me that they are coming in at the rate of 1,900 a year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senator from California does not mean to imply that these surreptitious violators of the law come in with the knowledge or consent of their Government? Where the cases have been apprehended they have been dealt with according to the agreement, with the sanction of that Government.

Mr. PHELAN. I merely wish to show that our Japanese population is increasing, whether it be through the regular road or through the irregular road that they enter.

Mr. REED. Women are coming in.

Mr. PHELAN. Women are coming in at the rate of 1,900 a year, and that is a new policy of somebody; I do not know who inaugurated it. So, instead now of the United States receiving Japanese from Japan they are received as natives of the soil in California, because the picture brides come here for the purpose of wedding the Japanese, neither party to the matrimonial arrangement having seen each other, except by exchange of photographs. It looks very much like what we discovered in Hawaii, an attempt to populate the land with Nipponese, because we know how tenacious they are of their nationality and how unassimilable they are.

So it is really immaterial whether they come by immigration or come by birth.

I visited Hawaii the other day and 90 per cent of the school children I found in the public schools supported by the Territory were Japanese. I asked the governor what their numbers were. He said there were 12,500 Japanese children, and 11,200 of them attend not only the American schools, but the Japanese, which are held before and after the sessions of the public schools, for the purpose of indoctrinating them with their own religion and their own language and their customs and their manners. So very soon there will be a native population in Hawaii which will outvote the American, German, French, and Russian population, which we call white. There are 97,000 Japanese in Hawaii to-day, in a Territory of the United States, as against 16,000 white, as above, and 22,000 Portuguese.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the amendment proposed by the Senator from California prevent the immigration of the picture brides to whom he refers?

Mr. PHELAN. I have not reached that yet. I intend to propose an amendment, if possible, to meet that condition. This relates to another matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. My understanding is that the amendment offered by the Senator does not touch that question.

Mr. PHELAN. It does not. Addressing myself to the amendment, I will ask the Senator from South Carolina, in charge of the bill, if he has any objection to the amendment. I understood that he had no objection if the word "agreement" was eliminated.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To be perfectly frank with the Senator from California, the reason why I had no objection was because I did not think with the word "agreement" out it affected anything at all. I thought it did not really affect it one way or another. As the Senator from Michigan has just pointed out, it does not touch the question of picture brides. So, no matter how you go around the circle, you come back to the fact that you want to abrogate our treaty.

Mr. PHELAN. But I do insist that permitting picture brides to enter is certainly an irregular traffic. It is a violation of the spirit, whether it be a treaty or an agreement. Our object is to exclude these very people who are now born upon our soil and given over to labor competing with our own people, destroying our native white population. I will deal with that later.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, from the viewpoint of a southerner who has looked at the race question very closely for a long time this whole thing appears rather ridiculous.

The Senator from California solemnly informs us that there are 200 Japanese a month—that means 2,400 a year—coming over surreptitiously or otherwise. According to what he said, I imagine he means coming over surreptitiously, and that they are going to "flood" the white people of America with a population of alien and unassimilable blood. Two hundred a month, 2,400 a year!

There are some 14,000,000 negroes in the South. They are spreading themselves all over the United States. Everybody admits that they are an inferior race to the Japanese.

Mr. President, there are just two classes of men lined up on this particular question. One class of men wants to declare that the United States is a white man's country, and they dare say so out in the open. The other class of men either do not mean it or do not dare to say it. It does not make much difference whether they do mean it or whether they do not dare to say it; they fall in the same category. They may be lacking in ideal or they may be lacking in courage. Whichever it happens to be, they fall down there and remain there—impaled.

I have never found since I sounded the tocsin when the Chinese-exclusion bill was under consideration in the Fifty-third Congress any particular help from the Pacific slope with regard to the race issue in the South. We then extended them the glad hand and said we would help them if they would help us. Thus far they have not helped us at all. The Senate has to-day and yesterday voted down half a dozen amendments to this bill to exclude negroes from immigration into the United States. Neither the Independent Senator from the State of California nor the Democratic Senator will dare to say that the Japanese are inferior to negroes, and yet we got no help. We asked for bread, and you gave us a stone. You are not willing to vote to exclude negro immigration from the West Indies. A great many of them are attempting to come from Jamaica and Guadaloupe. You are not willing to provide for the danger by excluding negro immigration from Africa itself or the West Indies.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I always yield to the Senator from California, and with more than gladness.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator from Mississippi is not representing my position quite correctly. There has been no proposition here to exclude negroes that did not include some one else, so far as this bill is concerned; and when that question was directly presented on a former occasion I voted to exclude the negroes. I presume the Senator has forgotten that; but no such question has been presented here by any of the amendments which have been offered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I had temporarily forgotten what the Senator states, but I now remember it, and I recognize the fact as one that ought to have created a greater impression upon my mentality than it did. I am very glad to be able to say publicly that I now remember that the Senator from California did vote with me upon that proposition, but I remember that at that time there came up to me on the Democratic side of this Senate——

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one minute. There came to me on the Democratic side of the Senate men who appealed to me on partisan grounds to withdraw the very resolution for which the Senator from California voted, stating that it might hurt the Democratic Party in some doubtful district where the negroes voted very largely. I refused to withdraw it, and I was pretty generally defeated. I did happen to forget that the Senator from California voted with me upon that occasion. I am sorry that I had forgotten it. Now I yield to the junior Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I wish to remind the Senator from Mississippi that within the hour I voted for the exclusion of natives of Africa. Hence the Senator must not overlook that fact; but I did not vote to exclude the natives of the West Indies, because I have visited that country, and I find men in Cuba and in San Domingo and in other parts of that region quite fit for admission to this country. There are so few of them that it is no problem.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is no fear of negro immigration to this country from Africa in the present or in the immediate future, but there is some chance of negro immigration from the West Indies. They are already beginning to come not only from Jamaica, encouraged by the Panama Canal work, but from Guadaloupe and Martinique.

Now, then, either this is a white man's country or it is not. Those of you who are willing to say that this is a white man's country ought to say so by your votes. You stand around and smile and risk international complications with Japan on a race issue about the Japanese, who are as highly civilized as you are, and you dare not, because of congressional situations here and there, declare as to the negro that this is a white man's country, because the negro has a vote. Not only you Republicans, but you northern Democrats waive it all aside. "A white man's country; yes, in a way; oh, yes; but do not offend that negro voter in my district!"

If you want this country to be a white man's country, say so. Every one of you at the bottom of your heart does want it. There is not a man in this Senate who to-day would risk any chance of America becoming anything except an English-speaking white man's country; and yet you hesitate and halt and play the coward both upon the language and the race.

Speaking for myself, I love my race more than I do my family. I would sacrifice the family to-morrow to the race—wife and children and self—if I could accomplish anything by it.

The Senator from California tells us that this bill is a matter of supererogation, so far as the Japanese are concerned. Suppose it is. If it be a work of supererogation, then it is solely so because the Japanese Government has kept faith, and it has kept faith in a very distinguished way. They are a very highly civilized people; very much superior to both you and to me in some particulars; inferior to us in some others. In that nice, clean-cut courtesy that enables a gentleman to meet a gentleman anywhere in the world, the Japanese are not my inferiors nor yours.

You come to face this immigration question with an arrière-pensée that you want to keep this a white man's country, and yet the minute you are faced by the fact that there exists in some congressional districts somewhere a negro vote, you dare not face it. When I say that I am not speaking to Republicans any more than I am speaking to some of the Democrats.

Why, Mr. President, cast your eyes for one moment over the history of the world from its beginning. I do not ask you to go into details, but what does it all mean? From the very day that the first Scythian came around the Black Sea, down to now, it means that the torch of enlightenment and civilization has been in the hands of the white race, and no other race, except temporarily, and very temporarily at that, has had anything to do with the advance of civilization, commerce, literature, law, and justice in this world. The whole history of humanity in its better and its higher aspect is simply the history of the accomplishments and achievements of the white race. We are of European extraction; white extraction. We do not want America ever to be even so much as questioned as a white man's country.

As for myself, I here declare that there is no question of family or of patriotism or of law that rises superior in my mind to my devotion to the race. I can not see for the life of me why all this tempest in a teapot is created. I can not see how gentlemen can quarrel with Japan about what Japan as a Government has done. Above all, I can not see how they can quarrel with Japan because of what Japan as a Government has refrained from doing. The Japanese have treated us in the very best possible way as a Government; and if there have been violations of the law they have been individual violations of individual Japanese, with which the Japanese Government had nothing to do. I hope the Senate will not take a position insincere in itself, because it is based upon the idea of declaring that this is a white man's country, when they dare not do it all along the line—of accusing the Japanese Government of bad faith, when the Japanese Government has not been guilty of bad faith in the slightest particular, but has, upon the contrary, strained itself against the will and the emotions of the Japanese people in order to meet us more than half way.

The Japanese are not a race of barbarians; they are not a race of veneered men; they are a race of people who have proven their ability to stand in the front ranks of civilization. I do not want them here, not because they are inferior, but because they are different. I want a homogeneous population here; I want a population in the United States which shall be entirely and altogether white, as far as we can make it so, with our past history behind us; not because I assert that I as a white man am necessarily superior to the other man, but because he is different from me, and he is unassimilable by me and I am unassimilable by him. I am absolutely in accord with the idea that no part of this country shall be Japanese, or Chinese, or Negro, or Filipino, or Porto Rican, or anything else; but when you accuse the Japanese Government of bad faith you have no ground to travel upon. They have not been guilty of it at all. They have made a gentlemen's agreement and they have kept it like gentlemen—the gentlemen that they are.

Mr. President, a great Republic can not exist except with a homogeneous population. You have got to support the temple of democracy upon the four pillars of equality of opportunity, of liberty, of justice, and of fraternity. I have said this so often that I am ashamed to repeat it; but you can not have real fraternity without real equality, and you can not have real liberty without both, and you can not have real fraternity except with a population that voluntarily and willingly intermarries. If it does not voluntarily and willingly intermarry and attempt to assimilate every part of itself to itself, then you can not have it; it is a physical impossibility. So I do not want any Japanese Pacific coast; I do not want any Chinese Pacific coast; I do not want any negro Mississippi, and I do not want any negroes to come in from the West Indian islands to flood the market with new immigrants, against the proposition to stop which all of you have this morning voted, or nearly all of you.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this bill ought to pass as it is, without the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the views of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and my own on the race question may not differ so much as he thinks. I am opposed to the bringing into this country of the negro or the Chinaman or the Japanese. As I said a while ago, when the abstract and direct question was presented as to whether negroes should be admitted into this country, I voted against it because I do not believe in it. I have always believed, and I have never hesitated to say so, that it is a great mistake that negroes were granted the franchise. I have said so in public addresses delivered before the negroes themselves. I think it has resulted in great injury to the colored race and has been of practically no benefit to them; but we have the negro here; we have granted him the franchise; and what can we do upon this side of the Chamber, or we who are representing States on the Pacific coast, to relieve the South from the presence of the negro? He is there; we brought him there; we have by our own voluntary act granted him the franchise; he has the rights of an American citizen, and they can not be taken from him either at the instance of the Senator from Mississippi or of the whole South. We owe the colored race protection in their rights, whatever they may be. We are just as responsible for the protection of their rights as we are for the protection of the rights of the white race, so long as we have brought them here and made them citizens of this Government. So, I think the Senator from Mississippi is quite unjust in any criticism he may pass upon Senators from the Pacific coast or other Senators on this side of the Chamber that they should stand by the colored race and see that they are protected in their rights.

Mr. President, this proposed amendment that is intended to relieve the Japanese Government from the effects of the bill has not been defended on principle by any Senator on the floor. Nobody has been willing to say that he desires that the Japanese shall be admitted into this country. That is not it. The amendment is based upon two propositions. One is that by excluding the Japanese we are violating the treaty made with their Government. The other that by the mention of the side agreement that was made by this country and the Japanese Government we are giving offense to that nation.

Mr. President, do you suppose that if this side agreement had not been made by which the Emperor of Japan bound himself to prevent the emigration of his people to this country the treaty would ever have been signed or ratified by the Senate? In effect, that side agreement so made, so far as the two Governments are concerned, is a part of the agreement and should be taken as excluding the Japanese from this country, because it obligates the Emperor of Japan to see that laborers from that country do not enter the United States; and it was upon that promise, made, it is true, outside of the treaty, that we consented that nothing should appear in the treaty that would reflect, as they said it would, upon the Japanese Government as compared with other nations. So, in effect, so far as the rights of the two nations are concerned, we have to-day a treaty that excludes the Japanese from this country when we have the agreement that was made and the treaty itself.

The provision in the House bill is that Japanese subjects, like the others to whom the bill relates, shall be excluded, subject to two things: First, the treaty that was made with Japan, which, if it stood alone, would allow Japanese subjects to come into this country without restriction or limitation. The other exception is any agreement that was made with that country or any other. Now, what is the effect of that provision? It is to continue in force and effect not only the treaty that we had made with Japan but the side agreement that was made, by which Japanese subjects were to be excluded from this country by their own nation. Why should anyone object to that provision in the bill? Why should the Japanese Government object to that provision in the bill? The treaty is allowed to stand as it is; the other agreement is continued in force. This provision has no effect whatever until that agreement is abrogated in some way or other; and when it is abrogated there is every reason in the world why there should be a provision in this bill that would exclude the Japanese from this country. That is the only effect of the House provision. It does not take effect until that agreement is in some way set aside and ceases to operate. When it does, when there is no longer any agreement, then the House provision will operate to do just exactly what the Emperor of Japan agreed he would do, namely, exclude his subjects from this country. So we are not proposing, if we adopt the House provision of the bill, to violate any treaty that we made with Japan. There is no reason that I can see why the Japanese Government should take exception to a provision of that kind. It does not reflect upon that nation in the slightest degree.

In this connection let me say, Mr. President, that the comment by the Senator from Mississippi upon any claim made that the Japanese Government has dealt unfairly with this matter or that it has not carried out its agreement is entirely unjust. Nobody here has made any such claim as that. When I first addressed the Senate on that subject, I said in explicit terms that I understood that the Japanese Government had kept that agreement in good faith. I am not criticizing the Japanese Government or the Japanese, and have never done so. I have never claimed, neither do the people of the Pacific coast claim, that the Japanese are an inferior race; that is not it. They are a nonassimilable race. There are reasons that I do not care to mention in this presence why the people on the Pacific coast object to the presence of the Japanese in that section of the country; nor is it wise or proper that I should do so; but you can ask any Senator here who represents one of the Pacific Coast States, and he can tell you promptly and succinctly why it is that the people of the Pacific coast object to the presence of the Japanese. It has nothing to do with the question as to whether or not they are inferior. Nobody claims that they are inferior.

Nor is it true, Mr. President, as intimated by the Senator from Mississippi, that, so far as I am concerned, I have any quarrel with the Japanese Government. They are a friendly nation; they have never, so far as I know, offended against us. There is no reason why we should have any feeling against that nation as a nation; there is no reason why we should have any feeling against the Japanese people; and there is no such condition of mind, so far as I know, on the Pacific coast; but there is every reason, insurmountable reasons, why the Japanese people ought not to be allowed to come into this country in any large numbers. That has been recognized by the Government for many years past.

I referred very briefly to the incoming of women from Japan. I do not know what construction has been placed upon the so-called "gentlemen's agreement" with respect to the admission of that class of people. Evidently the Emperor of Japan has construed it as allowing their entry into this country. He has not excluded them, at least, and, therefore, I assume that the construction placed upon it is that Japanese of that class, no matter whether they be working women or what not, may come into this country under the agreement that we have now with Japan.

Mr. President, I regard that as one of the most unfortunate and dangerous features of the whole situation. As I said a while ago, we have something like 100,000 Japanese men in this country. A very large proportion of them are in California. Two years ago I visited the immigration station at San Francisco, and at that time there were in the station that had just come over from Japan, about 30 of these so-called "picture brides." They are scattered throughout California. The man who has selected one of them by a picture that has been sent him comes to San Francisco; they are married there at the immigration station, and go out into California. There will be enough of them before very long to mate with all of the 100,000 Japanese men, perhaps 75,000 of whom are in the State of California; and do you know what that means? It means the propagation of Japanese in the State of California by the thousands, and whenever a Japanese child is born in California it becomes a citizen of the State.

There have been laws passed in California to prevent the permanent holding of land by Japanese, but they are evading that provision of the California statute by having the land conveyed to the children who are native-born citizens. It is plain that we can not prevent any American citizen from holding land in this country. Some Senator suggests, "Amend the law"; but do you think we could pass a law that would be effective that would forbid one American citizen to hold lands within this country while another was permitted to hold them? Do you think a law of that kind in California would be constitutional?

Mr. President, this is a more serious question than a good many people appreciate. You people here in the East have no conception of the conditions; you have no knowledge of the objection that applies to the incoming and living of those people in this country. You have not lived alongside of them, as some of us have done; you have not done business with them and met them in all walks of life, as we have done. We know how objectionable it is that they should be allowed to come to this country; and it is for that reason that I am protesting against this amendment, which opens the door to the incoming subjects of Japan at the moment the Emperor of Japan sees proper to abrogate the secret agreement that he has made with this country. No protection is given, not only to the Pacific coast, but no protection is given to this country against that sort of immigration.

That is the effect of the amendment against which I am contending. The amendment of my colleague would not help the situation very much. It is simply attempting to patch up an amendment that ought not to be passed under any circumstances; and the very same objection that is made to the House provision of the bill applies to the amendment proposed by my colleague, because, as I have said, the only reason for making this amendment at all is to avoid any offense to Japan and a violation of a treaty made with that country, and the provision that my colleague offers would do the very same thing.

Mr. President, I think we ought to deal fairly and openly and honestly with Japan. This is a pure evasion. It is intended, I suppose, to convey to the Japanese Government the idea that we have no objection to the incoming of their people into this country, while we all have. There is not a Member of this body who would get up and say that he wanted the Japanese admitted into this country, whether they are civilized or uncivilized, or better educated or less educated than we are. Therefore, while the Senator from Mississippi is talking about a man having the courage of his convictions, and saying that he wants this country to be a white man's country, we ought to be just as courageous when we are dealing with Japan. I hope we have not become a nation of cowards, who are afraid to protect our own interests against any nation on earth.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say on this subject. I would not myself say one word that would give offense to Japan. I should be sorry to see the Congress of the United States take any step that could justly be called a ground for offense to Japan or its Government, but there is nothing in this provision of the House that I am able to see that could be given any such construction or that should convey any such meaning or exhibit any such intent on the part of the Congress; for we are simply attempting to protect ourselves from immigration that the Emperor of Japan has himself agreed to prevent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up very much time in the discussion of this bill or the amendment of the Senate committee to the bill. I think I have made my position quite plain with reference to it. I do, however, want to take exception to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in his criticism of those who happen to differ from him about this whole question.

The distinguished Senator builds a man of straw in his criticism of Senators, particularly those on the other side, and some of us on this side, and then proceeds to demolish him with his usual force and eloquence. He assumes, Mr. President, in what he has to say that there has been severe criticism of the Japanese Government by Members who want the language of this bill written so plainly that he who runs may be able to read. There has not been any purpose upon my part, and I am sure there has not been upon the part of those who agree with me in this discussion, to criticize the course of Japan. I think I disclaimed any purpose either to criticize the Japanese people or to criticize the course of Japan with reference to this so-called gentlemen's agreement. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the Japanese Emperor has carried out his agreement with the United States to the letter—at least so far as I have been informed it has been done—and the laboring classes, or the classes that this Government desires to restrict, have not been permitted to land here. Whether that agreement has been observed in spirit or not, as has been suggested by the Senator from California, in permitting another class of Japanese citizens to come here, is another question, which I do not propose to discuss; but I disclaim any purpose to criticize the course of the Japanese Government with reference to this gentlemen's agreement. It has been carried out, and I hope it may continue to be carried out. The purpose I have in view, Mr. President, and those who agree with me on this subject, is that it shall be carried out in the future, and shall not be avoided by simply leaving the terms of the bill in such condition that the Japanese people can say, "You have avoided this gentlemen's agreement and you have possibly avoided the effect of your treaty by your new immigration bill."

I do not think the bill as it is amended by the Senate committee does that thing; at least, it is a subject of very grave doubt, because distinguished gentlemen on the floor of the Senate have disagreed as to the effect of the language embraced in the amendment as it has been proposed by the Senate committee. Now, the proposed amendment of the junior Senator from California ought not to offend the sensibilities of anybody. It simply proposes to reserve any treaty restrictions or any other restrictions upon immigration that now exist by virtue of any laws on the statute books, and I do not see how anybody can be offended at that.

Mr. President, every nation on the face of the earth has reserved the right to protect its government and its institutions by legislation on the subject of immigration. If the press tells the truth about Europe to-day, the European Governments now are taking steps to further restrict immigration or to impose upon citizenship conditions which did not exist heretofore. A man comes to this country and in five years, practically, he becomes a citizen of the United States. I do not know but that in some of the European countries as short a time as that, possibly a shorter time than that, was required in order that a man might declare his allegiance to the Government and become a full citizen. But they have found over there, Mr. President, if the current reports be true, that a man does not cast aside his allegiance to his fatherland or to his native land after he has been in the new country for five years and then has become a citizen, and the Governments of Europe have found it necessary to extend the time of residence longer than 5 or 10 years, or 15 or 20 years, in order that they may be sure that after a man has cast aside his former citizenship and become a citizen of that particular country they will be sure of the position he occupies.

We have had some such trouble as that in this country, it seems to me, in the not very distant past. Criticisms have been had of men of different nationalities who have come here and taken out their citizenship papers, and it has been claimed in some quarters that they have not become as devout citizens as they ought to be, but that their allegiance is a divided allegiance. Mr. President, that criticism has been indulged in in reference to men from the European countries that ordinarily make splendid citizens here, men who are absorbed by and become a part of our citizenship.

The distinguished Senator from Mississippi talks loud and long when it comes to a condition that exists in his own section of the country, but when it comes to another section of the country, with whose institutions he is not entirely acquainted, and, as the Senator from California says, with the conditions of which he is unacquainted, he takes a very different view. He would require us to receive and absorb peoples of the Orient whether we would or no, admitting, even as he does, that the peoples over there can not be assimilated by the people of this country.

Mr. President, I do not think the Senator is entirely fair. He charges the Senators on the other side of the Chamber with cowardice when it comes to the discussion of the negro question, because he says it might affect their chances in a congressional or some other election. What are we to say in reference to his own course here, Mr. President, when he insists upon a condition in his own section, upon a white man's government, as he calls it, and yet by his argument he would enforce other than a white man's government on the people of the Pacific coast?

Mr. President, we yielded on sentimental grounds to this thing, when this treaty was entered into, against the protest of some men in this Senate Chamber. It was predicted then that if we yielded we would hear more from this very insistence of a very sensitive people, and we are hearing from it. Why can not this Government do as European Governments do, and insist upon conditions that affect our governmental life in our way and at our own time, and in such legislation as we see fit to enact, without being so much influenced by conditions which exist in other countries? I say that without any intention of being disrespectful to the people of Japan. They are an efficient people. There is not any question about that. They are a highly civilized people. In some respects, as the Senator from Mississippi says, they are our superiors; certainly in certain phases of industrial life and in many other walks of life. But, as the Senator says, they are not assimilable. We can not, without injury to our national life, and to theirs as well, permit the intermingling of these two races, Mr. President; and why should we not say so?

I do wish that the time may come when this Congress will not hesitate on any account to express in the form of legislation what will best protect our own people. If we do not do it now, Mr. President, if we yield again, the time is coming when we will have to yield further to the demands, if not of Japan, then to those of some other nation, and it is up to us to assert and maintain our own governmental life and our own civilization in our own way. If war has to come of it, Mr. President, let it come. I have not any fear that we are going to have war. We may not be prepared for it, but it would not take very long to get prepared to defend our own country against all comers. I have not any fear about that. If our unprepared situation and the fear which that situation superinduces is going to prevent us from legislating for our own protection, Mr. President, the sooner we wind up our governmental life and go into the hands of a receiver the better off we will be. But so long as we believe in certain legislation for the protection of our national life, Mr. President, just that long ought we to be willing to assert ourselves in our own way, without questioning the delicacy of the feeling of any other peoples, and I do not believe there is any danger of anybody interfering with us because we do that thing. I am in favor not only of amending this proposed statute, as has been suggested by the Senator from California, but, if necessary, going further and stating the peoples against whom we intend to assert ourselves with reference to immigration.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish very much that questions of this character might be discussed without marring the discussion with sectional bias. In recent years gone by writers and statesmen of America have taken the position that the race question of the South, because of the large number of negroes resident there, was a local or sectional issue. That distorted and unsound view has prevented the possibility of anything being done up to date looking to the permanent and proper solution of that problem, which I regard as the gravest problem which confronts the civilization of the century. I believe that its proper solution will determine the question as to whether or not this Republic shall live to fulfill the hope and realize the dream of the great men and women who gave it being. It is not a local question. On the contrary, it is a national question, as national in all its elements as ever emanated from the pregnant womb of time. It should not be treated as a local question, and as a local question it can not be solved. If settled at all, it must be settled by the Nation as a whole, for the Nation made it. And he is a narrow-minded, short-sighted statesman, it occurs to me, who takes any other view of it. The Chinese and Japanese question on the Pacific coast is in the same category with reference to the scope of its effect and its bearing upon the whole Nation.

I am just as much interested in the preservation of the purity of the Caucasian race in California as I am in Mississippi. This country, once dismembered by the horrors of war, has become so completely and perfectly reunited that you can not injuriously affect one State without the deleterious influences being felt in all the other States. As has been so well said, and reiterated upon the floor of the Senate this afternoon, there is no question which engages the attention of the patriotic statesman that is quite so sacred, so vital to the future of this Republic as the preservation of race purity. One of the great men of the South in discussing this question said:

> Now, the idea of race is far more sacred than that of the family. It is, in fact, the most sacred thing on earth, and he who offends against it is an apostate from his kind and mounts the apex of sacrilege.

And he expressed a great truth, a truth which I wish might be engraved in ineffaceable characters upon the minds of every American voter, that he might teach it to his children, until it would become an instinct of the race.

It is unfortunate that when one undertakes to discuss the race question in the South, unless he fails to apotheosize the negro and invest him with qualities that God Almighty has denied him, somebody will say that he is moved or inspired by "race prejudice." My attitude toward the negro of the South does not grow out of race hatred or anything akin to race prejudice; but it grows out of an accurate knowledge of the negro's nature—his limitations and racial history. My objection to giving the negro social and political equality may be attributed to that race pride which has always characterized the Anglo-Saxon race. If one will only stop to think what that race pride has done for the world, he will see at once the vital necessity for keeping it alive. It is the noblest attribute of the Anglo-Saxon soul.

It is that race pride which has preserved the purity of the Anglo-Saxon race; that kept its blood pure and made it the ruling dominant race of the world. It is that race pride to which we are indebted for the literature of the English-speaking people, for the discoveries in science, for the beneficent Government under which we live, for poetry and art; in a word, for the civilization which glorifies the twentieth century. It is that race pride which has made the Anglo-Saxon as Tennyson describes him—

> Heir to all the ages in the foremost files of times.

It ought to be kept alive at any cost. To permit it to be set aside or smothered by diplomatic necessities, the exigencies of business, or for the accumulation of gold will be a wrong to the living and a crime against generations yet unborn. In the South the two races live together, pretty nearly equal in number, with the whites controlling in matters of government. It represents two streams running parallel. One is white, the other black. As long as the barrier between the two is kept intact things will go on fairly well, but let the dividing wall be broken down and the molecules mingle, no power beneath the stars can separate them again. You have mudded the clear stream, lowered the standard of manhood on the part of the superior race without in any way elevating the standard of the inferior race. The future permanency of our institutions, the civilization which glorifies the present day, depend upon the preservation of the purity of the Caucasian race. And the man who would break down that barrier is an enemy to society and an archenemy to posterity. The negro race of the South can live and prosper under the white man's government. The white man in America or anywhere else can not live under negro government, and you know it. The same thing is true of the Japanese and Chinese on the Pacific coast.

Now, I believe it is the duty of this Congress to protect America first. We must be just to our own people before we can be generous to any other nation. I do not want to offend the Japanese. I believe in living in peace with all the nations of the earth. But we can not afford to sacrifice the vital interests of the American people to a mere matter of race vanity on the part of the Japanese. It has been said here this afternoon that in some respects the Japanese and Chinese are superior to the Caucasian race. It is not necessary that I should deny that. I am willing to concede them a very high order of merit. As a matter of fact we all know that the Chinaman has demonstrated his ability for maintaining a stable form of government for a longer period than any other nation in the history of the world. The Chinese Empire was in existence before Greece arose to the mastery of the world. They saw that marvelous country with its orators, statesmen, poets, and sculptors rise to produce a civilization to rival which has been the despair of all subsequent races of men. They saw the civilization of Greece crumble and above its ruins arose the great Roman Empire. And after centuries of world domination they saw the sceptre pass from Rome farther west. While our forefathers were skin-clad savages in the forests of Germany the Chinese scientists and statesmen were tracing the stars and inventing gunpowder. But all this was accomplished by the preservation of the purity of the Chinese race. I do not think I misstate history when I say that no mongrel race in all the annals of the world has ever been able to maintain a stable government or create a high civilization.

No; I would not offend the Japanese or the Chinese unnecessarily. But I can not understand how it would be offensive to the Japanese or the Chinese for the American Government to say that we would rather that your people would not come here—our civilization is not suited to you, your civilization is not suited to us. The races are so dissimilar that they will not amalgamate—they will not assimilate. Our people will not go to your country to become citizens, not because you are not as good as we think we are, but because it is better for both that we do not go there. If the Japanese and the Chinese should take offense at this position assumed by the American Government, it is their misfortune. We owe a debt to posterity, and I shall hold that debt sacred. I for one will not repudiate the obligation. If it means war, which God forbid, then I would prefer that we have war. I had rather sacrifice the youth of America on the field of battle than to sacrifice our civilization and encumber posterity with a hybrid, mongrelized race of people. I shall vote for any measure that will save the western part of this Republic from Japanese and Chinese inundation. And I shall do so notwithstanding the fact that some of the honorable Senators representing the Western States have not seen fit by their votes to lighten the burden which bears so heavily upon the white men of the South on account of the presence of the enormous negro population. I can not afford to be disloyal to my country because of the errors or mistakes of certain individual men. My obligations to the people of the United States are not limited by sectional lines. I am going to do my duty as I understand it, and trust that time may bring my brethren from the West to understand all the difficulties of our peculiar situation in the South, and when they do understand it I have not the least doubt that they will come to the rescue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 23, after the word "north," it is proposed to insert:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possessions thereof.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hughes	Norris	Smoot
Brandegee	Husting	Overman	Sterling
Catron	James	Page	Stone
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Sutherland
Clapp	Jones	Poindexter	Thomas
Clark	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thompson
Culberson	Kirby	Reed	Townsend
Cummins	La Follette	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Curtis	Lane	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Walsh
Fernald	Lippitt	Sherman	Warren
Gallinger	Lodge	Simmons	Watson
Gore	McCumber	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Gronna	McLean	Smith, Md.	Williams
Harding	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before we proceed to a vote on this amendment I wish to say that I have been wondering at the seriousness with which a great many of the representatives of the people take themselves. They seem to be forgetful. We hear from gentlemen on each side of the Chamber, intelligent men, preening themselves upon the purity of the Caucasian race in this country and the greatness which it has achieved and the duty which we owe to the country and ourselves to keep that race unmixed and true to its traditions and to exclude those other peoples who are of differing races and hence less worthy morally and mentally, I assume, from participating in the governmental affairs of the Nation.

They apply the argument to both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, forgetting, it seems to me, that the past history of the country does not justify them in their assumption of superiority. In the early days, not so long ago, we carried on a desperate war to fix the status of our right to hold human beings in slavery. We were not so great a race as to be so shining an example to another race of people, created, I presume, by the same Supreme Being, when we were holding them in a condition of absolute slavery and buying and selling them as chattels, after hunting them down and dragging them from their native land under the most barbarous and inhuman conditions, capturing them and chaining them neck to neck, and then crowding them on board of some ship and throwing them overboard after it had been declared unlawful in case a cruiser was in pursuit of that vessel. We were quite willing and anxious, and did in fact, live in the sweat of other men's brows and became proud of doing so. That condition has improved, yet we ought to bear ourselves modestly and with decent courtesy to others.

It was merely an attempt on the part of the governing class of people of this country, from wherever they came—and they came from all the Caucasian races—to secure cheap labor or, preferably, free labor, and to live off of others. Not a very high ideal, to say the least.

We did that thing to a race which we now denounce as inferior, and which in many respects naturally would be inferior on account of the conditions which have preceded their present situation, which is not ideal. They were brought here for economic and selfish reasons only. They were brought here to work for another and to sweat and toil that he might live at ease.

On the Pacific coast the Chinese and Japanese were brought into that country for the same purpose and the same reason and that alone. It was not done out of any kindness to the Japanese, not for the welfare of the general conditions of this Government, but to work at the lowest living wage and to compete and degrade the wage of the Caucasian laboring man.

In the South it created an intermediate class, the so-called "poor white trash," if you please, living in ignorance in the hardest condition of life with neither the respect of the negro slave nor his owner, the planter.

On our coast the Japanese and the Chinese by thousands were imported simply to beat down the price of labor. The "white man" who received $2.50 a day upon which to support his family either had to work for 85 cents a day, if you please, for the same kind of work or hunt for something else to do.

The Japanese were brought into California and Oregon for what purpose? To gather certain crops and do other work at a price cheaper than the white man could afford to do it. They were employed in the hop fields and orchards and vineyards where they are working for themselves to-day. They would not stand for the conditions sought to be imposed upon them. Those who enslaved the African and imported the Asiatics would have imported chimpanzees or orang-utans or baboons or "hairy" Ainus, or all of them, if they could have got them to work for nothing, or next to nothing, and support themselves in their deep solicitude for the welfare of their Caucasian neighbors, I suppose.

There is not anything about this question that we of differing sections need to war with one another or to quarrel with one another or insult one another about or over which to harass one another. We have all been guilty. You on the Atlantic, the Yankees in the North, were engaged in catching them and running them down into the South; the South was buying them and enslaving them; and we of the West were importing the cheapest of all labor. As a people we would import any class of labor, white, black, yellow, or blue, if there was blue—anyone who would work for next to nothing. But the Japanese will not stand for it longer than they have to do so. The Japanese feel that they are equal; in fact, they feel that they are our superiors, and in many respects they are. They are able, fit, thrifty, and shrewd. They have mastered the situation until they now control the crops of many of the products of the Pacific coast, both in Oregon, Washington, and California, until they control absolutely, and they have supreme contempt for your efforts to oust them from their places. They are not allowed to own an acre of land, but they may lease it, and by leasehold they have acquired possessions on that coast that are worth millions of dollars. They are to be reckoned with, and they are to be treated fairly and honestly, and that is our duty to them, to the Caucasian race, and to ourselves.

We owe also our duty to this country to preserve it and to keep its Caucasian laboring men in a condition where they can not be starved out. The country is flooded to-day with protests against the conditions of labor. The laboring man as well as the small farmer is being run out by a process of attrition with increasing competition with those who have lived for thousands of years upon half a loaf.

I say again that I think that some of us take ourselves too seriously. I want to vote for any measure which will keep the Caucasian race in possession of its own country, but I take no great pride in our supreme virtue as the guardians of the Caucasian race when I think over our past history and bear in mind the prodigious efforts which we have put forth to rot and rob it and grind its unfortunate face in the past, nor do I take too seriously our encomiums upon ourselves. We lack a sense of humor. We take ourselves too seriously.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the Senate more than a moment, but I believe the matter is of sufficient importance to call the attention of the Members who were absent during the debate to the amendment. The amendment which I proposed and which is before the Senate reads:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof.

That relates not only to the Japanese, who seem to be the principal subjects of discussion here, but also to the Chinese.

I should like to call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to an editorial utterance by the San Francisco Chronicle of May 18, 1916, referring to this very bill which is before the Senate and the amendment which is proposed by the Senate committee, which it must be conceded is clumsy and inadequate. Whatever may be its purpose, it has failed of that purpose because the lines described in the bill do not exclude, for instance, all of the Chinese Republic. It excludes only a part of Russia or Siberia, and necessarily would have to be reconstructed if the purpose of the committee is to be attained. This editorial, which is very illuminating, says:

Japan and its possessions, including Formosa, are excluded from the operation of the law, as well as about two-fifths of the Chinese Empire. Nothing east of the one hundred and tenth meridian on the Asiatic Continent is covered by the bill, which, if it operates to repeal all previous laws inconsistent therewith—as it will unless expressly provided to the contrary—would open our door to some hundreds of millions of Chinese from the continent as well as all the Chinese from Formosa.

So far as the Chinese are concerned, one may assume that the California delegation, if no others, may be relied on to see that an effective nonrepeal clause is included in the bill. Without that the paragraph as agreed on would let in the entire population of China unless our authorities were prepared to prove that applicants were from east of meridian 110.

So the object of my amendment is so simple and plain that I can not understand why it should be opposed. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has accepted it in lieu of his own, and I think the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill is inclined to accept it. By it the act which we are considering, if enacted, shall not repeal either treaty or law or agreement by which we are protected against the invasion of Asiatic coolies. It is a safeguard. It neither adds to nor detracts from the measure which is proposed, but is simply a safeguard to insure against any omissions unintentionally which have crept into the bill, which would not include all the territories which under existing law are barred from sending immigrants to this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I merely desire to correct the impression which I perhaps unfortunately made upon the Senator from California. I am not at all inclined to accept his amendment, because it contains in it the very thing that I have been objecting to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I judge from what the Senator from California says that he is under the impression that his amendment is the pending amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. It is my impression that we have not yet voted upon the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it is not an amendment to the committee amendment, but is an amendment to the text of the bill further on. Am I correct?

Mr. PHELAN. I proposed it as an amendment to the committee amendment, which was under discussion at the time.

Mr. NORRIS. Where does it come in?

Mr. PHELAN. At the end of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Line 13, page 7, after the word "north," which is the end of the committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I was under the impression that the Senator offered it to come in at some point on page 8.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator is right, but I corrected it since submitting it.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am going to vote for this amendment because I think it ought to be passed; but I take this occasion to remark to both the Senators from California that it is a little hard for me to reconcile their position, in which they oppose the Japanese coming to this country, with their votes in favor of admitting the mixed races of the West Indian Islands. I am voting for this amendment because I want to protect the western coast against what it regards as a menace, and I trust that these gentlemen from California will extend their philosophy so that it will protect other parts of the country than the particular section in which they live. There is no man who can claim that from every standpoint the Japanese and Chinese are not superior to the races of the West Indies.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from California to the bill, at page 66, which I think bears somewhat on the argument he presented. It is there prescribed—

And all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed on and after the taking effect of this act.

So if there is any force in his amendment, as I think there is some force in what the Senator says, without an express reference to this matter, we may go further than we want to go, even further than any Senator here wishes to go, in reference to this matter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Michigan will allow me, there is already an act inconsistent with the passport act, namely, a treaty. The word "treaty" will not take in an agreement. It says they can not come in, and they made the latter subsequent to the former, and they agree to that. Any word that you put in there inconsistent with this act will have no reference to the agreement, because that is not an act.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the Senator from California was not referring expressly to the agreement, as I understood the Senator. If I understood his argument correctly, he was arguing that, possibly, if we were to pass the amendment as proposed by the committee we might repeal the treaty which otherwise we would not wish to repeal. I may have misunderstood him, but I think I did not. I think there is considerable force in what he said upon that subject.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator is right. I argued that under the treaty of 1894 with Japan the people of that country were given the privilege of free entry to the United States, and under the treaty of 1911, now in effect, and which superseded the treaty of 1894, only those are admitted to the United States who come to pursue trade. I hold on with as much tenacity as possible to the existing treaty which restricts immigration. Therefore, if there is any possibility in the act before this body of superseding in terms as the latest expression of the legislature the treaty of 1911, then it is a matter worthy of very serious attention.

So the Senator from Michigan is right. The principal argument in favor of the adoption of the pending amendment is to safeguard ourselves against the possible repeal of any provision in our interest in the treaty of 1911.

As to the passage to which he has called my attention, it is good as far as it goes, but my amendment goes further, and refers not only to any act but to any act, treaty, or agreement. I will repeat my amendment. It provides:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any existing law, treaty, or agreement in so far as such law, treaty, or agreement serves to prohibit or restrict immigration into the United States or any possession thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. If it is in order to submit an amendment bearing upon picture brides at this time, I will be glad to present it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. PHELAN. I can not say that it is an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think it will be in order until the committee amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. REED. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, to come in at the end of the committee's amendment, and I hope the chairman of the committee can see his way clear to accept this amendment. It includes in the prohibited class the following:

All persons who come to the United States for the purpose of securing temporary employment as laborers and who intend to return to the countries from which they came.

Mr. President, it has grown to be a custom for large numbers of laborers to flock from Europe to this country to take positions whenever the price of labor advances. Formerly they used to bring them over by contract, but that was prohibited. It is no longer necessary to employ the contract. The Atlantic Ocean for all practical purposes is becoming so narrow, so easily crossed, which is the same thing, and the dissemination of information is so rapid, that many thousands of people come here annually to work through the summer or through the busy season, cutting down the wages of the American who has a job, and then going back to their own country.

The following figures, taken from the immigration report, I want to submit to the Senate:

In 1915 there came to this country as immigrants 326,700 people; there departed 204,074 people.

In 1914 there came 1,218,480; there returned 303,338.

In 1913 there came 1,197,889; there returned 308,190.

In 1912 there came 1,333,172; there returned 333,262.

In 1911 there came 878,587; there returned 295,666.

In 1910 there came 1,041,570; there returned 202,436.

In 1909 there came 751,786; there returned 255,802.

During the period embraced between 1909 and 1915, both inclusive, there were admitted to this country 6,253,187 persons; there departed from the country 1,872,768. It would not be fair to say that all who departed were laborers who came here for temporary purposes, but it is safe to say that a very considerable percentage of them were of that class.

I hope the committee will accept this amendment and let it go to conference, and if it needs any adjustment it can be done in conference.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the class of immigrants to whom the Senator from Missouri refers is a most undesirable class. He is entirely right, and I fully share his views in regard to it. If there is any way of reaching those birds of passage who come out here and work in the summer and go back, taking their money with them, they ought to be reached. They do not come here with any intention of becoming citizens and sharing in the fortunes of the country; they come here simply for a few months.

I have no right to speak for the committee, but I should be very glad to accept the amendment.

However, Mr. President, it is not an amendment to this amendment. It is a new amendment, and I think if the Senator would offer it, as he has a perfect right to do, as a new amendment it would, as he suggests, be taken to conference, to be considered at that time.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon an interruption——

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I am through.

Mr. REED. I see no reason why it could not be properly added at the end of the present amendment and as an amendment to the amendment. The language of the amendment is language of exclusion.

Mr. LODGE. This whole section is an enumeration of the excluded classes. Now, the Senator is adding a new class. My suggestion does not in the least interfere with the amendment or its adoption, but I think it comes in properly as a new amendment and not as an amendment to this amendment. I think it will be safer if kept separate from it.

Mr. REED. I think it should come in as an amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to see it go on the bill in any way.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I agree that the amendment shall be accepted as the Senator from Missouri suggests. As a matter of course it can be worked out in proper form in the conference committee, as he suggested.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. I was ready to yield the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in sympathy with the Senator's amendment, but unless some other explanation is made of the committee amendment I am in hopes that it may be defeated. I should like to have the Senator offer his amendment to come in at some other part of the bill, if it can be offered just as well to some other part of it, so that its life would not depend upon this committee amendment. If the committee are willing to accept it, I presume they would be willing to accept it to some other part of the bill as well as to this particular amendment.

Mr. REED. If there is a general concurrence in that opinion, I am perfectly willing to withhold the amendment and offer it as soon as we have voted upon the committee amendment. I am doing that rather with the idea that the amendment will not meet with any opposition and will be accepted.

Mr. NORRIS. It really ought to apply to the whole bill rather than to this amendment any way, I think.

Mr. President, I want to say a word or two about the committee amendment. It is possible that the information I am asking for has been given, because I was absent yesterday on business of the Senate, and I did not hear all the debate, but since I have been here, a part of yesterday and all of to-day, I have not heard any reason given for this committee amendment. It seems to me that it is an extraordinary way to provide for the exclusion of immigrants to draw a line through the great empire of Russia and through China.

Mr. LODGE. That has been corrected.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know how it has been corrected.

Mr. LODGE. It was corrected by the adoption of an amendment this morning excluding the parts of Russia and Siberia that were in the description of latitude and longitude.

Mr. NORRIS. It is still an exclusion by longitudinal lines?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me no matter what country we are going into if you draw a line down through the country and say all who are on this side of that line can come in under certain conditions, and all those on the other side of the line are excluded absolutely, it is such an arbitrary method that while it may be necessary I have not heard anything said here which convinced me that such a method is necessary or is even advisable.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a question, which is, whether all of Russia and Siberia are excluded from the latitude provision in the bill?

Mr. LODGE. By the amendment adopted to-day that difficulty is remedied.

Mr. NELSON. Is it remedied as to all of Russia and Siberia?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; within those lines.

Mr. NELSON. Then, no part of those countries is excluded?

Mr. NORRIS. No part of Russia.

Mr. LODGE. No part of Russia is excluded; that is, the people are not excluded.

Mr. NELSON. Is no part of Siberia excluded?

Mr. LODGE. No; the amendment accepted by the chairman of the committee to-day relieves that objection.

Mr. NELSON. Does it include Kamschatka and all that region?

Mr. LODGE. Those are not within the line.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary read the amendment which is now pending, as it has been modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will state the amendment to the Senator. It comes in on line 24, page 7, where, after the word "to," the language is amended so as to read:

> The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to white persons or to persons of the following status or occupations.

That lets in everybody from that part of Russia.

Mr. WORKS. As I understand, making the exception within the line does not change the line.

Mr. LODGE. No; it simply lets in all people who live within the line.

Mr. NELSON. All white people?

Mr. LODGE. All white people.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts why, in drawing these lines excluding certain people, there was an exception made of a sort of a rectangular part of the country, including a part of Persia?

Mr. LODGE. That was owing to the treaty with Persia.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, why did we not include all of Persia?

Mr. LODGE. We did, I think.

Mr. NORRIS. The map which I have here, giving the lines, only includes a part of Persia.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We excluded all of Persia on account of our treaty with that country.

Mr. NORRIS. As the line appears here, it runs through all of Persia.

Mr. LODGE. The whole of Persia was excluded.

Mr. NORRIS. And it ran through Afghanistan.

Mr. LODGE. Those lines can not be accurate, because the whole of Persia was excluded.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, let me ask the Senator another question. This map here, which was given me by a member of the committee, I suppose is correct.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Let me explain about that. That is a map which I found in a publication, and I do not know whether or not it is correct.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is quite correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Evidently it is not correct. The map was exhibited yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the questions that have arisen about making exceptions to the described territory all indicate to me the illogical method of trying to exclude people by drawing lines on a map. Now, might I ask what was the idea of the committee?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. NORRIS. Why could they not make these exclusions in the same way that we have made other exclusions in the bill rather than by drawing these lines?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the case was this: The committee did not prepare these lines, they were prepared by the State Department. To understand just what has been done, I must ask the Senator from Nebraska to look at the provision of the bill as it came over from the other House, and that is a provision, except for the word "Hindus," that was in the bill as it previously passed.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the bill that was vetoed?

Mr. LODGE. The bill that was vetoed. The only change from that bill which was vetoed was the insertion of the word "Hindus"—"Hindus and persons who can not become eligible under existing law." The purpose of that was to exclude Asiatic immigration, Mongols having been held by the courts to be not eligible to naturalization.

The other House put in the word "Hindus," because they thought there might be some doubt about it. Of course, the great body of the population from which that formidable immigration is coming is in British India. Objection was made to that form of words by the State Department. They told the committee that they were informed that that form of words would be extremely offensive to Japan; that Japan had not the slightest objection to the exclusion intended, but for reasons which seemed good to them they objected to the language. Therefore instead of describing the excluded persons as those not eligible for naturalization or by the word "Hindus," the committee took the same people within geographical lines and excluded them.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, but Japan is not included.

Mr. LODGE. I know that Japan is not included; neither is China included in it, because the Chinese are excluded now by treaty and by law, and the Japanese laborers are excluded under what is known as the gentlemen's agreement or the passport agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question right there. Take the House provision. Is there any contention that that would apply to the Japanese; that that excludes them?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; that is a specific exception, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator mean to say, then, that the State Department claims that Japan objected to the language here that had no application whatever to Japan?

Mr. LODGE. They objected to the language which included them, to the words "not eligible to naturalization under existing law," and they are included in that and excepted from it. They are classified in that way, and then they are excepted from it.

Mr. NORRIS. Either they are included or they are not. If they are not included in the House language, then certainly they would have no objection to the language; but if they are included by the Senate committee amendment, we have excluded them, which we could just as well accomplish by simply striking all of that language out of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. They are not eligible for naturalization because they are not within the law. Now, we say we except them from that application, but it does not change their status at all.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand they object to the manner in which they are excepted.

Mr. LODGE. They object to the manner in which they are excepted; precisely.

Mr. NORRIS. That makes it plain.

Mr. LODGE. If I may go a step further, this provision alters in no respect the existing laws or treaties or agreements with China and Japan. They remain precisely the same if this amendment passes as they would if the law did not pass; if there were no law. The only difference is that under this, I freely admit, clumsy method of excluding what we seek to exclude, we exclude the Asiatic immigration from other places, which has begun to come in in large numbers, which it is desired to exclude. The purpose of the amendment is to exclude the people we started out to exclude, without offending somebody else. If I may repeat an illustration that I used yesterday, their position, as I understand, is substantially this: "We told you that if you left the door open our laborers should not come in; we have kept our word; our laborers have not come in; we have carried out the agreement in good faith. Now, you propose not to keep your word, and you are going to slam the door in our faces in a way which is offensive to our people." That is the whole thing.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachuetts a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator has laid great stress upon the gentlemen's agreement as a means by which we exclude Japanese labor.

Mr. LODGE. That is what it is supposed to do.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to ask the Senator, Are we not protected by the treaty of 1911, which admits Japanese for purposes of trade, wholesale and retail business, and so forth, without any reference to labor? Certainly trade is not labor.

Mr. LODGE. You are not protected by that treaty, in my judgment.

Mr. PHELAN. That is a mere matter of opinion, and it has not yet been determined by the courts.

Mr. LODGE. But it has been the opinion of all the heads of the State Department who have had anything to do with it.

Mr. PHELAN. Then, will the Senator tell me why the treaty of 1911 was modified by limiting the immigration of Japanese to those engaged in trade? By the treaty of 1894 they were given free admission without restriction.

Mr. LODGE. But that has been superseded.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; that is the superseded treaty, which gave them free admission without restriction. Now comes this treaty superseding the old one and limiting the immigration to those who are engaged in trade, wholesale and retail.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it does limit it.

Mr. PHELAN. I have the treaty before me.

Mr. LODGE. I have read it several times, and I have read it within the day.

Mr. PHELAN. There is that limitation, that they are admitted for trade purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but I think that the Senator would find that labor would come in under that if it were not for the agreement.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the Senator mean to say, then, that labor and trade are synonymous?

Mr. LODGE. I should be extremely sorry to see the passport agreement abrogated.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Massachusetts, then, is not positive that the treaty does not protect us?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it does.

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly, the Senator will admit that trade and labor are not exchangeable terms?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think so; but I do not think the limitation is by any means so strong as that, and I think the Senator will find there general provisions about the rights of immigrants.

Mr. PHELAN. I have the treaty here; if it were worth while to read it—but it is merely academic, so far as this discussion is concerned. The favored-nation clause therein refers to commerce and navigation only, not immigration.

Mr. LODGE. It does not seem to me—and it did not seem to me when the treaty was agreed to, that the treaty alone would protect us from the coming of laborers.

Mr. PHELAN. It strikes me as surprising that language so plain should have any other construction.

Mr. LODGE. It was not so construed by our Government or by the Japanese Government.

Mr. PHELAN. At any rate, we are free to legislate on the admission of laborers without violating the treaty. I should like to ask the Senator, apropos of the discussion, what he means by "white persons"? The amendment which has been put into the committee's amendment now reads:

> The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to white persons or to persons of the following status or occupations.

In the region excluded, from which no immigration will be permitted, there are Hindus. The House provision specifically mentions and excludes Hindus, but the Senate amendment necessarily includes them in the excluded region. Now, the Hindus claim, in naturalization proceedings, to be white persons of the Aryan race.

Mr. LODGE. I know they do.

Mr. PHELAN. Therefore it is a mistake to have amended it, because it again weakens the provision and admits the Hindu, if, indeed, they can establish that they are white.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it does; but that is a question for the courts.

Mr. PHELAN. I should think it would be a question for the Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Well, by the use of the expression "white persons" you have no protection whatever under the naturalization law.

Mr. PHELAN. We certainly have. Only those can be naturalized who are free white persons and those of African descent.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but how is the expression "white persons" defined in the naturalization law?

Mr. PHELAN. The Japanese claim that they are white persons; the Hindus claim that they are white persons. It is a very dangerous proposition.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they claim it, but it has not been so held. I think it is a danger involved in the naturalization law, which is the foundation of the whole thing.

Mr. PHELAN. I think a district or local court in the State of Washington held that Hindus or Japanese were white persons.

Mr. LODGE. No; the court distinctly held they were not.

Mr. PHELAN. In the State of Washington?

Mr. LODGE. Nobody has ever claimed that Mongolians were of the white race.

Mr. PHELAN. The Japanese dispute that they are Mongolians.

Mr. LODGE. They may do so, but it has never been held by our courts that they were white.

Mr. PHELAN. I remember a decision coming down from the State of Washington, holding that the Japanese or Hindus were entitled to naturalization. I do not think the case has ever been passed upon by the Supreme Court.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the courts have held that the Mongol race were not within the definition "white." Of course, the expression "white" in the naturalization law is a very unscientific expression, and it is almost impossible to define its exact boundaries. The courts have held in some very learned opinions that Syrians came within the definition of "white." I do not think they have yet held that of the Hindu. The Hindu claims to be an Aryan. He is an Aryan undoubtedly, but it does not follow that he is "white" within the conception of the law.

Mr. PHELAN. Well, inasmuch as the law has not defined what "white" means, I think it is extremely dangerous to adopt the Senate committee amendment as amended, because we do not know what white persons or Aryans may dwell in excluded districts. Neither the Senator nor I nor anyone else knows that. Hence it would be much better to adopt the language of the House bill and say "Hindus and those ineligible for naturalization" are excluded and take our chances with that.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this amendment, of course, will have to be carefully gone over in conference, and I trust that the conferees will be able to meet the difficulty by changing the line; but the simple question is this: Are you going to pass a bill which, we are informed by those in charge of our foreign relations, gives offense to a friendly nation without in the least benefiting you or the present status? In other words, are you going to given wanton offense? That is the whole thing, and this is an effort to avoid doing that.

I am just as much opposed to the character of immigration the Senator is opposing—Chinese, Japanese, and other kinds—as is the Senator. I have sought to restrict it for 25 years; I have always stood for its restriction, and I sympathize with the west coast; but I want to say plainly that I think it will be a great mistake if Congress gives wanton and needless offense to a friendly nation and at the same time gains absolutely nothing in the way of exclusion. It is perfectly useless; it is mere wanton offense without possible beneficial results. In the attitude they assume I think the State Department are wise. As to the form of the provision, I know it is not well drawn. They have furnished it to us, but it has got to be revised, and I hope it will be brought back in such form, by prescribing boundaries or otherwise, as will relieve us from any question about the Siberians and the Russians. I should be very sorry to see the Senate take action which would prevent this matter from receiving further discussion in the conference between the two Houses.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Would it not be more accurate, instead of saying "white persons," to say "persons of the white race"? Would not that be more exact and more comprehensive, and is not the expression "white persons" ambiguous?

Mr. LODGE. I think the expression "white persons" is more explicit, because when that expression is used it becomes a pure question of color, and you lose the ethnic distinction entirely. I am not sure that the employment of the term "white persons" might not get us into some difficulties elsewhere, but "white race" is not a scientific definition at all. The difficulty lies in trying to accomplish what is sought to be accomplished without using names. We are trying to avoid that. That is what the State Department has asked Congress to avoid, and I hope, in the interest of good relations, that it will be avoided, and that the Senate will have enough confidence in the conference committees of the two Houses to allow them to make an effort to put this provision in better shape than it is now and meet the wishes of the Senate in regard to it.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, there is no intention whatever on my part or on the part of any person, so far as I know, in this body to cause any friction or provoke any irritation. The House adopted this bill with the language included on page 7 after mature consideration, and after it was passed I understand certain Japanese busybodies objected because it implied some reflection of inferiority. It looks to me as though those persons alien to our Government wish to make a record for themselves in interfering with the enactment of laws by Congress. Their business is with the State Department, not with the Senate; and yet the information comes before the Senate that, at the instance of diplomatic gentlemen, we are asked to eliminate words which clearly express our will and substitute something which is confessedly ambiguous.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment, I desire to say that no foreign representative ever approached the committee or any member of it. The whole representation was made by the present Secretary of State.

Mr. PHELAN. It is immaterial how the information came; it came through the diplomatic representatives, and I think that this Government ought to be conducted from Washington and not from Tokyo.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me one moment, this Government is constantly making representations about laws passed in other countries which they think will bear unfairly on our trade. That is being done every day by this Government and by every other Government.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the Government interfere during the process of legislation or after the law is passed?

Mr. LODGE. They make representations at any time. I have in mind two or three instances in connection with the tariff laws of South American States where requests were presented that representations should be made against duties proposed. It is the commonest thing in the world. We have all had experience along that line.

Mr. PHELAN. It is not material, Mr. President, who makes the objection; the important thing is the character of the objection. There certainly can be no offense given or intended in describing the people of Asia, whom, for reasons I will not go into again, we wish to bar from this country, "Hindus and persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization." No language could be less offensive.

When Secretary of State W. J. Bryan came to California to plead with the California Legislature we received him as an emissary from Washington, although he was interfering in a matter which did not concern him at all and trespassing upon our State's jurisdiction. Yet he did not urge that we desist from passing laws barring aliens from owning our soil, but he simply asked us to so modify the language as not to use the word "Japanese," which was in the original draft of the law. The California Legislature acceded to his reasonable request, and instead of using the word "Japanese" they used this very language: "Persons ineligible to citizenship" may not own the soil of California. Here we have used this very diplomatic language, which Mr. Bryan came all the way from Washington to California to ingraft in the California statute; and yet we are told that it is not satisfactory to certain supersensitive people. I contend that if that language expresses our will, while, to say the least, the language of the committee is dubious, we should adhere to the language of the House.

I am very glad to hear the Senator from Massachusetts say—although it is a matter about which I was already informed—that he is in sympathy with the movement in the Western States to preserve in its purity our American homogeneous population. He does not hesitate, I am sure, when there is a crisis to use language and advocate measures which might well cause irritation; but in this instance the greater duty of protecting our country has appealed most to him. This might be called an act of self-preservation; and he understands, as well as I understand, that unless in some way we restrain these people there is very great danger of the population on the western coast—and that is only the beginning—being superseded by populations from the Asiatic nations. That is the whole question. They have the ability to come in and take the place of our native population, and they have already done so in a conspicuous case in Vaca Valley, Cal., our most productive valley, where they have excluded by their presence our white population and driven them off the land.

The Senator from Massachusetts introduced a resolution in this body which bears his name—the Lodge resolution—which declared in terms that the United States would regard as an unfriendly act the acquisition of land by Japanese whether in person or in the name of corporations, foreign or otherwise, on the Mexican coast, which is foreign territory; and that resolution was adopted by this body. That might well have excited the hostility of Japan; but unless we respect ourselves, we can not be respected by them. We are self-respecting, and without equivocation we say we do not desire this immigration, just as the Lodge amendment said we will not tolerate the purchase of land by Japanese upon the Mexican coast. Should our Yankee population a hundred years from now, having filled their own territory, seek entrance into Japan for the purpose of finding employment there, the Japanese might well object to the Yankee invasion. With their cleverness and their inventive genius let us assume they would soon destroy the native Japanese population, and the Japanese would be justified by every right, legal and moral, in excluding, and rigorously excluding in terms, the intruding Yankee. I say to the Japanese, many of whom are my friends, "Put yourselves in our place; and if you do so, you will see that our attitude is one not involving either insult or hostility, but simply and only the preservation of our own people."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the committee made as in Committee of the Whole as amended. The Chair is informed that the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as heretofore stated to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] from which I am released on all questions arising during the consideration of the pending bill. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is absent from the Chamber, and for that reason I withhold my vote. If privileged to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK. While I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], and, while he is absent, I am assured that our votes would coincide, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. He being absent, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I feel constrained to withhold my vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have a general pair with that Senator. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GRONNA. I inquire if the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with that Senator, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRADY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—42.

So the amendment of the committee, as modified, was concurred in.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] said that the Magdalena Bay resolution which bore my name mentioned the Japanese by name. I knew it did not, but I thought it was just as well to read it into the RECORD:

Resolved, That when any harbor or other place in the American Continent is so situated that the occupation thereof for naval or military purposes might threaten the communications or the safety of the United States the Government of the United States could not see without grave concern the possession of such harbor or other place by any corporation or association which has such a relation to another Government not American as to give that Government practical power of control for national purposes.

No name is mentioned.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, whereas no name has been mentioned, of course the Senator will not deny that he intended to refer to the Japanese.

Mr. LODGE. I have not referred to any Government. Of course, the Japanese Government was the one that had been mentioned in that connection. Other Governments had also been mentioned.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I ask at this time unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, in order to make the discussion clear, Article I of the Japanese treaty of 1911, which defines those who may freely enter the United States for trade. The Senator from Massachusetts challenged the language in some manner, and perhaps it will simplify things to print it so that it will speak for itself without further debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered:

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel, and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established. They shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatever, to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are or may be paid by native citizens or subjects.

The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall receive, in the territories of the other, the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or may be granted to native citizens or subjects on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the native citizens or subjects.

They shall, however, be exempt in the territories of the other from compulsory military service, either on land or sea, in the regular forces, or in the National Guard, or in the militia; from all contributions imposed in lieu of personal service, and from all forced loans or military exactions or contributions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I now desire to offer the amendment which I submitted a short time ago and which the committee stated they would accept, to be added at the end of the committee amendment on page 7, line 23.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, at the end of the amendment just concurred in, it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

And all persons who come to the United States for the purpose of securing temporary employment as laborers, and who intend to return to the countries from which they came.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, of course I have no objection to the amendment. As I say, I am in favor of it; but I wish the Senator would find a more appropriate place, because this will possibly cause the language that immediately follows to be misconstrued, in that it says: "The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to white persons, nor to," and so forth.

Mr. REED. Let it go in here, and it can be arranged in conference.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can put it in just before the amendment just adopted.

Mr. REED. Very well; let it be put in just before the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; just before that amendment, after the word "eligible," in line 4.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 4, after the word "eligible," it is proposed to begin with the words "all persons."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the amendment, but I venture to suggest to the Senator that I think it would be a very difficult matter to determine what persons come from foreign countries to get temporary employment.

Mr. REED. It may be of some difficulty. I have another amendment I intend to offer that will help clear it up.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that it will not only be difficult but impossible to determine, unless some further language is used.

Mr. REED. I think not. It will not be half so difficult as to establish the health of a person.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if this amendment would not exclude political refugees—Belgians and Poles who, under extraordinary circumstances that might justify their leaving their own country temporarily, come here for employment, with the probable intention of returning when conditions change? If so, is there not a strain of inconsistency, at least, in the American people undertaking to fortify the Belgians against want and distress at home and refusing them asylum under our flag when banishment forces them away and they are not permitted to labor in their own fields?

Scores of Canadians come across the American border and work here during the day, returning at night, extending the same privilege to our people, and while this amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri has much merit, its exact purport should be fully understood by the Senate.

I just gathered the scope of the Senator's amendment from hearing it read. Perhaps I am mistaken about it, but I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if that type of people would be affected by this amendment?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course I had no such proposition as that in mind when I wrote the amendment. As I explained to the committee when I offered the amendment before, and afterwards withdrew it at the request of the committee in order to offer it at this time, the purpose was simply to reach those people who come across the ocean to take employment for a few months and to go back home with the money in their pockets. They come in large numbers. They watch the wage rate in our country, and when it goes up they come in, take the places of our laborers, work a few months, and go home. They do not intend to remain here. They contribute nothing to our citizenship and nothing to our national wealth except that which they create, and they carry back their wages with them. I called attention to the figures which, roughly stated, show that about 300,000 each year return to Europe. As I said before, it would not be fair to say that all of them were of the class named, because some of them undoubtedly returned for other causes.

The amendment is intended simply to reach that class of people, not the political refugees who will come here, for the most part, to remain. There are no Belgians coming to our country now to my knowledge. There may be a few, but I think the number is very limited. Nearly every able-bodied Belgian is on the battle front. I have no desire to exclude people who might come here under peculiar conditions of hardship incident to this war; but I do desire to break up the practice that has grown up of European laborers coming in and taking the place of American labor, pocketing their money, and going back home. That is the object of my amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a great deal of sympathy with the object that the Senator has in view. I want to suggest to him, however, that if the object is to break up this inundation and its retreat, the language which the Senator has used in drafting his amendment seems to me to be almost useless to accomplish the purpose, because the Senator makes two qualifications, both of which are absolutely in the mind of the person who wants to come into this country. He is only excluded, first, if it is his purpose to obtain only temporary employment; second, if it is his present intention to return to his own country; and I hardly see how an immigration official could come to any decision about the man's intention except by absolutely taking the man's word for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or by being a mind reader.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When one of these laborers, or a person who may or may not be a laborer, appears and asks to land and has a passport, I do not see how the official could do anything except to say to him, "Do you intend to go back to the home that you came from?" and if the man said, "No," he would have to say, "All right," and admit him. I do not see how it would operate to check this kind of immigration, except in the case of those who are willing to say that it was their intention to go back, and that they did not intend to stay here permanently, even if they found employment that suited them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that goes to the question of ability to give full force and effect to the proposition rather than to the principle. If the principle is correct, we should adopt it. Then, even if it is many times avoided, we should nevertheless adopt it and enforce it as best we may be able.

I do not think, however, that a reasonable enforcement of it is impossible. Our immigration authorities have the means of collecting a great deal of information, and they do collect a great deal of information regarding these immigrants. Suppose that an immigration official were to find out—as it might easily be discovered in some instances, at least—that a man had given it out that he was coming over here merely to earn some money for his family?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire briefly to call attention to the evil effects of this amendment upon the farmers of the Northwest. We find great difficulty in those Northwestern States—Minnesota, North Dakota, and Montana—in securing laborers to aid in harvesting and thrashing the crops. We have been for years in the habit of getting men coming over the line from Canada to help our people temporarily while they are harvesting their grain and while they are stacking it and while they are thrashing it. If such an amendment as this is adopted it will utterly prevent our people from obtaining that kind of labor. It is very difficult, and has been in recent years, for farmers in that northern country to get the help that they need. The help from the large cities does not care to go into farm work, and it is difficult to get them from other parts of the country. The Canadians have many farm hands among them, and they have been of great help to our farmers in that country.

I can not see what harm it is under those circumstances to allow those Canadian laborers to come over the border and help our farmers in the Northwest for a month or two in harvesting and thrashing. Therefore, I think it would be very objectionable to adopt the amendment in this form. If it were limited to immigrants from Europe, I should have no objection; but if it applies to people coming over temporarily from Canada to work in this country, I should utterly object to it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I want to say that I am heartily in favor of the object of this amendment, but as it is drawn I do not think it could be properly enforced. I was going to suggest to the Senator that by taking a little time and consulting possibly with the officers of the Bureau of Immigration an amendment might be drafted which would apply to what we term the new immigrant class, which constitutes the class to which the Senator has referred, and at the same time except from the operation of it those coming from contiguous territory like that of Canada.

The importance of this is shown by the figures which are obtainable at the department. I find, by referring to the tables of immigration during the 11-year period between 1899 and 1909 of the classes known as the new immigration—people from Russia, Austria-Hungary, the Balkan States, and Italy, especialy southern Italy—that of the nearly 6,000,000 who came during that time, 73 per cent were males, and that something over 30 per cent of the males who came from those sections left their wives behind them, indicating that they came here for a temporary purpose, and that they intended to return whenever they had earned and laid up a sufficient amount to make them rich in the countries from which they came.

I find during the five years between 1910 and 1914, inclusive, that of the south Italians there were 36 per cent who reported leaving their wives behind them; of the Russians, 45.7 per cent; of the Croatians and Slovenians, 46½ per cent; of the Ruthenians, 44½ per cent; of the Hungarians, 43⅝ per cent; of the Slovaks, 34 per cent; of the Bulgarians, Montenegrins, and Servians, 76 per cent of the married men left their wives in the country from which they came; of the Roumanians there were 73 per cent who came without their wives; of the Armenians, over 50 per cent; of the Turkish, over 80 per cent. And so it runs.

All of the races constituting what we call the new immigration come here substantially for temporary purposes, leaving their families behind them. When they have worked here 5 or 10 years and have accumulated a little competence, they go back to the old countries. It is this class of people who in the year 1909 overcrowded all the seats of the great basic industries of the country, and not only crowded out American labor but competed against themselves to such a degree that in the iron and steel industries they only had work one-half the time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator right here whether this amendment will not have exactly the opposite effect of what is sought in this bill? You wish to exclude those people from citizenship. One of the purposes of this bill, in the illiteracy clause, is not that you will exclude the worst ones but that you will exclude a greater number.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Of that particular class that come here in that way, and not otherwise.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right. Now, suppose you exclude those in that way; what will result? The result will be that they will come over and stay, and bring their families with them, and make our citizenship, as long as they can secure better wages. In other words, their home will become the American home and their citizenship will be the American citizenship—the very thing that you are attempting in this bill to avoid.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The great argument of the Committee on Immigration has been so to regulate the law that those coming here should be those that want to stay here and establish homes and become American citizens, because when they do that they are an unobjectionable class, as a rule. The rank and file of this new immigration is made up of men who are strong physically, in the prime of life. They come from nations where labor has been oppressed and where they have been oppressed. They would be glad of better conditions, undoubtedly. If they would bring their wives and bring their children and settle down among us and become American citizens, we could take care of them. The trouble is that the particular class we want to deal with have not come here with that intention. They have come here for a temporary purpose, and they have left their families behind them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Just a moment. We found in 1909 that they had come in such numbers, as I said before, that they were competing against themselves as well as against American labor. They were living in all of the great cities of the United States, where the manufacturing establishments were located, and under such conditions that their situation became deplorable. They had not brought their wives. They had not brought their children. They failed, through having children in our public schools, to come in contact with American citizenship. They failed entirely to get in touch with American thought. They were so many labor units. Why, right in the iron and steel industry at that time we came in contact with 86,000 of this class, and their average earnings were only $320 a year, not because the corporations did not pay proper wages—for had they had employment the whole time they would have gotten $720 a year, upon an average—but they were employed only half the time, because they overcrowded the labor market. They came here for that temporary purpose, and when they had accomplished what they hoped for, many of them intended to go back.

I am heartily in favor of an amendment for the purpose for which this amendment is offered, but I do not think the amendment itself is what we need. I had hoped that the Senator would take a little time and perhaps be able to whip the thing into shape where it would be effective and accomplish that which he desires.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—I do not mean to take the Senator off the floor, but addressing myself to him—it is entirely possible that some expert of the department might find a phraseology more happy than this; but if this phraseology goes into the bill it will be very easy for the conferees to have that consultation when they come to the exact phraseology of the bill, and obviate any difficulties.

While I have the floor I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] if it would be satisfactory to him if there was incorporated in the amendment language to make it read:

All persons who come to the United States but not, however, including the Dominion of Canada, for the purpose of securing temporary employment.

The words to be inserted being "not, however, including the Dominion of Canada."

Mr. NELSON. I suppose that amendment would be satisfactory to me. I agree with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] in one matter, and that is, I think aside from that your amendment ought to be made more exact and effective. I sympathize with the theory of the amendment if it is limited to immigrants from the Old World and Canadians are excepted.

I want to say, however, if the Senator will allow me, that the statement made by the Senator from Vermont in reference to the results of the investigation is somewhat deceptive and misleading. I know from my own acquaintance and from my own experience that there are many poor people in the old countries of Europe, good industrious people, who have large families, and yet they are so poor that they are unable to emigrate at the same time. As a result with those people in that condition the man comes here first. He stays here a year or two and earns enough money to send for his wife and children. Those people I know from experience are the most industrious and most thrifty immigrants that we get in this country. So the mere fact that a man comes over here without bringing his wife and children with him at the time of his emigration is no safe criterion to go by.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I entirely agree with what my friend from Minnesota has said. I did not mean to be understood as saying that they were of the class we were discussing, because I know in the old immigration, of which I wish we might have more, coming from northern and western Europe, that immigration who came in such large numbers prior to 1882, that immigration who helped us to build up our West and construct our great railway systems in this country and have become a fine element in American civilization, very many of them came in just the way the Senator from Minnesota has suggested. They came intending, however, to make the United States their permanent home and they intended as soon as they had earned the money which would accomplish that purpose to bring their families here, and they did it. There was no objection to that class. On the other hand, we welcomed them, and welcomed them gladly.

This amendment when it is put into shape should, of course, recognize all these conditions and have in it the elements of some test through which the immigration officers would be able to carry out its purpose.

Mr. NELSON. With the leave of the Senator from Missouri, I will add one word more. For the very reason I have stated, that many of those came over in the first instance without having the means to bring their wives and children with them, coming here to earn money enough to send for them and bring them here and make it their permanent home, we ought to be very careful in framing the amendment the Senator from Missouri suggests. I entirely concur in the spirit of his amendment. I am simply anxious to have it in such form that it will not do more harm than good.

I have for years been in favor of a law such as is proposed here. The literacy test contained in this bill or in any of the previous bills, and I voted for two of them already that have passed this body, does not affect any of the immigrants from northern Europe. They can all read and write. They bear that test. There are scarcely any anarchists or class of people who would be hostile to the institutions of this country among them. Most of them are people who come here because they are poor and because the advantages are greater here than in the land in which they were born. Many of them come from countries in which the principles of free government prevail to as great an extent as they do in this country. So it is no difficulty for them when they come here to assimilate themselves with our institutions.

Where they come from countries where the language is other than the English language, most of them, I have noticed, readily acquired the language of this country; and under the operation of our naturalization law recently, which requires that they must be able to speak the English language before they can become naturalized, it is wonderful to see how readily they adapt themselves to that situation.

So I trust that the Senator from Missouri will not only except the Canadians from the provisions of his amendment, but will also frame it in such a way that, while it will carry out the spirit and purpose he has in view, it will not make a hardship in other directions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say this: The man who comes here to spend three months or four months in the United States to obtain a certain number of dollars he can obtain by his work when he needs a dollar, and when somebody in the United States needs his work and is willing to give it to him, and goes back to the country from whence he came, it strikes me does something pretty equal for him and us. I would a great deal rather he would go back, unless after he has stayed he was going to become a bona fide American citizen with American ideals and with American principles of devotion to liberty and equality and fraternity and all that.

I regard with very much less distrust the immigrant who comes to the United States to work for a few months and then goes back to wherever he came from than I do the immigrant who comes here and stays afterwards and uses his American vote as a fulcrum to serve the purpose of some European love or hatred. I do not much care whether it be his love or hatred. I can more easily excuse a man who comes here and uses his American vote as a naturalized citizen as a fulcrum to extend the desire or purpose or will of some European power out of love than I can excuse the man who does the same thing because he hates some European power more than he loves the United States.

I do not see how the man who comes to America to work for 30 days or 90 days, and gives us the benefit of his labor while he takes with him the benefit of our dollars has hurt us particularly. I do see how the man who beyond that stays in order to be nominally an American citizen and not really one while he represents some foreign people in affection or in hatred, it makes no difference much which, is absolutely undesirable.

I have not got much against the fellow who comes here a few months to work and then leaves. I have a great deal against the fellow who comes over here and tries to make himself a factor in American life to work out some foreign purpose. It does not make any difference to me what the foreign purpose, whether it is a purpose of hatred or whether it is a purpose of love; a good deal of it is a purpose of hatred. Now and then there comes a Russian Jew who wants me to be particeps—not exactly criminis, but particeps, at any rate—to his Old World hatred. Now and then there comes an Irishman who wants me to do the same thing. Now and then there comes a Slav or a Croatian from Austria who wants me to do the same thing. Now and then there comes a Pole who is in antagonism to the policy of the Austrian, Prussian, or Russian Government, and wants me to do the same thing.

I do not see, as far as I am concerned, why we are particularly interested in hitting the fellow who comes here to earn a few dollars for a few months and goes back home. I do see a great many reasons why I am prepared to hit the fellow who comes over here and makes out of his American citizenship something to hit somebody in Europe or something out of which to reward somebody in Europe.

There are just two classes of people who come here. One comes to work and go back, without any connection with us at all. Provided he is satisfied with the bargain and provided we are, I do not see much difference.

The other fellow comes with an ulterior purpose of hurting me and you, either out of his love for somebody in Europe or out of his hatred for somebody in Europe, and I do not want him at all. I would a great deal rather he would go back and stay where he came from.

So, as it strikes me, I am not prepared to vote against the fellow who comes over to work a while and go back home, and especially I am not prepared to vote against the Canadian and Nova Scotian who crosses the American line now and then and by his labor helps out harvest time or otherwise builds us up. If I voted against him I would be voting also against the American who now and then crosses the Canadian line to do some work that is needed in Canada, where he can gain a few dollars that are needed by him.

I listened with much attention to what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] said. I always listen with much attention to whatever he says, because he is a real, genuine, true-blue American, one of the men who was born abroad and loves America better than he does anything that is abroad; a man who fought for the American flag against my own people, but who fought for it honestly and bravely and truly. Whenever I hear him speak upon any subject I listen to him with a great deal of love and reverence, because I do love and reverence him. I believe that at the bottom of his heart he agrees with me that the fellow who comes over here and works for a while and then goes back does a great deal less harm to America than the fellow who comes here and brings his wife and his family and starts a dissension in America against Americanism. There are a great many of the latter sort, none of them, by the way, Norwegians, none of them Danes, very few of them Swedes, and very few of them, therefore, Scandinavians at all.

I do not see why we are going to fight against a fellow who comes over here to earn a few dollars and then goes back home after he earns his dollar and after we have got his work; his work is worth to us more than his dollar, for if his work was not worth more than his dollar we would not pay the dollar for his work, or else we are asses, economically and internationally speaking.

I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 13, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 12, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, profoundly impressed with our limitations, our weaknesses, and our infirmities, out of the deeps we cry unto Thee, that Thou wilt continue to uphold, sustain, and guide us in all our personal undertakings in consonance with Thy plans and purposes, that our work may be well pleasing in Thy sight and redound to the good of mankind. Let Thy counsels prevail in our legislative acts and in all the departments of state, that we may continue our way in good government, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10049. An act for the relief of Capt. Harvey H. Young.

The message also announced that Mr. MYERS was excused on his own request from further service as a conferee on the bill H. R. 407, entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," and Mr. SMITH of Arizona was appointed in his place.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed, in compliance with Senate resolution 27, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. WARREN as members of the joint committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 5th day of March next.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew a request which I made a few days ago and temporarily withdrew, to have printed as a House document a series of addresses delivered by and to Hon. J. M. Dickinson, former Secretary of War of the United States, while on an inspection trip to the Philippine Islands in 1910. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] requested also that the report which he made upon his return be printed. I have not been able to see the gentleman from Minnesota, and I have not a copy of that report, and have, therefore, no cost estimate on that part of it, if that should be included. It has been printed, I believe, and I would prefer to put my request separately, and if others desire to reprint the other document that can be done as a separate document.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request until the gentleman from Minnesota comes in.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to do that. I therefore withdraw the request for the present.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, for the support of the agency and pay of employees maintained for their benefit.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it was represented to the Committee on Indian Affairs that the sum of $30,000 contained in this paragraph would be necessary for the support of this agency, and that the Indians were perfectly willing that this increase from $25,000 carried last year to $30,000 as herein reported should be made. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] told me yesterday that the Indians were raising a great deal of trouble about this increase of $5,000. He expected to be present this morning, but I understand that he is detained in conference upon one of the public-land bills and can not be here. If it is agreeable to the other members of the committee, I ask that this be reduced to the amount which was carried last year, namely, $25,000, and I will offer such an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amend, on page 33, line 18, by striking out "$30,000" and inserting "$25,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the estimates of the department were for $25,000. If it is the desire of the Indians that this amount of $30,000 be decreased, I shall raise no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of new dormitories at the Murray State School of Agriculture, at Tishomingo, Okla., to be under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000 is hereby appropriated out of any Chickasaw tribal funds not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That a suitable and sufficient site shall be donated to said tribe by the citizens of Tishomingo.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] on this subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr Chairman, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee before he yields what the policy of the Government has been heretofore toward erecting dormitories in connection with private or public schools?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have in the last few years, as I stated yesterday, adopted the policy of conforming to the views of the States where we have coeducation between the Indian and the white schools, and this seems to be a coeducational item put in this bill for the benefit of the students of agriculture. This school seems to be a State school, and the Indians are attending it, largely attending it, and are greatly benefited by it.

Mr. STAFFORD. At what other State institution has the Government provided dormitories such as suggested in this provision?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know of any specifically, but I do know that the common schools of the country in various States, especially in Oklahoma, are being run with white and Indian children together, and I do not think any of the Indian schools are now admitting any race except the Indians. There was a very noted example at Hampton for many years, where the negroes and Indians were educated together. That was a coeducational institution until I became chairman of this committee, and I raised an objection to it, and since that time it has been changed.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was a Government-supported institution?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; it was an institution under the direction, as I understand it, of the State of Virginia. It was first started for the purpose of educating the negroes of that State in higher education. There were some Indians brought here by Gen. Armstrong that were of school age, and the Government appropriated $167 a head, I believe the amount was, for each student that the State of Virginia would educate in this Hampton school, and it had so run for many years. When we established Carlisle, that school was no longer wanted. A great many of the Indians objected to being sent with colored people to this educational institution. The change was made then, and those Indian children in attendance at Hampton were put in the school at Carlisle. That was the only coeducational school we had, so far as I know.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were there any hearings had upon the proposed dormitory at this institution or was there any recommendation from the department concerning its establishment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Upon that I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that at the last session of the Sixty-third Congress this matter was up, and we had a purely Indian exhibit out here in the hallway at that time and got a report from the Interior Department, but the point of order was made against it, because it was subject to the point of order. This is the only State institution in Oklahoma that is largely attended by Indian pupils. They attend under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules in reference to their board. More than 85 per cent of that school have always been Indians; in fact, it is the capitol of the old Chickasaw country, and they and some few Choctaw Indians attend. In fact, a great many more would attend if they had the facilities, because the board would more than compensate and that is wherein they are satisfied to have this appropriation out of their funds. They get $12, and when they go to a private residence they pay $2.50 a week more, whereas with these dormitories they could get through with the same amount of money without taking the extra amount out of their pockets. The very poor ones of the tribe are the ones struck by the lack of facilities. I will undertake to say I will stand any objection coming from the Chickasaw Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. This institution, as I understand the gentleman, is largely patronized by the Indians?

Mr. MURRAY. More than 85 per cent are Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Or of Indian extraction?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a State institution and is in the Indian Territory?

Mr. MURRAY. It is an agricultural and industrial college. It is the capitol of the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's purpose—to have this dormitory constructed at a maximum cost of $50,000?

Mr. MURRAY. No; it says dormitories, one for boys and one for girls.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is to be the maximum cost proposed by the gentleman?

Mr. MURRAY. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection——

Mr. MURRAY. I have an amendment which would——

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). To place a limitation as to cost upon this expenditure?

Mr. MURRAY. I would be glad to do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purport of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. MURRAY. I will send it to the Clerk's desk. This is the way it was reported in the bill of two years ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, strike out said line 7 down to and including line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians, and to use the same for constructing and equipping dormitories at the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla., to cost not exceeding said sum, for the accommodation of Chickasaw children and, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, of any other pupils attending said school: Provided, That this appropriation shall become available after the said city of Tishomingo shall have donated and conveyed to said tribe suitable and necessary sites upon which same are to be constructed."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order for the purpose of having an explanation of the change of this language.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is merely being read for information. It was not offered, because it could not be with the point of order pending. In the amendment which has been read there is no limit of cost proposed.

Mr. MURRAY. It says "not exceeding."

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no limit of cost of the proposed structure under the provision in the bill, and under the amendment proposed it would be an authorization for a building of maybe $500,000. I am not willing to have that authorization given without a limit of cost.

Mr. MURRAY. I am willing to limit it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he does not believe it advisable to have a limit of cost on the building to be constructed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the amendment is of the same purport as the bill we introduced here——

Mr. MURRAY. It is the same language.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And agreed to, I shall not make the point of order against it; but there certainly should be a limitation such as I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma is willing to have.

Mr. MURRAY. I am willing to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman did not catch my query. I am now seeking to obtain the gentleman's position as to whether he does not believe it advisable to have a limit of cost inserted in this provision. There is none such in the provision reported nor in the proposed amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understood the gentleman from Oklahoma agreed to change that so as to conform to the bill; and if so, I am willing to do so.

Mr. NORTON. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will yield, there is provided an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of dormitories. The fact that there is only $50,000 appropriated will without any question govern in the usual way these buildings constructed for Indian use.

Mr. STAFFORD. It may be usual for the Committee on Indian Affairs to authorize the construction of buildings in that way, but it is the customary practice in the authorization of buildings of any kind to always place in the authorization, "at a cost not to exceed," so they could not come to subsequent Congresses and ask for increased appropriations predicated upon there being no limit of appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would that language, "not to exceed $50,000," be satisfactory?

Mr. STAFFORD. At a cost not to exceed, which amount is hereby appropriated.

Mr. MURRAY. I will be willing to accept that, to use the sum for constructing dormitories at the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla., to cost not to exceed a certain amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. At a cost not to exceed, which amount is hereby appropriated.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. This provides for withdrawing $50,000 of the Chickasaw Indian funds now in the Treasury? I assume that the Indians have the money on hand.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; about $1,000,000.

Mr. BORLAND. This is not an advance from the Treasury?

Mr. MURRAY. No, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. That is not the case in this?

Mr. MURRAY. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] withdraw the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. With the understanding that the gentleman is to propose an amendment as suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 36, strike out said line 7 down to and including line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians and to use the same for constructing and equipping dormitories at the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla., to cost not to exceed said sum, for the accommodation of Chickasaw children and, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, of any other pupils attending said school: Provided, That this appropriation shall become available after the said city of Tishomingo shall have donated and conveyed to said tribe suitable and necessary sites upon which same are to be constructed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $200 per capita, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $8,000 out of the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribal funds for the expenses and the compensation of all necessary employees for the distribution of the said per capita payments. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Seminole Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribe, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribe in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $200 per capita: Provided, That said payment shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That in cases where such enrolled members or their heirs are Indians who belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act. There is hereby appropriated a sum not to exceed $2,000 out of the funds of said Seminole Tribe for the payment of salaries and other expenses of said per capita payment or payments.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed I would like to have an agreement as to the time to be occupied. I would like it agreed that we have 30 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I do not believe it is going to take long. I merely want to make a few observations here. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman. I think five minutes will be sufficient for me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this is a provision around which there has been much discussion in prior Congresses. It is one in which my State, as well as the State of Oklahoma, is vitally interested, but I know, Mr. Chairman, when I am whipped, and I know the sense of this Congress has been ascertained, and that a majority of the Members in a former session of this Congress have voted against striking out this provision, although they reversed by that action what they had done in a prior Congress. I do not think this provision ought to be in the bill, because on the 1st of July, when the last bill went into effect, there was a $300 per capita payment made to the Oklahoma Indians. At that time the argument that was made by the Members of the delegation from Oklahoma was to the effect that there was then plenty of money in the tribal funds, and there would be much money remaining in the event a per capita payment was then made. Notwithstanding the argument then made, the hearing now shows that if this $200 per capita payment is made, it will take all the money out of the tribal funds, and there will be nothing left. Of course, I am not unmindful of the fact that there is constantly coming into the funds some money, but in answer to a question propounded by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, stated that this would practically drain the fund; in other words, living up to that appeal made in the letter written by my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] about three years ago, when he requested his constituents to write to the members of the Indian Affairs Committee to vote for a per capita payment, for "this is the way we can finally wipe out the funds of the tribe, and there will be nothing left for the delegation from Mississippi to fight about."

The delegation is living up to that. Notwithstanding the sentiment in this House to extend aid to the Indians in my State, notwithstanding the fact that this Indian Affairs Committee placed in its appropriation bill last time a provision appropriating $1,000 to investigate the condition of the Indians in Mississippi, and on that investigation a report was made, that report was not printed yesterday, but it is to-day. I have just procured a copy of it. And in that report filed by the Indian Office they set out the present condition of these Indians. They recommend a school be established in Mississippi. They say that there are between 600 and 1,000 Indians in a destitute condition. The report goes fully into that fact. It bears out the statements we have made on the floor of the House time and time again. Mr. Meritt, speaking before the committee, suggested $130,000 be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States to place this school in that community where these Indian children could attend. And notwithstanding these facts my colleague from Mississippi, Mr. VENABLE, in whose district most of these Indians live, offered an amendment on yesterday to this bill carrying out the suggestion of the Indian Office, and the point of order was made by the chairman of this committee. Now, that is bringing about what I thought would come and which I told the House some three years ago in a discussion of this question I thought would come, namely, that if you make these per capita payments eventually all the money in the tribal funds will be exhausted and they would then come to the Government for relief.

I do not now believe, and have never believed, that the money should come out of the Treasury of the United States. I have thought that it ought to come out of the funds of the tribe. They were entitled to it. But you are expending all the funds of the tribe, and there will be nothing left for them to do except come to the Government. I do not know how the Committee on Indian Affairs feels about that amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. VENABLE, yesterday, but, throughout this bill, under the heading of practically every State, you will find provisions made appropriating money for the support and civilization and education of the Indians in the various States of the Union. Every one of those provisions is subject to a point of order. It has been held by the chairman in a previous Congress that they are subject to a point of order. We do not care to make the point of order. We did not take the position that merely because you do not give something to the Indians of Mississippi we are going to prevent the Indians of North Dakota, or the Indians of Kansas, or the Indians of some other State, from obtaining relief and aid.

Now, of course, if from the goodness of the heart of my friend, the chairman of the committee, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas—who retires at this session of Congress, and I want to say to the regret of every Member of this Congress, and who goes from us with the best wishes, I am sure, of all his colleagues both on that side of the aisle as well as this side—if he wants, out of the goodness of his heart, to offer an amendment to the same effect as the amendment that my friend offered yesterday, I am sure all the members on the Committee on Indian Affairs will refrain from objecting to it, and it may give something to these Indians of Mississippi. I think it ought to come out of the funds of the tribe, but if it can not be taken from the funds of the tribe, then my friend here wants it to come out of another quarter. I am not going to contest this provision, however. I wanted just to make these remarks so that the committee would know how I feel about it. I withdraw my pro forma amendment. I await the generous action of my friend, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his kind remarks in reference to myself. I will yield to my colleague on the committee, Mr. CARTER, to reply to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not care, Mr. Chairman, to speak of the matter to-day. I only ask that we take a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $35,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 67), and of the improvements thereon, which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of such amount may be used in connection with the collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, no moneys shall be expended from tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal, and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries, and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year at salaries at the rate heretofore paid, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year; Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue during the ensuing fiscal year the tribal and other schools among the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes from the tribal funds of those nations, within his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to expend funds of the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole Nations available for school purposes under existing law for such repairs, improvements, or new buildings as he may deem essential for the proper conduct of the several schools of said tribes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, in line 12, strike out the word "said" and insert the following: "Choctaw and Chickasaw" and a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I did not hear the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman permit the amendment to be reported again, please?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, the reason why I offered that amendment is this——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk reported it "Choctaw and Chickasaw, with a comma."

Mr. DAVENPORT. There is no comma there. It is "Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes."

Now, I want to explain that amendment, so that the House will understand it. For many years there has been carried in the appropriation bill and each of the Five Civilized Tribes has had a national attorney, and as the business of the tribes was wound up those national attorneys were dispensed with. That is to say, when the lands were allotted and all the business was disposed of, those national attorneys were dispensed with. The Cherokees have not had a national attorney for several years.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. What is this on page 38—$85,000 for attorneys?

Mr. DAVENPORT. You will have to pardon me. I would have to turn back to page 38.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, that is the probate attorney.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, as the business of the tribes was wound up the national attorneys were dispensed with. Their lands were allotted, and the United States district attorneys looked after the suits that were brought in the courts down there. The Cherokees have none. The Seminoles have none. Their business has reached that stage where the attorneys of the United States district attorney's office look after that business. The Creeks at present have a national attorney, but there is no necessity for continuing him further, because the only business that the Creeks have is business in reference to the equalization of their allotments, and they do not have sufficient money in the Treasury to comply with the treaty along that line, and the only other business they have is business in the courts.

In the year 1915 the national attorney for the Creek Nation expended $12,255.22. I desire to insert that statement in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. For the first six months of the fiscal year 1916 he expended $5,903 of the Creek funds in connection with business that required, a large portion of it at least, the assistance of the United States district attorney, and, in fact, I am advised by the United States district attorney that his office brings the suits necessary to be brought.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. As a matter of fact, does not the United States district attorney transact all the business over there?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I am coming to that. Outside of what little business he might do in consulting with the district attorney when suits are brought, the district attorney has to look after the suits. I insert the figures to which I referred a moment ago:

Statement of expenditures from Creek tribal funds for the fiscal year 1915.

Attorney R. C. Allen:
Salary	$5,000.00
Office rent	745.00
Expenses of attorney (paid from "Interest on Creek general fund")	3,786.14
Salaries of clerks and other employees	2,266.64
Traveling expenses, clerks and other employees	457.44
Total	12,255.22

Statement of expenditures from Creek tribal fund, fiscal year 1916.

[July 1, 1915, to Apr. 7, 1916.]

Attorney R. C. Allen:
Salary	$2,500.00
Office rent	120.00
Expenses of attorney (paid from "Interest on Creek general fund")	1,558.43
United States court costs, Minnie Atkins et al	500.00
Salaries of clerks and other employees	1,171.30
Traveling expenses of clerks and other employees	53.27
Total	5,903.00

There is another question that we have been trying to dispose of along that line, and that is the present national attorney who is under contract with the Creek Tribe has been reported against by the Government officers, but the Indian Office will not give us the report. But the Indian Rights Association, through their representative, Mr. Brosius, made a report on Mr. R. C. Allen, who is the present attorney under contract, recommending that the present contract be not continued or entered into for another year with him, and I want to incorporate in my remarks the letter of Mr. Brosius, the agent of the Indian Rights Association, on that subject. Here it is:

DENVER, COLO., July 9, 1915.

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Several weeks since we were advised, by letter, of numerous charges which had been filed by certain Creek Indians of Oklahoma, protesting against the reappointment of Mr. R. C. Allen to the position of attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians.

Within the past fortnight I was in the State of Oklahoma and gathered additional information regarding conditions among the Creek Indians, together with matters which bear upon the fitness of Mr. Allen for the position of attorney for that tribe.

As a result of official investigation of the case, it is no doubt conceded by the Indian Department of the Government that the conduct of Mr. R. C. Allen, prior to his appointment as Creek attorney for the year ending June 30 last, in his transactions in matters directly concerning the interests of the Creek Indians, was such as to render him totally unfit to represent these Indians in any capacity.

As proof of the alleged unfitness of Mr. Allen, brief mention may be made of the charges filed in your department by Messrs. Cowe, Brown, and Hodge, citizens of the Creek Nation, during the month of May last. In part these charges, chiefly in the form of affidavits and certified official records, show that on May 15, 1915, there were 20 cases pending in the United States district court for the eastern district of Oklahoma against the Coweta Realty Co. to cancel deeds and conveyances affecting titles of Creek Indian allotted lands. It is charged that one-third of the Coweta Realty Co.'s stock was at the time of the organization of the company owned by Mr. R. C. Allen, and it is now understood that he is the owner of all of the stock of said company.

It is further officially certified that there were 26 cases pending against said Allen in the United States district court of the said district in Oklahoma on May 15, 1915, all, or nearly all, of such cases affecting title to the allotted lands of these Indians. We submit that the fact that such suits are now pending renders the interests of Mr. Allen antagonistic to those of the Indians and disqualify him for the position of Creek attorney.

Another feature of the case, which has been called to your attention, is that Mr. Allen borrowed large sums of money from various persons and is alleged to be heavily indebted at this time and is further believed to be execution proof. It is shown that shortly prior to his appointment as Creek attorney Mr. Allen was a candidate for district judge in Wagoner County, Okla., and that during the time of the canvass and previous to the election to the judgeship said Allen is charged with borrowing the sum of $10,000 from one John S. Bilby, a large landowner in said district, and who had numerous cases then pending affecting Creek Indian lands located in the district in which Mr. Allen would preside if elected to such judgeship. The court cases referred to then pending were 39 in number, as shown by the inclosed statement of causes pending in the court at Wagoner, Okla., over which Mr. Allen would preside as judge if elected, and over which he did preside as judge in due course. It is further asserted that said Allen mortgaged various tracts of Indian allotted lands, which the Government at that time or afterwards contested his title to, the mortgages running in favor of said John S. Bilby to secure payment of the loan of the $10,000 referred to. I am informed that quite recently Mr. Bilby had brought suit to recover personal judgment against Mr. Allen for the money loaned to him as aforesaid, and that this suit did not comprehend a foreclosure of the mortgage allotments, which is evidence that Mr. Bilby considers that Mr. Allen's title to the mortgaged lands is of little value.

We submit that no comment is necessary in reference to the foregoing transactions to show the unfitness of either of the principals therein to hold any position affecting or relating to the property right of the Creek Indians.

Mention has been made by those in favor of Mr. Allen's appointment as Creek attorney that he has secured a large number of indictments during his term in that capacity against alleged violators of law. It is asserted that in no case has a conviction been secured under these indictments, thus showing that Mr. Allen may be making a spectacular demonstration or that he may not be a keen attorney, such as should be secured for the Indians if an attorney is deemed necessary.

In the celebrated "Tommy Atkins" case, in which Mr. Allen seeks to set aside a fictitious Creek allotment, which is now very valuable by reason of its rich deposits of oil, etc., it is understood that Mr. Allen, if not actually favoring, has acquiesced in the contest being prosecuted by a noncitizen Creek Indian, who seeks to secure this allotment by showing it was improperly allotted to Atkins. If the allotment to Atkins is canceled and a noncitizen is declared entitled to the property the Creek Tribe of Indians will apparently not profit thereby, since the property goes to an outsider. This, we submit, indicates that the energy seemingly displayed by Mr. Allen in the case and the large amount of money belonging to the Creek Indians which has been expended by him in this matter will not benefit the Creek Tribe in the least, these being the Indians whose interests he is employed to protect.

During my recent visit to Oklahoma I called upon Chief Moty Tiger, at Okmulgee, on June 30 last. The chief stated very plainly to me that he was opposed to the reappointment of Mr. Allen as the Creek Tribe attorney. He said that while on account of the persuasions of Mr. Allen he had at first agreed to recommend the latter as attorney for another year, upon reflection and after securing more definite views from the members of the Creek Tribe he was now opposed to Mr. Allen's appointment.

At the time I called upon Chief Tiger he was clear-headed and sober, a fact which to my mind set at rest some of the stories I had heard regarding his condition and habits. I was impressed with his conscientious convictions in the matter of the attorneyship, which was interpreted to me by Samuel Haines, a Creek citizen.

We call attention to the fact that by a section of the Federal Statutes the United States district attorney for the district in which the lands are located shall represent all Indians in matters pertaining to their allotted lands.

The history of Mr. Allen's connection with transactions involving the interests of the Creek Indians probably were not well known at the time he was first appointed as Creek attorney for the term which expired June 30 last. Now that these transactions are of public notice, we submit that it would be a distinct step backward in Indian administration to reappoint him as attorney.

It seems unnecessary to suggest that the same rules should apply for the protection of the interests of the Creek Indians as are promulgated for the government of employees among other Indian tribes. These rules and regulations, which have been in force for perhaps two years or more, subject any employee in the Indian Service to dismissal for dealing in Indian lands.

We believe a consideration of all the conditions of the case render it advisable at this time to place the legal matters affecting the Creeks under the exclusive jurisdiction of United States district attorney for the district where the lands are located, who by law, as heretofore noted, is charged with the protection of the Indians in matters pertaining to their allotted lands.

The statements made herein which are within my own knowledge are true, and those given upon information are believed to be true.

Very respectfully,

S. M. BROSIUS,
Agent Indian Rights Association.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The effect of the gentleman's amendment is this: There are three tribal attorneys now provided for and——

Mr. DAVENPORT. No; there are two provided for. There are three under contract.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You propose to eliminate Mr. Allen?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes; Mr. Allen or anyone who might be employed in the future. His contract expires next June, and he may not be reemployed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are you not changing the effect of existing law by striking from this office Mr. Allen, who is now provided for?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Oh, no. His contract would expire before this would go into effect. It is not changing existing law, but limiting existing law and prohibiting the expenditure of thousands of dollars annually of the Creek fund, where the United States district attorney's office have to exercise and perform the functions that this national attorney is claiming he is performing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What work do these attorneys perform for the Indians? Do they look after the welfare of the Indians, so far as their contracts for the leasing of oil lands are concerned?

Mr. DAVENPORT. In some instances, where the tribal lands are undisposed of, and where there is property that has not been allotted, and so forth, the tribal attorneys have a great deal of work to do. That is the point I am making. But as they reach the stage which has been reached in the Creek Nation all of the lands have been allotted.

Mr. STAFFORD. How about the Creek Nation as to their oil leases? Does not the attorney safeguard the interests of the Indians so far as those leases are concerned?

Mr. DAVENPORT. No, sir; we have appropriated here $85,000 for the probate attorneys to look after that.

Mr. STAFFORD. A probate attorney does not look after the existing contracts of live Indians.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is what he does if the Indian is a restricted or dependent Indian.

Mr. STAFFORD. I always understood that probate attorneys looked after the estates of dead people, not live ones.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I can not yield. My time is up. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to answer the gentleman from Wisconsin, and to say that the probate attorneys not only look after guardian estates and administration estates, but they also, by specific instructions, as I understand—at least they are doing so—look after the estates of all restricted and dependent Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many probate attorneys are assigned to the Creek Nation?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I could not tell you.

Mr. STAFFORD. But here this attorney is specially assigned to one character of work, and that is to safeguard the interests of the Indians as a whole.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is not his contract. His contract is——

Mr. STAFFORD. It may not be his contract, but it is his work.

Mr. DAVENPORT. His contract is to represent the Creek Nation. So it was with the Cherokees and Seminoles; but when their business reached the stage that the business of the Creeks has reached, they were not needed, and their services were dispensed with

Mr. STAFFORD. How valuable are the oil fields of the Creek Nation, whose interests are safeguarded by the attorney that the gentleman is seeking to have eliminated?

Mr. DAVENPORT. They are worth millions of dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the gentleman wants to have that work thrown on some probate attorney who will not look after their interests?

Mr. DAVENPORT. If the gentleman had been listening to me when I started——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been listening, but the gentleman has been talking to the other side.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I did not intend to do so, and I will address my remarks more especially to this side. The United States district attorney's office has to look after that, and does it, and this man can not file a suit in court without the assistance of the United States district attorney.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman tell us how much salary this Creek Indian attorney gets?

Mr. DAVENPORT. He gets $5,000 a year, and in the last fiscal year of 1915 he spent, in salary and expenses, $12,255.22.

Mr. QUIN. What does he expend it for?

Mr. DAVENPORT. For expenses, and so forth.

Mr. QUIN. Let us cut him out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose these expenditures have to be approved by the Bureau of Indian Affairs before they are allowed.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I suppose he presents sworn vouchers for the expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. This attorney whom you seek to eliminate, and whose contract expires next June, has to be appointed subject to the approval of the President.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The contract provides that if any contract is entered into it must be approved by the President.

In that connection the further presumption is that such an attorney will not be mixed up in any way with Indian lands or contracts or Indian land suits, while the man with whom they did enter into contracts had 15 or 20 individual suits pending against him in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma, growing out of his unlawful dealing in Creek lands in the Creek Nation at that time. Some of them are pending yet. He was also interested in a corporation that had a number of others. I desire to introduce as a part of my remarks a certified copy of a statement by Mr. Harrison, the clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma, showing the number of suits pending in which he was interested.

The statement is as follows:

[SEAL.] R. P. HARRISON, Clerk.
By H. E. BOUDINOT, Deputy.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask whether or not it is more necessary for the Creek Indians, under the present conditions as to oil, gas, and so forth, to have an attorney than any other Indians in that country?

Mr. DAVENPORT. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What would become of their interests if you should discharge the man who now has those interests in his hands with the litigation pending?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I am not asking for the man to be discharged now. I am asking for the termination of his services as a national attorney when his contract expires. The Creek Indians have one county that has bigger oil-producing wells in it than the other Indians, but there is just as much oil produced in the Cherokee Nation and in the Osage Nation that have no national attorneys at all, and where the department will not appoint any or let them have any, as there is in the Creek Nation; and in the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations the Healdton field that is being developed is just as important as the Cushing and Drumwright fields in the Creek Nation, and their property is not all disposed of, either.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What are the duties of this attorney?

Mr. DAVENPORT. The only duties I have ever seen that he has performed outside of and in conjunction with the United States attorney's office have been in coming to Washington and staying around here and consulting with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the other officers in the department. That is the only duty that I know he performs.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is he employed in the trial of any cases of minors?

Mr. DAVENPORT. No; the probate attorneys look out for all cases of minors' estates and dependent-Indian estates.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist upon his point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I did not know that there was any point of order made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserved the point of order, for I do not see any reason why the Indians' attorney should be discharged without any hearing.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I did not understand that any point of order was made, and I wish to be heard on it.

Mr. MANN. The bill makes provision that certain moneys shall not be expended except in certain instances, and that is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment strikes out the word "said" and puts in the names of two tribes of Indians.

Mr. MANN. As the bill stands, with the word "said" in, it is the same as though they inserted the names of five tribes of Indians. This amendment inserts two tribes of Indians in place of five tribes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is subject to a point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas) there were 35 ayes and 7 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use from the tribal funds of the Cherokee Nation not to exceed the sum of $10,000 for building a road to the Cherokee Orphan Training School from Tahlequah, Okla.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 26, to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to return to page 26. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 2 on page 26, insert: "To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the condition of the Indians living in Louisiana and report to Congress on the first Monday of next December, $1,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. I will yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word. We have about 200 full-blooded Indians in Louisiana.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the name of the tribe?

Mr. LAZARO. The Alabamas and the Kiosata. They have lived there for many years and I understand that there is very little work for them to do. They are good white Indians and they are asking relief from the Government. The condition of Indians in other States has been investigated before. We have precedents for this request, and I hope that the members of this committee and this House will accept this amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAZARO. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman speaks of the Alabamas and the Kiosata. Is it not a fact that a part of the Alabamas, the main part of the tribe, settled in southwestern Texas on the Gulf coast?

Mr. LAZARO. I am not sure about that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman know that these Indians have been investigated under a resolution several years ago which was passed by Congress for the investigation of the Indians in Florida and also in Texas? I will also say, for the benefit of the gentleman, that we established a precedent in the case of Indians in Mississippi last year. That is the report that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] desired to call up. Also, I think the Rocky Boy Band of Indians, of Montana, were years ago investigated under a similar resolution. Congress afterwards, in order to stop a row about the Rocky Boys located in Montana and Canada, and which gave the people a great deal of trouble, put those Indians on a reservation under Government control. As I understand, these Indians in Louisiana have never been under Government control, and the part of the Alabama Tribe in Texas is not under Government control. We made an appropriation of a thousand dollars to investigate the Indians in Florida and Texas, but Congress did not adopt any relief for those Indians. I can not conscientiously, under the circumstances, say that Louisiana ought not to be put on a parity with Texas and Mississippi and Florida and North Carolina in these investigations. I shall therefore withdraw the point of order because we have precedents for this thing, and I do not want to discriminate against Louisiana.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question I renew the point of order. I do not know about these Indians in Louisiana, but from what the gentleman has said I understand they are white Indians.

Mr. LAZARO. They are full-blooded Indians.

Mr. CANNON. They never have received anything from the Government?

Mr. LAZARO. No.

Mr. CANNON. And they number about 400?

Mr. LAZARO. About 200 in my district.

Mr. CANNON. They are good citizens?

Mr. LAZARO. Yes; good citizens.

Mr. CANNON. Industrious?

Mr. LAZARO. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As good as the average population down there?

Mr. LAZARO. Well, they are good citizens, I am told.

Mr. CANNON. Good citizens, intelligent, industrious. Why does the gentleman desire to lay a foundation to pauperize them? God knows, we are pauperizing the Indians all over the country.

Mr. LAZARO. I will say to the gentleman that I am not thoroughly familiar with their mode of living there; I do not know exactly how they are getting along. All I know is what I am told. I think that the matter ought to be investigated.

Mr. CANNON. Why?

Mr. LAZARO. Because similar investigations have been had in other States.

Mr. CANNON. Are those Indians superior to much of the population down there?

Mr. LAZARO. I do not think so.

Mr. CANNON. Take the African population, for instance. Are they superior to the African population?

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman means the negroes?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Well, the negroes are good hands.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, good hands, yes; but are they superior to the negroes in Louisiana who are citizens? I refer to those in that same locality—laboring men, men who live in the sweat of their faces.

Mr. LAZARO. No; the negroes are not superior to the Indians.

Mr. CANNON. Are they equal?

Mr. LAZARO. I do not think the Indians are equal to the whites, because they have not had the advantages.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman paid a very high compliment a bit ago to these 200 citizens who live in his district. Have they asked for this investigation?

Mr. LAZARO. Yes. I said they were good, peaceable citizens; that they did not annoy the people of the community; but I did not mean to say that they were the equal of the white citizens round about. They have not had the advantages. Those people are living together. They are living according to the old tribal customs. They have their chief there, and they are asking the Government to make this investigation. This Government has made similar investigations in other States, and all I am asking for them is an investigation the same as has been made in Mississippi, Florida, and other States.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I shall have to insist upon the point of order. I think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SISSON). Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order? The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I said that I would insist upon the point of order, because I do not desire to lay a foundation to pauperize these Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman, if he will listen, that I would like to read him a letter which I have here from a gentleman who has lived there for 25 years, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAZARO. That letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1916.

Hon. L. LAZARO, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LAZARO: Having been acquainted with the Indians living in the neighborhood of Bayou Blue, in Allen Parish, La., for upward of 25 years, and at their request I came to Washington with Mr. Jackson Langley, their present tribal chief, to ask for an investigation of their condition and for such relief as they may be entitled to.

As you know, we called on Hon. Edgar B. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and made to him the statement of the conditions as we knew them, and he expressed himself as favoring an investigation and, further, stated that he would be perfectly willing to appear before the committee of Congress in the matter.

As I stated to Mr. Meritt, there are about 200 full-blooded Indians in the community referred to above who are in hard circumstances and who are really in need of some recognition and assistance by the Government. They have been living in this community practically always and at one time had small homes and considerable stock, but as they had no titles to land, practically, they now find themselves without homes and dependent on daily labor for existence. Being located in an isolated part of the country, where labor is not in demand, they are living under considerable difficulties, and we feel that they are entitled to some recognition and relief.

In the 25 years that I have known these Indians they have always conducted themselves peaceably. Being of a retiring disposition, and having received no outside assistance, a good many of them are now in actual need.

Very truly, yours, J. C. PHILLIPS.

I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to prevail by a point of order against the consideration of this amendment. I am opposed to the amendment, but will withdraw the point of order and oppose the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The Chair understands that the point of order has already been sustained. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insists upon the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native Indian pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent, $102,200; for general repairs and improvements, $25,000; in all, $127,200.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAWLEY: On page 43, line 10, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$30,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to increase the amount available for repairs and improvements around the school. The committee has allowed $25,000 out of $60,000 estimated for by the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What was the amount estimated?

Mr. HAWLEY. Sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And the committee allowed $25,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. Twenty-five thousand dollars. In this amount of $60,000 estimated for by the department there were included some new buildings and extensions. The $30,000 I propose in this amendment will not provide for any new buildings, but for necessary repairs and improvements.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In order to get an understanding of the matter, I desire to ask the gentleman if $20,000 was not allowed for new buildings, including dairy barns, printing office, employees' quarters, and addition to the hospital—in all, $40,000—and is not that the amount that was cut out by the committee? I refer to the bottom of page 252 of the hearings.

Mr. NORTON. Only $20,000 was estimated for repairs and improvements, and is not that the fact? Instead of the amount being decreased, it was increased by $5,000. The gentleman will find that in the hearings on page 254.

Mr. HAWLEY. The statement I have includes general repairs and improvements, $20,000, and for new buildings, including dairy barns, printing office, employees' quarters, and addition to the hospital, $40,000.

The Government owns a very valuable property at Chemawa. There are some 442 acres of land, with improvements, and some 60 buildings. Most of the buildings are of wood and were constructed many years ago, some over 30 years ago. Since that time deterioration of the buildings has been going on, and when I visited the school this fall I found a number of the buildings had their foundations badly impaired. The lower sills have been affected by rot, and the buildings are out of shape, spreading and sinking down, and the foundations are in poor condition.

The sinking of the building opens the roof to leaks. I went into the dining room and my weight in moving around shook the building, and the floor was so weak in places that I put my foot through it. I asked why they did not lay a new floor, and they said that the sills or stringers on which the floor was laid were so rotten they would not hold the nails and they would have to remove the entire foundation for the floor and put in new stringers on which to lay the floor. Several of the dormitories were leaky. The roof breaks open with this sinking of the foundation. Then the plaster cracks and requires considerable continuous improvement. The thing to do is to put the foundations in good shape. The roof when once repaired will remain in good condition and the plaster will not be continually cracking, requiring constant repairs. Several of the roofs are in such bad condition they need to be replaced. When the heating plant was put in some man laid it down in this way: He dug a trench and put in half tile, laid the steam pipes poorly provided with insulation in it, then put in the hot-water pipe, and then put another half tile above, and covered it up with dirt. In the rainy season it makes the finest kind of a drain, and these pipes to convey steam and hot water to the building are cooled by this water running through the pipes, in which they are laid so that by the time the hot water reaches some of the buildings it is pretty nearly cold, and steam does not get there at all. In one of the largest buildings in the northeastern corner of the campus, the large girls' dormitory, there was no heat in the building at all except where they had taken out a window pane of that fine brick building, put in a tin pane, and run a stove pipe through that for a stove to heat one room of the building. I asked why the radiators were not hot, and they told me they could not get the heat to that building. There is a certain amount of painting that needs to be done in order to preserve the building. I went over the plant on the 25th of November with considerable care.

As I have already stated, the Government has at Chemawa, near Salem, Oreg., one of the best Indian schools in the United States, with a very valuable property. The school is doing excellent work. However, as many of the buildings were constructed years ago, and are of wood, and several were converted to their present use out of buildings constructed for purposes other than they are now being used for, very important repairs and improvements and some new buildings are necessary. Prior to my coming to Washington I went to this school and made a somewhat detailed investigation of the conditions there to ascertain its needs from personal investigation and present the following statement:

DORMITORY NO. 1.

Brick structure used as dormitory for 90 boys, erected in 1901, in fairly good condition. Requires minor repairs such as valleys retinned, roofs repaired, walls plastered, and floors in lavatories and bathrooms repaired. The woodwork on entire building should be painted.

DORMITORY NO. 2.

A three-story frame building, with entire upper floors made into two big rooms, in which 85 boys sleep. This is an old structure erected in 1884 and is in bad condition. Requires a new roof, new floors, additional foundation, besides should be remodeled and cut up into rooms for not more than three boys each. Wholesale herding of boys in rooms is insanitary and uncivilizing. It is noticed also in this building that the boys have no lockers or places to keep their belongings. Such are piled under beds or hung around the dormitory walls.

DORMITORY NO. 3.

This is a long, rambling, wooden building which houses 200 boys. It was erected in 1883, and is inadequate in every respect for the proper housing of human beings. It is a dark, insanitary affair. Eighty-five boys sleep in one room on the attic floor, with dormer windows and low ceiling. The roofs are about worn out, being patched and repaired until a new roof entire is essential. The walls are out of plumb, porches rotten, foundations poor. In fact, this building should have a complete remodeling throughout and arranged so that it will be well lighted and well ventilated, with ample air space afforded each pupil and divided into rooms, thus giving the Indian youth in a measure what is necessary for health and proper civilization. As the building stands to-day it is unfit for a home and should have immediate attention in way of repairs and remodeling throughout.

HORSE BARN.

This building is in fairly good shape with the exception of minor repairs required.

DAIRY BARN.

Should be remodeled. The stalls are so constructed that the cows can not be comfortable nor clean. New cement floors are required throughout, with new windows and doors. So much remodeling is necessary that a new barn might be economy.

SHOPS.

The blacksmith and wagon-making, carpenter and general woodworking, shoe and harness, and tailor departments occupy two brick buildings in good shape. Lack of sufficient equipment was noted.

POWER HOUSE, STEAM, ELECTRIC, WATER.

Too much can not be said with reference to the need of a general renovation of steam, electric, and water systems. The boilers are old and inadequate, rendering it impossible to supply sufficient power to heat the building, supply steam to the laundry, cooking department, operate the electric engine, its machinery, steam pumps, etc. Indeed, the entire system is in wretched condition and practically worn out. With the appropriation made last year providing $7,200 for new boilers this need will be met, but the extensive piping system, being laid in split agricultural drain tile, simply affords a means by which the surface water drains into such split pipe immersing the steam pipe and in consequence the steam condenses into water and insufficient heat reaches the radiators in in many buildings, and in some buildings none at all. The pupils and employees really suffer. To remedy this a system of concrete tunnels in which the steam mains and hot-water piping may be laid is essential, as is customary at all institutions.

The electric system is very poor. It is noticed that candles and coal-oil lamps are on hand throughout the school. Upon inquiring I was informed that the plant is wired badly from beginning to end, no switches, and in order to light any particular point hundreds of lights are burned in order to get the benefit of a few. That on account of the poor and ancient electric system that there is hardly a night passes without the school plant being in darkness. The operation of all shop machinery, laundry machinery, depends upon electric power. The consequence is that it is impossible to properly operate the shops, etc., under such conditions. A new system should be authorized, and were I to suggest one it would be to rewire the entire plant and purchase electricity from an electric-power company which has main trunk lines running past the school land, which can be secured at very low rates, being more economical and without cessation. Without lights an educational institution is at a serious disadvantage, to say the least.

An additional water tank with a capacity to hold 50,000 gallons is also necessary, for when steam and electricity can not be secured the school is without water. This auxiliary tank would keep a supply on hand and permit the use of water for all purposes when the pumps are out of order or steam and electricity unavailable.

DINING HALL.

This is an old wooden structure erected in 1883. The floors are worn out, roof requires re-covering, foundation relaid, and a renovation given generally.

GIRLS' DORMITORY NO. 4.

This structure is made on the same plan as dormitory No. 3 and is old and unfit in its present shape to house the 200 girls now therein, for it requires a general remodeling throughout to make it sanitary and healthful and with conveniences so necessary for the proper comfort and welfare of the girls. This old ramshackle wooden structure was built in 1883. Repairs are imperative.

EMPLOYEES' QUARTERS.

I found the employees residing, in some instances, in old houses, floors sagging, roof leaking, foundations out of plumb, small, with no conveniences; in fact, inadequate in nearly every way. Other employees, with families, are compelled to rent quarters in the neighborhood on account of lack of quarters. I also found the small houses occupied by six families, and one family in a tent. Every available nook is used by single employees. An employees' building with capacity to hold 20 single employees, as well as four single cottages, should be constructed. In addition, the old shacks should be remodeled and repaired.

GIRLS' DORMITORY NO. 5.

This is a brick building and in good shape, except that minor repairs are necessary, such as the installation of more bathing apparatus, some roof repairs, etc.

HOSPITAL.

This is a brick structure, in fairly good shape. Is too small and requires some repairs.

SCHOOL BUILDING AND ASSEMBLY HALL.

Made of brick and in fairly good condition. Needs some repairs.

GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL BUILDING.

A small, narrow two-story structure, used for teaching girls cooking and housing of six employees on first floor, and sewing rooms and two employees on second floor. This building is old and badly worn. It should be thoroughly remodeled and used as a dormitory for the little girls. The class of girls taking cooking lessons at the time of my inspection was 65. The room used for such purpose is not of sufficient size to properly accommodate more than a dozen girls. The same applies to the upstairs room used for sewing. The girls are crowded into too small a space and insufficient light. A new industrial building is badly needed.

LAUNDRY.

The present laundry is brick and in good shape. An addition should be put thereon. The present laundry is too small. The ironing end of the building is so small that the girls are wedged in too closely for effective work.

In addition to the above buildings, I have inspected the paint shop, root house, prune drier, gymnasium, commissary, and various other buildings, and each one requires more or less repairs.

PRESENT SCHOOL OFFICE.

This is an old wooden residence constructed in the early eighties, and is now practically worn out and unfit for the purpose used. The sills are rotten, roofs worn, walls out of plumb, floors sagging, and sleepers rotten. In fact, this structure is worn out. A new administration and office building should be authorized, with a second floor, where the school printing department can be conducted.

There is great need at this school for much concrete and cement work. In a country where there is much rainfall, as at this school, unless roads and walks are made, it is impossible to get around without wading through mud and water While some walks have been made and a little headway made as regards wagon roads, there is need of a good deal more in order to connect the various buildings and to furnish roads for hauling.

I might add that this school is splendidly located, with 442 acres of excellent land and all conditions conspire to render effective educational work for Indians, provided proper equipment is afforded.

In my opinion the following items should be appropriated for in the pending bill:

1 For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native Indian pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian School, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent	$102,000
2. For general repairs and improvements	20,000
3. For employees' cottages and quarters	10,000
4. For girls' industrial building	10,000
5. For reconstructing electric light and power system, including rewiring 30 buildings, replacing old indirect-current motors with new alternating-current motors, reconstructing entire distribution system, additional wire, new electrically driven pumps for supplying water and pumping fuel oil (to be immediately available)	5,000
6. For addition to laundry	2,500
7. For remodeling boys' and girls' quarters	10,000
8. For cement walks and curbings and foundation work under old buildings (to be immediately available)	5,000
9. For tunnels for steam piping and hot water	10,000
10. For roads	2,000
11. For library building	5,000
12. For administration building and printing office	6,000
In all	187,500

A special committee of the Salem Commercial Club a few days ago also visited the school and made a report of its needs. The signers of the report are men of large business affairs and their judgment is worthy of the serious consideration of the House. This report comments upon present conditions and expresses a careful opinion on what improvements and additions are necessary:

SALEM, OREG., November 24, 1916.

The undersigned, appointed as a committee from the Salem Commercial Club to visit the Salem Indian School at Chemawa, Oreg., and make an investigation thereof and ascertain and report the needs of that institution, went in a body to Chemawa on November 23, 1916, and after looking over the school grounds and the various buildings which need remodeling and improvements, we have to report as follows:

We find that the Government has a tract of 442 acres of some of the best land in this valley. It has on it some five modern and semi-modern brick buildings, which are, generally speaking, in good repair.

There are a number of wooden structures which should be remodeled in the interests of the health, comfort, and education of the Indian children. There are also other improvements needed, particularly drainage, roads, cement walks, and improvements in the electric-light and heating system. Considering the great value of this plant, the large number of Indians, about 600, in attendance, and its favorable location, it is our opinion that it is a good investment on the part of the Government, if it intends to pursue its policy of giving its Indian children a good education, teaching them the way of civilized life, to appropriate the necessary money to make some of the old buildings more sanitary, homelike, and healthful; to improve the grounds and surroundings so they will compare favorably with the State institutions in this community; and to erect a few new fireproof buildings, which are needed to make a complete and efficient educational plant.

Among the new buildings we believe the Government would be justified in furnishing is a library, to cost in the neighborhood of $5,000. We believe this would be a good educational investment. At present a small room in one of the buildings is used for the purpose of stacking up several thousand volumes.

Another new building needed is an administration or office building. We were surprised when we entered the dingy suite of rooms in a very old building where the business of the school is transacted. It is an old wooden building; the floors are rough and uneven. The structure was evidently built for some other purpose. There is no fireproof vault in the building. We believe a suitable fireproof building could be constructed for $7,500.

We believe a new building is also needed for vocational and industrial training for girls. The present one is very inadequate, being built of wood, and entirely too small to accommodate the large classes. Apparently it was never designed for its present use. We consider this work in domestic science, which includes sewing and cooking, the most important of the branches taught at the school. In our opinion, an appropriation of $10,000 to $12,000 should be made for this purpose.

The present laundry should be enlarged. The building is not large enough to accommodate the large number of students who have to work in the building at the same time. An appropriation of from $2,000 to $3,000 is needed for this purpose.

There seems to be a great lack of room for employees. Instead of being quartered in cottages, as is usual in most institutions, they are tucked away here and there in various buildings, wherever there is a little unoccupied space. We are informed that some of the employees do not live on the grounds, which rendered them of less service to the school. In our opinion, a sufficient number of cottages and other quarters should be built to house the employees on the ground, which would probably cost from $8,000 to $10,000.

The wooden buildings which are used for living quarters for more than half of the pupils are insanitary, dangerous fire traps. There are several wards containing from 20 to 50 or more beds each, where the pupils sleep. They have no privacy and no suitable place for keeping their personal belongings. Under a few of the cots are seen suit cases or boxes. The two brick dormitories which furnish suitable quarters for less than half the pupils are in a good state of repair, save the need of some renovating, such as calcimining and interior painting. The wooden dormitories above referred to should be exclusively remodeled or else brick dormitories should be built to replace them. We believe that there should be a room for every two or three pupils, if the Indians are to be taught to live as civilized people do. In our opinion, not less than $12,000 will be required to remodel these three dormitories.

One of the greatest needs of the institution is a liberal appropriation for general repairs and improvements. These should include repairs to fences, barns, and various repairs to many other buildings not mentioned above. One of the largest outlays necessary would be improvements to the power plant, which, although large and valuable, is in a very bad state of repair. We believe not less than $15,000 should be appropriated for general repairs and improvements. More than this could easily be spent to advantage.

We found the electric light and power system needed extensive repairs. All the buildings should be rewired, as they were wired years ago under old specifications, which are not considered safe at this time. Several new motors are needed of a different type from the old ones. We found the water system inefficient by reason of unsuitable pumps. Pumps of another design and greater capacity are needed. In our opinion there will be required for this purpose about $5,000.

In our walk about the grounds yesterday we found a great need for cement walks on account of the muddy condition of the grounds. We also noted that some of the buildings needed work done on the foundations. There are so many buildings scattered over a large area that we believe there will be needed for this work about $5,000.

The same conditions that make cement walks necessary make roads necessary about the grounds. The soil is such that during the rainy season the dirt roads become almost impassable. We believe that there should be spent for roads on the premises at least $4,000.

In many of the buildings we found stoves with wood fires, while in the same room with the stove would be steam radiators. Upon examination we learned that while the buildings are plumbed for steam heat the pipes supplying the hot water and steam are not properly laid in tunnels and, in our opinion, a large part of the fuel used at the institution is entirely wasted. In fact, the pipes are heating the ground instead of heating the buildings. We believe the steam and water pipes should be placed in tunnels, and the expenditure required for these tunnels would be saved within the next few years in the cost of fuel. It will probably cost from $10,000 to $12,000 to properly install these pipes.

We were very favorably impressed with the new superintendent, Mr. Hall. We believe he is a man of good business judgment, who has the interest of the Government at heart and who will make a wise use of the appropriations for the school. We believe the school, under his administration, is destined to increase in size and importance and that your committee should give full faith and credence to his representations as to the present condition of the school and its needs.

Following is a summary statement of estimated cost of needed improvements:

Library building	$5,000
Administration building	7,500
Vocation building for girls	12,000
Laundry	3,000
Quarters for employees	10,000
Dormatories for pupils	12,000
General repairs and improvements	15,000
Light, power, and water repairs	5,000
Cement walks	5,000
Roads about grounds	4,000
Heating improvements	12,000
Total	90,500

Respectfully submitted.

PAUL B. WALLACE,
Vice President Salem Water, Light & Power Co.
W. M. HAMILTON,
Manager P. R. L. & P. Co. of the Willamette Valley.
THOS. B. KAY,
State Treasurer of Oregon; Member of State Board of Control (which has direct charge of all State institutions).

This plant is too valuable to be allowed to deteriorate for lack of proper attention to its upkeep, and a sum of money very small in comparison to the entire value of the plant and the excellent work the school is doing will enable the service to make the necessary repairs and improvements. Some new buildings are needed, but in view of the policy of the committee at this session I am asking only for money to make the repairs and improvements very much needed at this time.

Mr. NORTON. I think the committee will agree to that increase if the gentleman does not talk so we might be obliged to agree to further increases. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Twenty-five thousand dollars, I believe, was recommended by this committee. The department only asked for $20,000, but the committee gave $5,000 more than the estimate for general repairs and improvements. We cut out the $40,000 for other buildings. Having cut that much out, I am willing for the gentleman to have that increase of $5,000 if there is no further objection to it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation of the Modoc Point irrigation system within the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, $4,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Texas that the total in line 10——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask that that be changed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the total will be changed in accordance with the figures in the text. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I would like to ask the chairman about the significance of these expressions. One is "for the support and civilization" of the Indians, which occurs all through the bill, and the other is "for support and education."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that applies to the nonreservation schools. Support and education merely applies to the nonreservation schools. This language has been carried in the bill for many years, and I can not give any reason as to why it first came in the bill, because it antedated my service in the House.

Mr. FESS. Under the item "for support and civilization," is not an educational system carried on, too?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is, under a lump sum, under certain conditions; yes, in the reservation schools.

Mr. FESS. I have noticed the bill here provides for 24 schools throughout the different States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Those are nonreservation schools.

Mr. FESS. And in those 24 there are less than 10,000 pupils?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The words "for support and education" usually indicate a nonreservation school. Under the words "for support and civilization" is usually carried the agency appropriation. That is the distinction.

Mr. FESS. Then, the 8,915 pupils that are named in the bill do not take in all persons who are educated?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would not want to say about that.

Mr. FESS. I should think there would be more than 9,000 Indian children.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. A great many are taken care of in what are called the day schools on the reservation and reservation boarding schools and a great many public schools.

Mr. FESS. That is what I supposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-utes, including pay of employees, $1,000.

[Mr. JOHNSON of Washington addressed the committee. His remarks will appear hereafter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservaton, in Wyoming, including the maintenance and operation of completed canals, $50,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$50,000," in line 6, page 54, and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 6, strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is an increase of the appropriation for the extension of the irrigation system on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming. The committee granted the estimate, but at that time there was not before the committee a report which the committee called for in the bill of last year relative to the needs of the system and its extension. Since the bill has been reported that report has been received.

I do not wish to take up the time of the committee in going into details as to what that report indicates, except to say that it indicates the need of an increased activity in the development of this project. It is one of the very best going Indian irrigation projects. About 25,000 acres are actually under cultivation, and there is a need not only as indicated from this report but from my own personal knowledge of an increased amount of land under ditches to meet the demand. I should have asked for more of an increase than I have, except that I have thought that the committee might accept an increase of $50,000 and might not be willing to increase the amount more.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I would like to confirm what the gentleman says concerning the report of the area on this reservation and the use of the money heretofore expended there. I have taken the report up, as I have a great many other irrigation propositions, and I find in many places the Indians are not using all the land where water is available for irrigation. For that reason in a great many cases the committee declined to allow increases where they were asked for by members of the committee, on the theory that they should use the facilities already provided before more money is appropriated or expended. Under this project, in all, 20,000 acres are under cultivation, and the Indians are making good use of the system so far constructed. They are progressive Indians, and it is a good indication that if more money is expended they will go on and make good use of this additional appropriation. In my own judgment I am convinced that the increase asked by the gentleman from Wyoming is justified and ought to be granted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, if the committee had had the report to which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] referred before it when they were making up this bill, I have no doubt that the amount he has asked for in his amendment would have been agreed to, and I hope the committee will grant the increase that has been asked for. I think it will make the amount of money already expended more profitable to the Indians, and I do not think we are expending money in furthering irrigation projects on any Indian reservation that will bring better returns than that expended on this reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, permit me to say just this to the committee: Since the Indian Committee reported this bill the gentleman from Wyoming has presented to me, as he has to other members of the committee, the report of the officials in charge of this work. The gentleman from Wyoming, who is thoroughly familiar with the project, has also presented ample justification for the proposed increase. This data was not before the Indian Committee when the bill was being prepared. Not even an estimate for this amount was presented to the committee at that time.

I do not believe in wanton, careless, or useless expenditure of the public funds, but we must take cognizance of the fact that it is sometimes better and more economical to furnish sufficient funds than to string the work out unnecessarily, thereby consuming the major portion in overhead and running expenses. The chairman of our committee, who has just stepped out but will return in a few moments, thinks this amount not excessive. Most of the other members of the Indian Committee are of similar opinion, and if all this new information had been before us it would doubtless now be included in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state, Mr. Chairman, that I have gone over the matter thoroughly with the gentleman from Wyoming, and I agree with the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. That until the meeting of the Sixty-fifth Congress, those members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, not less than five in number, who are members elect to the Sixty-fifth Congress, are authorized to conduct hearings and investigate the conduct of Indian affairs by the Indian Bureau and other branches of the Indian Service, at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for expenses incident thereto.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of expressing the regret of the minority members of the Committee on Indian Affairs that the distinguished chairman of that committee is to retire at the close of this Congress.

In a long service on that committee I have rarely missed the presence of JOHN H. STEPHENS when there was a meeting of that committee. He has always been attentive to the business that came before that great committee. There has been during my service no more industrious or painstaking member of that committee. He has always been conscientious and sincere in the performance of his duties, and the Indians have had no better friend on that committee, or in the House, than the retiring chairman. I am sure that not only the Members on this side of the House who belong to the Committee on Indian Affairs but others join me in very best wishes to the retiring chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs as he goes to his home in Texas, where I hope he will enjoy his retirement as fully as we have enjoyed his presence here in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would feel that I had been derelict in a sacred duty should I let this occasion pass by without contributing some word of mine in acknowledgment of the efficient service of the worthy gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], who retires from public life at the close of the present session of Congress. It has been my privilege and honor to serve with the gentleman from Texas both in this House and on the Committee on Indian Affairs almost ever since I came to Congress 10 years ago. He is always found efficient, always energetic, always intelligent in the discharge of his duties, and lends a willing ear to the petition of Indian, white person, or anyone else who might have business with him or his committee. As for the American Indian, he owes a debt of gratitude which can never be paid. For during the past 20 years there is one man above all others who has literally stood at the door of the Committee on Indian Affairs with a club, ready to assassinate any person who attempted to infringe upon the rights of Indians or invade their funds for any improper use or purpose, and that man was the distinguished gentleman from Texas, JOHN H. STEPHENS. [Applause.] The people from Oklahoma feel especially grateful to JOHN H. STEPHENS. There is not a man, there is not a woman, nay, there is not a child, either white or Indian, in the entire State of Oklahoma but that has felt the beneficent effect of his presence in Congress and in the protection of their rights. There is not a citizen of any description in the entire State of Oklahoma who has not at all times felt at perfect liberty to come to JOHN H. STEPHENS with any petition at any time and with the assurance that that petition would receive his most careful and thoughtful consideration.

Nothing more appropriate can be said of any Member retiring from this House than that he is an honest man and has done his duty, and that is the unanimous verdict of this body with reference to JOHN H. STEPHENS. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen who have spoken for the kind words that they have seen fit to insert in the RECORD, and I assure them that I am especially gratified at the language used.

It is true that I lived for many years before I came to Congress adjoining Oklahoma. I found there a condition of affairs then existing that was insupportable to my State and the surrounding States. For that reason I insisted and requested, when I came to Congress under Mr. Reed, who was then Speaker in the Fifty-fifth Congress, that I receive an assignment to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I served under that excellent and splendid Republican, James S. Sherman, for 12 years. [Applause.] For two years more I served under that equally splendid Republican, Mr. Burke, of South Dakota. [Applause.]

Since that time I have been chairman of this Committee on Indian Affairs. My work is behind me, and I am glad to retire from this Congress with the good will of so many of its Members. If I have any enemies here, I do not know it.

I move, Mr. Chairman, the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 27 in order that I may offer in a modified form the amendment which I submitted yesterday. The form in which I submit it, I think, is satisfactory to the Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 27 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let it be reported.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I move, Mr. Chairman, on page 27, line 12, to strike out the words "to furnish employment to the said Chippewas," and in line 15, after the word "was," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following:

Provided, That in the expenditure of said sum preference in employment shall be given to the said Chippewas, so far as may be practicable.

I think that reaches the object the department has in view in much better form than the language as it appears in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request to return to page 27?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Strike out from line 12, page 27, the words "to furnish employment for the said Chippewas." At the end of the paragraph strike out the period and insert a colon, and add the words which I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 12, strike out the words "to furnish employment to the said Chippewas"; in line 15, after the word "Chippewas," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following:

"Provided, That in the expenditure of said sum preference in employment shall be given said Chippewas, so far as may be practicable."

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to appear hypercritical, but it is not customary to insert a semicolon ahead of a proviso.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. A colon.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The language of the amendment is better than the language of the bill, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments and with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 18542.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JAMES C. COURTS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is the first bill reported at this session of Congress from the Committee on Appropriations. It is the first time in 32 years that a bill has been called up in the House which has been reported from that committee without the presence of the very valuable clerk who so long was associated with its work.

It is a matter of very keen regret to be required to state to the House that on the 26th day of September, shortly after the adjournment of the last session of Congress, Mr. James C. Courts died at his summer home at Arundel-on-the-Bay.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Courts had a most remarkable career. He was associated with the work of the Committee on Appropriations for a period of 39 years. He was appointed an assistant clerk to the committee in October, 1877, by the then chairman, John De Witt Atkins, of Tennessee. He was appointed clerk of the committee in January, 1884, by the late Samuel J. Randall.

The Committee on Appropriations was created in 1865. Since that time 13 individuals have served as its chairman, and until Mr. Courts's death but two individuals as clerks. Mr. Courts had the unique distinction of being appointed and reappointed to his place as clerk of that committee by eight of the men who presided over it. Commencing with Mr. Atkins in 1877 he served under Mr. Hiscock, later a Senator from the State of New York; under Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania; JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois; William S. Holman, of Indiana; Joseph D. Sayers, of Texas; James A. Hemenway, of Indiana; James A. Tawney, of Minnesota; and myself. His service was not only unique because of its great length, but it was peculiar because of its remarkable value. Everyone recalls the modest, quiet individual who sat at the table beside the Member in charge when bills from the Committee on Appropriations were before the House. He was familiarly known as "Jim Courts," or "Courts," and his manners were so affable and his courtesy was so marked that men loved him, although they perhaps had little opportunity to become intimately acquainted with him.

After his death it was said of him—and although the statement may be somewhat extravagant it at least reflected the belief of many people—"that he never made an error; that his memory never failed; that he had at his fingers' ends the references to the myriads of laws, parts of laws, jokers, and limitations on appropriation bills." He unquestionably was the best-informed man in the United States on the fiscal affairs of the Government. His service was so disinterested and his conduct was so impartial that perhaps it may best illustrate how he conducted himself to say that I had been a member of the Committee on Appropriations for five years before I knew that in politics he was a Democrat.

Mr. Chairman, his loss to the House is very great. He was the undisclosed author of more reforms and beneficial legislation than many Members of distinguished service. His knowledge was not only extensive but he was a skilled parliamentarian.

I recall my first impression of Mr. Courts. An appropriation bill was under consideration in the House, under control of Mr. CANNON, then chairman of the committee. Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, at that time, in the Fifty-sixth Congress, was the minority leader. He had been interrogating Mr. CANNON regarding some item in the bill. Mr. CANNON stooped over to speak to this quiet, modest, little man who sat beside him. Mr. Richardson asked that he might have Mr. CANNON'S attention, and his reply was that he was refreshing his memory. Mr. Richardson retorted, "Seeing the source from which the refreshment comes, I have no doubt as to the accuracy of the information the gentleman will obtain"; and that was the universal feeling of Members in the House.

To illustrate how devoted he was to the legislative branch of the Government, I recall this incident: Eight or ten years ago the then Secretary of the Treasury was engaged in reorganizing his department. He desired to have one of the divisions so organized that perhaps there might be developed a greater control in the Treasury Department over estimates than then existed or now exists, and he called on the Committee on Appropriations and asked that the compensation of the head of that division be fixed at $6,000. It was a larger sum than was paid to any of the Assistant Secretaries of the department. The Members of whom he made the request smiled somewhat indulgently and expressed the opinion that of course he was not serious. His reply was, "I am serious, and I make this request because I wish to offer the position to Mr. Courts, the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations." There was an informal conference, and the then chairman stated to the Secretary of the Treasury, "I do not believe that Mr. Courts will accept this position, but this committee would do nothing to stand in the way of his advancement. We will make the offer to him in your name, and if he accepts, or is willing to accept, we will recommend that the compensation be fixed at the sum named." When the suggestion was made to Mr. Courts, he acted as if his loyalty to Congress had been doubted, and he made the statement that he would not surrender his position in the legislative department of the Government for the highest position that could be given him in the executive department of the Government. He was so devoted to the work of the House of Representatives, and he was so impressed with the dignity and importance of this body that he preferred to continue in its service at a less compensation than to be transferred into an executive department, not only at a greater compensation than he was receiving, but at a compensation greater than that of any assistant secretary in the department.

I wish, Mr. Chairman, to have recorded not only the deep loss I am sure the Members of this House must feel at the death of Mr. Courts, but also the deep loss that the Committee on Appropriations has suffered, and my own deep personal sorrow at the death of a man whose service to the country was distinguished, whose friendship I cherished, and whose association has been very beneficial.

At a meeting of the Committee on Appropriations held December 11, 1916, the following minute was adopted and spread upon the minutes of the committee:

The committee feels with profound sorrow the loss of its late clerk, Mr. James C. Courts.

His high character, his unimpeachable integrity, his patriotic devotion to duty and unrivaled equipment for the office he so long occupied, justified the esteem in which he was universally held and makes his death a severe loss.

His entire public career was practically identified with the work of this committee. Appointed assistant clerk in October, 1877, he was made clerk in January, 1884.

During the 39 years of his connection with the committee he accumulated a vast fund of information which was of invaluable aid to the Members of the committee; his influence was constantly exerted for the improvement of the public service and for the betterment of those employed therein.

In his death the committee suffered a great loss, the country a distinguished, faithful, and patriotic servant, his family a gentle and devoted head.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I heartily and sincerely indorse all that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has stated touching the services to the House of Representatives—yes, broader than that, to the citizenship of the Republic—by James C. Courts. I recollect very well when he was designated as assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations. This committee, if I recollect right, was created under the rules of the House in 1865, on the motion of Mr. Thaddeus Stevens. The Ways and Means Committee prior to that time had jurisdiction not only in preparing bills for revenue, but bills appropriating moneys for the public service for the consideration of the House of Representatives.

As the country increased in population the duties of that great committee were so severe that the Committee on Appropriations was created. Its first chairman was Mr. Thaddeus Stevens. He appointed as clerk to the committee, or the committee selected as clerk, a gentleman by the name of Stephens, a son-in-law of E. D. Baker, prominent in Illinois as a lawyer and politician, Senator from Oregon, Member of the Senate when he was killed in the battle of Balls Bluff.

The clerk, Mr. Stephens, was an exceedingly accomplished gentleman of great ability, and, until Mr. Courts was chosen, perhaps the most competent man touching expenditures in the history of the Republic who has acted as clerk of that great committee. The committee at that time had jurisdiction to consider all the appropriation bills, including the river and harbor bill. Afterwards the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was constituted.

The Committee on Appropriations remained in possession of all the bills, if I recollect right, until the commencement of the Speakership of Mr. Speaker Carlisle from Kentucky. Then other committees of the House under the rules that were adopted had jurisdiction, respectively, as they now have. It is not my purpose to speak of the wisdom or the unwisdom of the action taken by the House, and I shall not do so.

The training that Mr. Courts had in the beginning was very good, and he was an apt pupil. He was then a youth of not over 21 or 22 years of age. He speedily developed as great ability as the chief clerk himself. Mr. Stephens remained as clerk of the committee until the Forty-seventh Congress, which was the Congress that was chosen when Mr. Garfield was elected President.

I say again, that all the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has stated I indorse. I have never known Mr. Courts's equal touching expenditures, the history of the legislation that made the expenditure necessary, and the precedents; he was a good parliamentarian, and he had all of this information at his fingers' end or where he could lay his hands on the complete information when called upon by the committee to do so.

I was chairman of the committee 10 or 12 years. I want to relate a little incident that happened. The Forty-seventh Congress came in, and the late Senator Hiscock was a Member of the House, a man of excellent ability, and was made chairman of the committee. He had a constituent whom he desired to be clerk. It is ordinarily the case that the chairman designates the clerk. Mr. Hiscock designated his constituent. I was taken by surprise. It was Mr. Hiscock's first appearance upon the committee and I suggested that the committee should select its clerk, and upon a roll call Mr. Courts was selected, and continued to be selected under all administrations of the House up to the time of his decease. Subsequently Mr. Hiscock thanked me for my action in the premises.

I recollect a little incident that happened later on when a Representative from Missouri, with that keen mind and sharp tongue of his, disagreed with the then chairman of the committee, myself, about certain items of appropriation. Members can not always get what they desire, and the man who is at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, if he is not informed and is not devoted to his work, if he is not ready with the full knowledge and the full courage—and at times it takes full courage to protect the House and the country by a strict adherence of the rules—is not a proper man to head that committee. I may say that in all my service the House and the country has been fortunate, certainly since I have been a member of that committee, under the lead of the various chairmen that presided over the committee, in having well-informed and vigilant and courageous Members of the House in that position. I think perhaps it is the most laborious and important chairmanship, session in and session out, of any of the committees, not speaking less for other committees but more for the duties of that committee. It was 3 o'clock in the morning, the last night of the short session. The sundry civil bill had not been passed. The conference report had not been agreed to by the House, but agreement by the Senate was messaged to the House. There were not a dozen Members in the House. We had had a strenuous time during the last days and nights of the session. The gentleman from Missouri rose in his place and demanded to be recognized in his own right for an hour. I protested and said that there was not a quorum present and that on the next day at 12 o'clock the session would close. He said, "I am aware there is no quorum, but it will take you much longer than one hour to get a quorum." I said very well, and he talked his hour and then he wanted 15 minutes more. I said, "Now, I shall give you 15 minutes of my time, but of course at the end of those 15 minutes I shall expect a vote without regard to a quorum." He assented, and he devoted those last 15 minutes to myself, and I think I never had such a dressing as he gave me.

Under ordinary conditions I would have tried to reply, not by defending, but by the only proper way to reply, by attacking, for life is not long enough to defend what somebody says about you. If you are guilty, the best way is not to stir the matter, and if you are not guilty you will be vindicated. In his closing remarks he said, "The capable clerk of that great committee has made the reputation of every man who has been its chairman," and then sat down. I took the floor, and there was just one sentence that I uttered. I said, "I agree with what the gentleman from Missouri says about the clerk of that committee, the most competent man touching public expenditures, servant of the House though he is, connected with Congress, the man who knows more of the public service than any man in the United States," and I bowed to the gentleman from Missouri and continued, "And I wish to God that the gentleman from Missouri could have a competent clerk himself." [Laughter.] The report was adopted in a minute, and it reached the President in time to be approved. Without the approval of that great bill it would have been absolutely necessary to call a special session of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I might talk all afternoon about the loyalty of this man to the service of the House and the country. He was modest, never rushing into print. I think throughout the country it was quite well known that James C. Courts was a competent clerk, and every Member who ever served in the Congress from the time he was appointed up to the time of his death knew it very, very well. By the by, the country does not know frequently of the valuable service to the House and the country—and I might also add to the Senate—of men who are not Members of Congress. Great expenditures are made here, as we all know, over a thousand millions of dollars a year, and they are constantly increasing. We have a hundred—yes, one hundred and ten—millions of people in the United States proper, I have no doubt, and our responsibilities have been greatly added to, especially since the War with Spain, with the Philippines, and under the Monroe doctrine, and in connection with Cuba, where we must keep law and order, and in Porto Rico, Nicaragua, Santo Domingo, Haiti, and through our complications with Mexico and our foreign as well as our domestic complications. Where mistakes are made in the House—and I shall not speak of the Senate, for it is not proper—changing, as we do, in personnel from time to time, they are made more from a want of knowledge in sifting the wheat from the chaff than because of anything else.

This is a representative Government, and it is natural that each one of us should first respond to the demands of his constituency, and when we come here, 435 of us, that is the first thing we have to meet. Then, with the enormous service to the great Republic, with the great expenditures, there come all kinds of demands—most of them worthy, but you have to be ever on the alert to see that as near as possible the chaff disappears and the wheat remains. Mistakes are made, but not many, in my judgment, from the standpoint of dishonesty. Where they are made, or have been made, in the main they are through want of proper knowledge touching the public service. In my 40 years' service in this House we have been exceedingly fortunate in the servants of the House. I had the honor to be its Speaker for 8 years. Mr. ASHER HINDS, the author of Hinds' Precedents, was parliamentary clerk during all of my service. He came here in the Fifty-first Congress, when Reed was first chosen Speaker, and remained in that position, with the exception of four years, from that time up until 1911. I believe it was in 1910 that he became a Member of this body. I think he was the best parliamentarian on earth. I was exceedingly fortunate as presiding officer of this House to have his service. Then I had another very important employee, a trained journalist, Mr. Busbey, who took care of the newspaper gallery. I just unloaded it on him. Then there was another very important man in the service of the House, the Superintendent of the Capitol. We came very near losing him under an administration that is passed—as good an architect as there was in the country, in my judgment, but yet he had not come through the proper training as it was thought. We were about to lose him, when notice was given that he was the servant of the House and the Senate, and that if another man were chosen for his place there would be no appropriation to pay him, and that we would run the House and Senate by a concurrent resolution. He is the present Superintendent of the Capitol. God help the man who presides over this House and who has to do with much that necessarily results from his position, who does not have at his elbow trained men who are loyal and true to the public service. In my judgment, James C. Courts has never had a superior, if an equal, in the position he held.

So much for his public service. A word more. Swedenborg, the mystic—and if you have not read after him, I commend that you do read after him—though I do not know that he knew any more about it than I do, but he was strong and plausible—Swedenborg gave us two bodies, the spiritual and the natural. The spiritual body could not be perceived except by a spiritual body, but when the natural body was laid off the spiritual body by its shape showed what it was to other spiritual bodies, its loves, its prejudices, and every other spiritual body could perceive at once whether it was a body harmonious with that particular other spiritual body—a beautiful theory. He said that it was given to him to be caught up into the spiritual heaven, and that he there saw one, who was accounted a saint upon earth, demand entrance into heaven. The reply came that heaven was denied to no one, but upon entering, that not being his place, he perceived the loves and prejudices of all the other spiritual bodies, and they saw where he belonged; and while he was not denied, he fell down headlong until he found his proper zone. Mr. Chairman, I am not a believer in everlasting punishment, but if that individual spirit could have dwelt in heaven he would not have found anything in common with the others, and he would have been in hell. He fell down headlong and found his place. I came as near loving James C. Courts in life as it was lawful for one man to love another. Complete confidence did I have in him. I knew his ability. He has crossed over. In 50 years from now not many of the people who hear me talk at this time will be living. We will all have crossed over, and if in the great hereafter I shall be so fortunate as to associate with James C. Courts and those like unto him, it is all that I shall ask. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is absent from the Chamber, confined to his home by illness, the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. It was his earnest desire to add his meed of praise to the work of our departed friend, Mr. Courts. In view of the fact that he has served longer on the Committee on Appropriations, in which Mr. Courts has acted as clerk these many, many years, than any other Representative save the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] I ask unanimous consent that at this place in the RECORD in this unusual and fitting proceeding he may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, my opinion of Mr. Courts and his services to the committee and to Congress have been so well expressed by Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. CANNON that I have but little to add. With his unfailing memory, vast knowledge, and sound judgment there was united a calm, patient, and kindly disposition which endeared him to all who knew him. His instant opinion was often sought in moments of great excitement and urgency, but he was never so perturbed as to be unable to draw accurately from his great reservoir of information.

It is not often that a man seems to fall into exactly the position for which he is best fitted, but this seemed true of Mr. Courts, and his opinions so impressed the committees with which he worked that he has exercised a very potent influence on the legislation of the past 20 years. He identified himself with his committee and was unselfish and unsparing in his labors. He never tried to cover up or conceal facts, but the exact truth was always his goal.

He told me once that in his early service on the committee, when Mr. Randall was chairman, a member of the minority not on the committee came to him and asked to be furnished with some facts on a subject which the committee was then investigating. Mr. Courts assented, but he thought it wise before complying with the request to put the matter before Mr. Randall and ask him if he should divulge the desired information. Mr. Randall replied, "Certainly; if you are willing to do the work. There are no secrets, Courts, in this committee." And in that spirit Mr. Courts always acted. His work was at the disposal of any Member, and he had no secrets. He dealt with facts and statistics, and what concerned him was that they should be accurate.

During the past few years it has been my annual duty to review the appropriations and not to overlook the errors of the party in power, while the chairman, making the same review, has dwelt more upon the merits of the administration. We were both furnished with our figures by Mr. Courts, and while I assume that, being a Democrat, he sympathized more with the chairman, yet I would never have suspected it from his conduct. I had no secrets from him; I consulted him implicitly, and he could not have been more friendly and helpful to the chairman than he was to me. He recognized no partisanship; he was solicitous only that the truth should not be obscured. And so I think his statement of a fact came to be accepted generally by the House as the most conclusive authority. I think he knew more, not only about appropriation bills, but about the general legislation of Congress, than anyone living; and withal he was a most lovable man. Of very decided opinions and wide sagacity, yet he was so modest, unobtrusive, amiable, and kindly, so glad to do a friendly service, so unexacting and considerate, so delightful and suggestive a companion, that all who knew him will mourn deeply the warm, true-hearted friend.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD as part of my remarks the minute adopted by the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain resolutions. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

EXTRAVAGANCE AND DISCRIMINATION IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, we are about to approach the consideration of one of the great supply bills of the country, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, making provision for the public service in the great executive departments of the city of Washington. Among the principles of sound philosophy that are attributed to Thomas Jefferson is the statement that public expenditures ought to be honestly and economically made that labor may be lightly burdened. I confess the first time I read that statement of Jefferson's I was entirely at a loss to understand the significance of the latter clause, "that labor should be lightly burdened," for in Jefferson's day it was the apparently accepted theory that property was the mainstay of the Nation and not labor. But a wider experience in public affairs and more thought on the subject convinces us that after all there is no source of national revenue or national strength but the product of useful toil. While we may for a brief period make any Government subsist on taxation or even confiscation of accumulations of property, yet, unless that property is renewed by the exercise of useful toil, there comes a short and a certain end to the resources of the Government.

No government ever has lived or ever can live by simple taxation or confiscation of the accumulations of property. In the last analysis the final resource for the life of every nation is the productive labor of its citizens. There is no justification for a single dollar of expense which is not reflected in an economical administration of the Government or in the promotion of the industrial life of the Nation. There is no money in our Federal Treasury that does not belong to the people. There is no magic means of getting money out of the blue sky, nor is there any way, under the laws of economics, of taxing the foreigner. Every dollar in the Federal Treasury, or that ever will be in the Federal Treasury, comes out of the pockets of the American producer, and we should approach the expenditures of our Government with that fundamental principle in mind. I think it is not inappropriate at this time to bring again to the attention of the House what has always seemed to me an unjustifiable and indefensible extravagance, an unjustifiable and indefensible discrimination in the public service. Most of us are in favor of an honest wage of Government employees measured in the purchasing power of the dollar. All of us would so act in our private affairs. Most of us, if we were clothed with the authority as a private trust in managing a private business for stockholders or others, would regard the two essential features, an honest wage to the employee and an honest day's service to the man who is paying the bill. And none of us, I take it, would justify to our own consciences, if we were in the management of a private business and trusted with the duty and responsibility of private owners of capital, a discrimination in favor of particular employees. And yet we are doing that in the Government service. A year ago I compiled some figures which I think are substantially accurate at the present day, which show there are 476,316 civil-service employees in the United States. Of that number, 34,435 are employed in the city of Washington. Out of the 34,435 employed in the city of Washington about 7,000 are employed in mechanical pursuits, such as the Government Navy Yard, Ordnance Factory, the Government Printing Office, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and so on, where the eight-hour day is maintained as a principle of Government service. The remaining 28,000 employees in the District of Columbia, or something less than 7 per cent of the entire civil-service force of the United States, have a seven-hour day. Those outside the District of Columbia, comprising over 400,000 employees, embrace the great postal employees of the United States.

When I first came to Washington those men were working 9, 10, and 11 hours a day, 7 days in the week. One of the first fights in which I engaged in this House was an effort, which finally culminated in success, to provide a standard eight-hour day for the men in the different post offices of the United States, the carriers, the clerks, the railway mail clerks. I regret to say that not even yet has the ideal been achieved, for by the very necessities of public business a leeway must be preserved, a margin of emergency, in which the employee must work overtime at specific times. Under that emergency clause, with the tremendous growth of the postal business, there has never yet been reached the point of an eight-hour day for the Government employees throughout the Nation. But for many years in Washington a four-hour day was the rule in many of the departments. Those were the old days of pure favoritism and political privilege.

Then by a sudden stroke in the Spanish-American War, under the stress of public necessity, it was raised to six hours and six and one-half hours, and later to seven. So it has been a contrary fight here to bring the favored political employee up to the standard while preserving for those outside in the Nation at large, the great 400,000 employees outside of Washington, the standard as a minimum. This bill should contain, and I hope will contain, because I propose to offer an amendment to it, a provision requiring the maintenance of a standard eight-hour day in the departments in Washington.

Most of us have been engaged in the last few months in defending an eight-hour day on the stump. The President of the United States says it is "embedded in the national consciousness," and I fully agree with him. I am convinced there is such a thing as an honest day's work just as there is an honest day's pay, and I have never seen the honest workingman who did not agree with me. And when I say that, I mean the man who works at the bench. I do not mean the professional workingman, who has long ceased to work at the bench and never expects to return to the bench. I have no doubt that there are quite a number of them who will not agree, but I have never yet seen the man who had the leathern apron on and was working at his trade who defended any such discrimination.

That is not all. The postal employees throughout the Nation get 15 days of annual leave. We have got them down to a six-day week. They sometimes work on Sundays, and they are entitled to all compensatory time off. They do not get all the holidays, because the exigencies of the post office will not permit it. Many of them have to submit to night work, of course. But how is it with the employees, the privileged class, in the executive departments of Washington? The clerks here have a 30-day vacation and 30 days' sick leave—400 per cent greater than the annual leave of those outside of Washington. They work 238½ days out of the year, or an average of less than 20 days in the month. It is equivalent to 208½ days of eight hours, or 17½ days out of the month.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Briefly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman advise the committee how he arrives at his designated figure of 208½ days that the average clerk in the department works?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, yes. It is very simple. You count out the Sundays, the specific holidays, sick leave, and annual leave, and some 10 or 12 special holidays.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware that the testimony before the committee having in charge the bill is that the average leave in the department is only 2 or 3 days in the 30 days?

Mr. BORLAND. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the testimony before the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the testimony must be confined to the recent past. It was not the testimony a year ago and has not been the testimony year by year.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was the testimony a year ago, when we went into the matter in detail before the gentleman from Missouri, who gained the limelight on the question, and it is the testimony to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. I will undertake to say that the sick leave allowed to the men outside of the District of Columbia has probably averaged even less.

When we are talking about what the law gives it is not to a particular case of what was done by a particular individual or a certain department. The law does provide for it one case and does not provide for it in another case. There is no escape from that proposition.

Now, as a matter of fact, the seven-hour day is indefensible from a business standpoint. There is not a man in this House, I am very certain in saying, who, if he were put in a position of trust as manager of a private corporation, would dream of extending such a privilege to part or all of his employees under the circumstances under which they work in Washington. He would feel that he was unjust to the stockholders if he did so. If he extended it to only 7 per cent of his employees, he would know he was unjust to the remaining number. What justification is there for a seven-hour day in the departments of Washington and not for the 400,000 men outside of Washington? And yet if you estimate even casually the amount it would cost the American taxpayer to extend a seven-hour day to all of the Federal employees, it would be appalling. As a matter of fact, the number of people on the Government pay roll is not a sign of prosperity. Every nation of the world has had to combat the constant pressure to put people on the public pay roll. It is a burden on the producer to have men on the public pay roll, and must be so regarded. The place for a taxpaying citizen is producing the wealth of the nation, not eating up the taxes of the nation, and every nation that has gone down in decadence and decay has done so because it was pretended that the nation could support the people instead of the people supporting the nation. No such thing can occur.

Now, where is it a sign of prosperity? Manifestly these men and women who are employed in the departments here in Washington, and who, most of them, are as high-grade people as are to be found anywhere—good, square, honest, industrious people—will obey the law of Congress. They are here for that purpose, and most of them are willing to do so; and the great agitation against Congress really running the Federal Government comes from people outside of both Congress and the executive departments.

I know there are a few cheap agitators in the executive departments. Among any body of men you will even find some blackguards. That is to be expected. But the number is so small and the number of self-respecting, industrious men is so large it does not count in the equation.

The real truth about the matter is that a great majority of clerks would respect Congress for having the courage in the conscientious discharge of its duty to say what was an honest day and let them live up to it.

But you will find that great opposition to any reform will come from the people who are not employees of the Government and who are not Members of Congress. That is the great pressure against which you must contend. You must make up your minds that there is a class in the District of Columbia whose whole financial interest is concentrated in getting the largest possible amount out of the Federal Treasury for the least possible return, and the interest of that class is diametrically opposed to the interest of the taxpayers who pay the bill. When you look at it from that clear standpoint you will see that there is no reason for giving serious attention to the clamor of these special interests.

Now, as a matter of fact, the seven-hour day is indefensible from a business standpoint. I have brought business men here repeatedly, and business men have come here, men who are under heavy expense, who have had important matters pending before the departments. I must leave the House of Representatives earlier than I am now speaking [3 p. m.] in order to get down to the departments to transact any business before the departments close for the afternoon. Then I must say to my constituents, business men, as they may be, and heavy as their expenses may be, "You must go back to your hotel and come back again at 9.30 or 10 o'clock to-morrow morning to finish this matter." No business man submits to that in a commercial city, and yet for years he has had to submit to it here in Washington. Doubtless everybody here who has business constituents understands that without my elaboration of it.

There is no business reason for a seven-hour day. I know that there was a large number of gentlemen who got excited and quite hysterical a year ago for fear that the Government clerks could not work eight hours a day, who claimed that it was an oppressive and an unreasonable demand to expect that they should work eight hours a day. As a matter of fact, I think most of the gentlemen here work eight hours a day and a little more. I think most of their constituents work eight hours a day—the men who pay the taxes which support the Government. I think the farmers of the country work eight hours a day. I think the merchants work eight hours a day. I really think the doctor and the lawyer work eight hours a day. I do not think there is anything inhuman in working an eight-hour day, or the standard day's work would be inhuman and oppressive here in Washington.

I will not speak in detail at this time of the question of the expenditures of the Federal Government. It is very easy for men who go out of these Halls, when they are on the stump, to criticize and attack some vague, undefined responsibility here in Washington for extravagance in the governmental expenditures. It is very easy for a man to ridicule any specific proposal for economy and efficiency. Any proposal that is made can be turned into ridicule if it leads to economy and efficiency. It is very easy to advocate economy and efficiency on the stump in a vague and general way, and yet vote down every concrete proposal for economy that comes before the House. The real responsibility to which our constituents are going to hold us is that of examining every item of public expenditure when we have occasion to vote on it. Each man has the same responsibility as the Committee on Appropriations. I see no reason why the Committee on Appropriations should constitute itself as the monitor or mentor of this House. It does its full duty in not permitting or promoting expenditures which it does not think are warranted. But no vague, irresponsible line of conduct can defend the particular Members of this House if they vote for the continuance of the seven hours. Voting for a discrimination, they are voting for an unjustifiable expenditure of the Federal money. They are voting for an expenditure which they would not authorize if they were representing private stockholders.

I want to say here that the activities of the Federal Government are growing, and, so far as I am concerned, I look upon it with sympathetic interest and enthusiasm. I have no fear of the growing activities of the Federal Government, although I realize that in many ways it is contrary to the old doctrine of State rights, which meant that there were a great many things that ought to be left undone if certain of the States did not choose to do them. I am a great believer in State rights, which I interpret to mean State duties and State responsibilities. I think the American States have larger rights now than they ever had, if they choose to exercise them. Some of our States have exercised them, and some have not.

I am perfectly willing that the Federal Government shall do what it can best do to promote uniformity throughout this great country. If we can give the country good roads as a uniform proposition, we ought to do it. If we can give them vocational education as a uniform proposition, we ought to do it. If we can extend the operation of the white-slave law, the opium and habit-forming drug law, and the pure-food law throughout the Nation as an adjunct to the police power to safeguard the morals and safety of the Nation, we ought to do it, although I have no doubt in my own mind as a lawyer that any State has the power to do these things itself if it would.

But each one of these activities involves a larger and larger clerical force on the part of the Federal Government. Every activity that the Federal Government takes on involves the expenditure of Federal money. That money must be raised by taxation. Now, under our present system it must be raised by direct taxation, by an income tax. It must be raised from the producers and the business men of the Nation. It must be expended for more and more services and employments under the Federal Government. We must adopt a plan for the activities of the Federal Government which will really be helpful and not harmful, and exercise business judgment, efficiency, and economy in the administration of the affairs of the Government. We have no more right to show discrimination, extravagance, or incompetence in the affairs of the Government than we would in private affairs under our control. Only thus can we make the greatly increased activities of the Federal Government really helpful and successful, and I hope and trust that we shall make them helpful and successful. I hope that we shall more and more reach out and take up the great subject of rural sanitation; take up the great subject of education, vocational and otherwise; take up the great subject of transportation by wagon road or steam line; take up the great subject of rural banking, and all those subjects where the activities of the Federal Government can be used in a helpful way, and make them successful as a national object. And yet it is perfectly manifest that we can not do this unless we are willing to exercise the same firm, rigid sense of justice in dealing with the men of all classes who serve the Government in these activities as we would if we were really honestly endeavoring to make a success of business that has been intrusted to us in a private way.

The discrimination of which I speak may easily be corrected before it gets more serious. As I said, it amounts to less than 7 per cent of the total number of employees; and yet I see no reason why it should not spread. I see no reason why it should be confined to 7 per cent of the Government employees. I have never seen any Government employee outside of Washington who understood the situation who did not feel in his own heart that there was some injustice to him. Not long ago a committee of gentlemen called on me and said, "Mr. BORLAND, we are still working more than eight hours a day in the Kansas City post office in spite of all the work that you and we have done to correct that, and we still find that those employees in Washington who seem to have the ear of Congress simply make demands on Congress and have friends powerful enough to get their demands."

I had no answer to that; none whatever. I said to them, "Gentlemen, we must all be loyal, we must be sincere and conscientious in the discharge of our duties. You, I am sure, have the same loyalty to the Government that I have. You must feel that you and I are fellow servants of a great Government and that we are honestly working together to try to make the work of that Government a success. I am interested in seeing that you make the work a success and that you get honest and fair treatment, and you are interested in seeing that I give honest service. We are fellow servants of a great Government. Let us work together with honesty and loyalty toward a common end, but I can not defend, nor will I undertake to defend, to you the discrimination by which you are put at a disadvantage among the civil-service employees of the Nation."

Every civil-service employee who understands that situation will make the same statement to his Congressman. Every Congressman who is really in touch with the great body of workers, whether for the Federal Government or outside of the Federal Government, will find that that strikes the keynote, the true chord in the heart of every man. There is nothing appeals to a square man like justice. He is willing to go through anything if he knows he is getting a square deal. He is willing to submit to overwork in case of emergency, if he knows he is getting a square deal, and to do it in a sense of loyalty to the Government for the service. But he is not willing to do so if he does not feel that he is getting a square deal, and I do not blame him. I make no pretense of explaining or justifying the condition of affairs which exists, either to the men who are in the Federal service outside of Washington or the men who are in private employment outside of Washington. I tell them, "This is gross discrimination, and I am distinctly opposed to it."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If I understand the gentleman, all Government employees who labor outside of Washington have only 15 days' leave of absence during the year?

Mr. BORLAND. That applies to the Postal Service. Whether it applies to the Reclamation Service and the other great services I do not know.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And those in Washington have 30 days?

Mr. BORLAND. They have 30 days' annual leave that they are entitled to absolutely.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And 30 days' sick leave?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But they can not take that unless they are sick?

Mr. BORLAND. Unless they present some evidence that they are sick; yes. How great that evidence must be I do not know, but I understand that in many cases the law is taken advantage of.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the post-office employees at Kansas City are required to work more than eight hours a day?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; they are required to do so under the clause permitting work during an emergency; and the business at that great postal center has grown so by leaps and bounds that the Postal Service, parcel post and otherwise, has never yet been able to get sufficient force under the appropriations to carry on the current work without emergency work. That is true in the great cities throughout the United States. It is true in Chicago; it is true in Milwaukee; it is true in St. Louis, and in all the great postal centers where the business has been growing. They have never had a sufficient appropriation for a large enough force to carry on the current work without calling on the emergency clause. So a certain number of employees, possibly not all of them, have had to submit constantly to overtime work. I am very glad that in principle we have come to an eight-hour day and a six-day week, as to most of these employees. I am very strongly for it; but, as I say, gentlemen must not make the mistake, because these employees in Washington happen to be near us and their perspective is a little bit larger, of assuming that we are doing anything in the way of charity or justice when we discriminate in favor of the employees here and against civil-service employees throughout the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to take up the time of the committee by discussing this bill in detail. The different items will be legitimate matters of discussion during the five-minute debate, and the time of the committee can be more profitably employed in discussing whatever changes have been made as we go along through the bill.

I do, however, wish to make a very brief general statement with reference to this bill.

The estimates on which the bill is based amount to $42,067,081.45.

The total appropriations made for the current fiscal year, 1917, for the objects provided for in the accompanying bill amount to $39,158,620.25, which sum includes $1,232,930 carried in deficiency and other appropriation acts for 1917 for various branches of the public service that are taken up in the accompanying bill for 1918.

The bill reported herewith appropriates $39,479,685.75 and provides for 16,271 specific salaries.

Compared with the appropriations for the current year, 1917, and with the estimates submitted to Congress for the ensuing fiscal year, 1918, the following differences are shown:

The bill appropriates $321,065.50 more than was appropriated for the same service for the fiscal year 1917.

It appropriates $2,587,395.70 less than was submitted to Congress in the estimates of the executive departments.

It provides for 6 more specific salaries than were appropriated for this year and 512 less than are specifically called for in the estimates.

The principal increases in this bill over the current appropriations include the following items:

Federal Farm Loan Bureau	$100,000
Additional clerks for the Office of the Auditor for the War Department	42,140
For tabulating machines and equipment for the Office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department	26,650
For salaries and expenses of mints and assay offices, a net increase of	52,600
For new elevators for State, War, and Navy Department Building	20,000
For an addition to the repair shop for the Naval Observatory	20,000
For developing an integrating counter for use in statistical work in the Census Office	35,000
For additional employees in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce	23,480
For additional assistant inspectors and for clerks and contingent expenses in the Steamboat-Inspection Service	38,000
For additional employees made necessary by new chemical laboratory at the Bureau of Standards	37,180

As I have already stated, Mr. Chairman, I deem it unnecessary at this time to make any further statement as to this bill and its provisions, because as we proceed under the five-minute rule these matters can be fully discussed, and I therefore ask that the bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chaplain: For Chaplain, $1,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to come in after the figures "$1,200."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN: Amend, line 15, page 12, by inserting "and $600 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee would like to have the matter go over for the present. I have no disposition to press the point of order, but there is a matter that the committee wishes to investigate.

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing that it should go over, but will the gentleman permit me to make a very brief statement?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In the first place, in addition to the usual duties performed by the Chaplain, we now publish and have published several times recently the prayers of the Chaplain. He is practically required to get these into shape. That is a sufficient official reason, it seems to me, for increasing his salary.

There is a personal reason, however, which appeals to me very strongly. The wife of the Chaplain, who has looked after him, who has been coming to the Capitol with him, who has given all her time in his blindness, has recently had a stroke of paralysis which not only renders her incompetent to perform the duties which she has formerly performed in connection with his services in the House, but it requires additional attendance upon her. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph with the amendment pending may be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed with the amendment pending without prejudice.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $660,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation: Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointments.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 19, line 18, after the word "for," insert "one"; before the word "hire," in line 19, insert "and one who shall be a stenographer"; in line 20, after the word "duties," insert "for one clerk"; and in line 22, after the word "necessary," insert "for the stenographer, $75 per month during sessions of Congress, to pay which so much as may be necessary is hereby appropriated."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have nothing to say in support of the point of order except that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore comes within the rule which makes it out of order. It seems to me it is clearly out of order because there is no authorization of law for additional clerks.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will state that the paragraph reads on page 20, commencing at line 6, "and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks." This is not a change of existing law, but a designation of what clerks shall be appointed. We have all the authority under the law to have one or more, which means two. If we had two clerks and paid them only $1,500, that would be just what the law says now. Under this we are to have two clerks and only say that one shall be a stenographer and that he shall receive $75 a month during the session. I maintain that it is not new legislation, but is entirely within the law as it stands to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee for the law.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Tennessee is looking up the law I want to call the attention of the Chairman to this fact. A session or two ago—I am not sure whether it was two or three—there was a law put upon an appropriation bill in order to take care of the salaries which had been fixed for a number of years by appropriation bills, and where the original law passed years ago fixed their salaries at a much less amount. The Congress, in order to prevent points of order being made on all of these salaries, provided that the amount carried in the last preceding appropriation bill, appropriating money for any employee or salaried man of the Government should be the salary, and in this particular case the compensation paid to clerks was fixed at $1,500. It is true that in this particular statute the $1,500 is paid to the Member as clerk hire. He can use that now by having two or three clerks. There is no limitation on the number of clerks that he may have. That amount is for clerical services to be used by the Member himself. This amendment changes that law by creating a position as a stenographer and directing the manner in which the Member may use the $1,500, which is clearly legislation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the statute cited by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has any application. That provided that the salary fixed should be the salary for the current year, so far as points of order were concerned. This is no salary. This item does not provide a salary. It provides an allowance to Members of Congress. It is not a part of their salary, it is not the salary of a clerk, but it is an allowance to the Member. I think the original law provided for compensation at $1,200 a year, though I am not certain.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. MANN. It was increased by acquiescence in Congress to $1,500 a year. While I am not sure that I would be inclined to favor an increase in the allowance to Members of Congress for clerk hire, yet I think there is no doubt about the amendment being subject to a point of order. There is no authorization of law for a Member of Congress to hire a stenographer. That authorization is what this amendment contemplates. An appropriation in the bill or an amendment providing an appropriation for something not authorized by law is not in order under the rules of the House.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman think if instead of using the word "stenographer" we used the word "clerk" it would be in order?

Mr. MANN. I do not. The law now provides for an allowance to Members of Congress for clerk hire. Whether it would be in order to increase the amount of the allowance I do not now discuss; but any provision which is not covered by that existing provision of law is not authorized by law.

Mr. SISSON. I did not have the statute before me when I was quoting it. I find this statute applies only to salaries of officers and of employees, so that it would not apply in this case.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is clearly in order. This authorization is not to pay employees; it is to give the money to the Members who employ the people. This law has been written into the statute each time an appropriation has been made for years, and the general statute itself provides the appropriation and limits it to $1,200, or at least $100 for each month of the session of Congress. All we are doing here is increasing the amount of the appropriation and designating what it shall be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether "stenographer" would come within the definition of the term "clerk hire"?

Mr. CALDWELL. The language of the proposed amendment covers that clearly, because it says one clerk at $1,500 and one clerk who shall be a stenographer. That is all. Under the circumstances it is just as though we did not use the word "stenographer" at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman anything further to say?

Mr. CALDWELL. No.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the act of 1893 provided for clerk hire for Members of Congress, and that the amount so certified and paid for clerical services rendered to each Member and Delegate should not exceed $100 for any month during the session, and provided further that the provisions of the resolution should not apply to Members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to a clerk. Later, on May 8, 1898, the House passed a resolution providing for the payment of $100 per month for annual clerk hire to each Member and Delegate. The law provides for the pay of $100 a month for clerk hire. Subsequent to the passage of that law by various appropriation acts passed each year that has been increased to $1,500, or $125 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose an amendment were offered to increase this clerk hire from $1,500 to $1,800 per year, does the gentleman think that that would be subject to the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am not discussing that right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that that is material to this matter.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is not the amendment pending before the committee at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is not. The gentleman has not come to any conclusion in respect to that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not so sure, Mr. Chairman, in my own mind, whether that would be subject to the point of order. As I say, the law provides for $1,200 a year. Subsequently that has grown up to $1,500, merely by way of appropriation acts from year to year, without objection on the part of any Member, and I think the question of increasing the amount from $1,500 to a certain definite or fixed sum in excess thereof is an entirely different proposition from the one pending before this committee at this time, which undertakes to provide for a stenographer, something that no law heretofore has attempted to authorize. It will not be denied by anyone that an amendment which seeks to change existing law is not in order on an appropriation bill, and that is what this pending amendment, it seems to me, clearly seeks to do. Now, in all frankness, I can see some force in the position that an amendment seeking to change the amount would not be subject to a point of order, although I do not admit it, for the reason that the amount actually carried in the bill is not fixed by law, and therefore it may plausibly be contended that an amendment seeking to raise the amount is in order. But that amendment is not before us.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment, as I understand it, provides that $75 a month additional shall be allowed during the session of Congress, provided it is paid to a stenographer. Does that provision not change the law on the subject now? It is entirely different from a general blanket increase, because it requires that in order that the Member shall avail himself of this increase he shall have an additional stenographer in his office. Is not that different from a mere increase of the amount allowed to a Member who distributes it according to his own convenience and desires?

Mr. CALDWELL. In practice it is the same.

Mr. BARKLEY. It changes the law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It changes the law, in my judgment.

Mr. SISSON. I want to call the Chair's attention to the exact wording of this statute. As a matter of fact, after reading the statute that I thought would save it, section 6 of the appropriation bill of last year, this item which we carry here of $125 a month is subject to the point of order, because the only law on the subject at all——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman in that connection, If that proposition is true that the paragraph is subject to the point of order, then that would remove the restriction that this amendment offered to that paragraph is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I make the point of order to the whole paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that a point of order had been made.

Mr. SISSON. I will read the law, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to each Member and Delegate for annual clerk hire an amount not to exceed the sum of $100 a month, to be certified by them on the first day of each calendar month in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893: Provided, That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to Members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to annual clerks.

Now, it was fixed in the appropriation bills subsequent to that that each year the compensation to be paid to Members of the House as clerk hire. Now, if you shall, under this section fixing the amount carried as the law, endeavor to increase that, it is clearly subject to the point of order, because you will increase the compensation of the Members' clerks. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. It is not subject to the point of order. There is an amendment to the clause carried by the bill. That waives any point of order upon the text of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that it waives it at all.

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. SISSON. Because by this amendment you are increasing the compensation of the clerks, and the amendment now before the House is clearly subject to the point of order, because that creates a stenographer.

Mr. CANNON. I understood the gentleman to say he made a point of order upon the paragraph as carried by the bill.

Mr. SISSON. I did make the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. No; the gentleman made the point of order upon the amendment offered by the Representative from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; on the amendment to the provision as carried in the bill. That amendment has been offered, and it is too late to make an amendment to the text of the bill. It has been weighed, it has been discussed, and an amendment has been offered to it.

Mr. SISSON. But you will absolutely change the law in reference to clerks, in reference to the entire statute—not the compensation, but the law itself.

Mr. CANNON. But suppose it is subject to the point of order; I am not discussing whether it is or not. Here is an item in the bill. Now, the gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the item as carried in the bill. A point of order is made by the gentleman from Kentucky upon that amendment, and it has been discussed. It is too late now for the gentleman from Mississippi to make his point of order upon the text to which the amendment has been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee who is in charge of the bill if he agrees with his colleague upon the proposition that the original paragraph would be subject to a point of order if it is made.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the amount fixed was subject to the point of order, because, as I said a while ago, the law fixes $1,200 as the amount to be carried for clerk hire, and that amount was increased years ago to $1,500, not by regular legislative methods but by way of an appropriation bill. In my judgment, the amount of $1,500 was subject to the point of order if anyone had seen fit to raise it. I do not think the other language was subject to a point of order, because, if I read that correctly, it follows the language of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the rule, if in the first place an original paragraph in a bill was subject to a point of order and the point of order was not made an amendment then offered to it, which originally would have been subject to a point of order, that it then removes that amendment from that class as being subject to the point of order, and the point of order could not then apply to the amendment. As to the other proposition, the law passed August 23, 1912, Statutes at Large, volume 37, page 368, reads as follows:

Clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $618,975, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation: Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointments.

You will note the law says "one or more clerks." It does not confine it to one clerk.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] reads, "one clerk, and another clerk, who shall be a stenographer." The limitation placed upon the clerk is that the clerk shall do stenographic work. The Chair thinks the amendment is not under the circumstances subject to a point of order and overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 19, line 18, after the word "for" insert "one"; before the word "hire," in line 19, insert "and one who shall be a stenographer"; in line 20, after the word "duties," insert "for one clerk"; and in line 22, after the word "necessary," insert "for the stenographer $75 per month during sessions of Congress, to pay which so much as may be necessary is hereby appropriated."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the language does not read correctly. The word "hire" does not come in properly there after the words that are put in. It seems to me it ought to be stricken out in order to make good grammar.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I consent to it being stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word "hire" will be stricken out. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. MANN asked for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 20, strike out the figures "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

Strike out the figures "$660,000," in line 21, page 19, and insert in lieu thereof "$880,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will not make a point of order in view of the recent ruling of the Chair on the amendment that has just been adopted, but I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have already, over my protest, increased the clerk hire for Members of Congress to an amount that is impossible now to determine, but certainly to an amount involving several hundred thousands of dollars for the term. The pay of $75 a month to an additional clerk for each Member of Congress for the actual session will amount to at least 10, possibly 12, months, and in case of special sessions to a greater number of months in the entire term of two years.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is the amount adopted for stenographers limited to the session?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is my understanding of the amendment.

Now, I wish to submit to the gentlemen of the committee that if they undertake, in addition, to increase now the amount allowed for clerical help for Members of Congress, it will increase the appropriation nearly double what it is at the present time. I made the point of order a while ago against my own personal interests, because ever since I have been a Member of Congress I have had a stenographer in my employ in my office, paid out of my own salary, continuously for the past eight years. I can see some justice in allowing a special clerk for the sessions of Congress, but I can see no reason why we as Members should, in addition, undertake to increase the pay for clerical help from $1,500 to $2,000 a year.

Now, the committee has recommended to Congress an increase of 5 per cent for clerks drawing $1,500 in the various departments here at Washington. I do not know whether the Members of the House will approve of that recommendation or not; but this proposition proposes to increase the amount allowed for our own clerical help 33⅓ per cent, and certainly we as Members of the House can not justify our action in increasing the amount heretofore allowed, if you please, upon the cry of the increased cost of living, 33⅓ per cent, and then deny to clerks in the departments and in the field service of this Government a similar increase of 33⅓ per cent. It will be absolutely indefensible if we increase our clerical allowance 33⅓ per cent and then deny a similar increase to clerks drawing a similar amount in the various departments of this Government. And if you undertake, gentlemen, to increase all clerks drawing $1,500 and all other employees of the Government by 33⅓ per cent it will take probably $50,000,000 to pay the bill for this increased salary. Therefore, I appeal to the gentlemen of this committee, having already adopted a provision giving a stenographic clerk, not to go further and increase your clerical allowance from $1,500 to $2,000, especially at this time, when economy is so necessary and when this Government is confronted with expending hundreds of millions of dollars by way of increased expenses due to the increase of your Army and the increase of your Navy.

The time has come when Congress should be very slow to increase the present great expenditures of the Government, and we can best show our good faith by beginning at home. We are faced with a probable deficit and the necessity of issuing bonds. The party in power will be held responsible for this increase, and I appeal to you to vote this amendment down.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the clerks for the Senators have been paid $2,000 for a number of years past. All Members upon this floor must admit that $1,500 for a clerk is not sufficient. A number of them, perhaps a majority of them, are married and come here with their families, and when they pay mileage and board here and return to their homes they have not anything left out of their salaries; and it does seem to me that because some departmental clerks are not receiving sufficient compensation that is no just ground for our not increasing the pay of our clerks.

Their work, compared with what it was 12 or 15 years ago, is doubled, and when Congress is not in session those clerks are still busy, at least my clerk is, all the time, and I know that he works from 8 to 9 or 10 hours a day, and the increase in the cost of living in the last two or three years has been more than 50 per cent. It does seem to me that it is but fair and just that we should at least increase the salary 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment, and I am in favor of it because I feel that the conditions that have grown up in the service of a Congressman of this Nation are such as to demand something more than mere clerical help to the Congressman. There has not been a day since this Congress opened that I have not been in at least three of the departments of this Government, running around here and there and somewhere else, doing confidential work for the people whom I represent. And when I go there I find not one but dozens of other Members of this House doing the same thing, taking from the time that is rightfully the people's that we should be devoting to the study of national questions. A large share of this work is in connection with the matter of departmental work that has come upon our shoulders by reason of a custom that has grown up here with us.

You can not hire a man at $1,500 a year who will leave his home and bring his family here who is able to do that kind of work and do it right. At this day and time we must have people who are able to deliver the goods. A clerk must represent a Congressman as he ought to be represented. To get the right kind of man you must pay him. The laborer is worthy of his hire.

They say if we increase this salary 33⅓ per cent, how are we going to justify our action in increasing only 15 per cent a departmental clerk? They are not similar. These clerks who are getting the 15 per cent increase are working but seven hours a day, and the clerk of nearly every Member in this House, who is doing his duty, is working from 12 to 14 hours a day. [Applause.] If you do not believe it, go into the House Office Building any night at 10 or 11 o'clock, and you will find men there drawing $1,500 a year working at that late hour.

It is not fair; it is not just; it is not American; and I for one am prepared to go back to the people who sent me here and say, "Yes; I propose to pay the man who works for you and for me a living wage." I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Does the gentleman know what the Senate clerks get?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; they get $2,000.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Do not our clerks work as hard as the Senate clerks do?

Mr. CALDWELL. They do, and in many cases harder, and do better work.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment adopted just a few moments ago gives to each Member of Congress a stenographer at $75 a month. If this amendment is adopted, he will get, then, nearly $125. In other words, you are going to increase the compensation in your office, for your own personal convenience, about 100 per cent.

Of course, I do not know what the feeling of every Member of Congress is, but there is a universal demand in every department of this Government for radical increases in salary. Each Member here, of course, votes his own conscience and votes his own judgment. But I trust that he will endeavor to dissociate the intimate friendship, the intimate regard, the personal relationship, if any exists between himself and his secretary and his clerical force, and vote just as if he were a stranger and bring to bear the same amount of business judgment on this vote that he would in his own business, as if paying out his own money.

A man has the right to do what he pleases with his own. Every dollar in the Treasury of the United States is a trust fund. I doubt whether there is a Member of Congress here who would not, if he were to discharge the clerk he now has, receive dozens of applications from men—more than that—who would be glad to get the $1,500 place. Go through the law offices of this country, consider the opportunities that many young men have in the various congressional offices, taking law or medical courses at night, taking advantage of the opportunity to get a profession, taking advantage of the opportunity to spend a while in Washington, and you will find that it is an attractive place to thousands of people back home. And if you shall set this pace of increase, will you be able to say to the department clerks, will you be able to say to the chief clerks who come before the various committees, that we are willing to do this for ourselves and not willing to do it for the other departments of the Government, showing that when the thing comes close to you, you are willing to do more for yourselves and your own offices than you are for the other offices of the Government?

It seems to me it places Congress in an unfair light and will subject Members of Congress to an honest and a just criticism, because I do not believe there is a single man's secretary here who is not thoroughly satisfied with the job he holds; there is not a single Member here who would not find that he would lose the friendship almost of his clerk if he would discharge him.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. If the gentleman can find anybody whose secretary wants to leave, I can furnish him with one after the 4th of March. [Laughter.]

Mr. SISSON. I have no doubt that in the case of the clerk of every Congressman who has been defeated, he would be glad to work for his successor at $125 a month.

Now, I want to touch on another feature. It is urged that some Members of Congress do not pay out the $125 a month to their clerks. I hope that it is not true. I hope that there is not a single Member of Congress that does not pay out every penny of his clerk hire to some bona fide employee in his office. But, notwithstanding that fact, the charge is made that some Members of Congress do not pay even the $1,500 to their clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Under the amendment recently adopted, providing for $75 for session clerks, figuring the short session at three months and the long session at nine months, the House has just voted an expense of $396,000 for a term of Congress; and under this amendment, if adopted, there will be $440,000 additional for a term of Congress, making over $800,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. An increase of 33⅓ per cent in a total appropriation of $660,000 does not add $440,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I said $440,000 for the term of Congress—for two years.

Mr. SISSON. For the term of Congress, or $220,000 for each session of Congress.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do, for a question.

Mr. DALLINGER. I should like to ask the gentleman why he did not object, in the interest of the people, to the item which is contained in lines 22, 23, 24, and 25 on page 9 of this bill, for clerks to Senators, as follows:

For assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, as follows: Twenty-four clerks, at $2,000 each; 24 assistant clerks, at $1,200 each; 24 messengers, at $1,200 each; in all, $105,600.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say to the gentleman that if he endeavors to lay violent hands upon that appropriation, Senators at the other end of the Capitol will say, "We will run our own affairs. We are the judges of our own business. You stay over at your end of the Capitol and run your business." I do not want to get off on that subject, but on several occasions I have called attention to the riotous extravagance at the other end of the Capitol in the way of clerk hire; but that does not justify a Member of Congress in practicing the same extravagance; and if the gentleman wants a reason why Senators' clerks should receive more money than clerks to Members of the House, their argument, whether a just one or not, is that a Senator represents an entire State, whereas a Congressman represents only one district. It is true that some States have only one Congressman, but the rule is quite the other way generally. Now, gentlemen, the expenses of the Government, including the Army, the Navy, and every branch of the service, are leaping upward by great and mighty bounds, and the chances are that the appropriations this year will mount up to something like a billion and a half of dollars or more. Unquestionably that means a bond issue.

Jerusalem was said to be the cleanest city in the world, because every man was called upon to sweep in front of his own door; and if every Member of Congress would practice the right sort of economy in his own office, then he could demand economy in the other offices. I am afraid of the man who is careful about spending his own money and careless about spending the public money. I would rather trust a man who is careless with his own funds and careful with trust funds and public funds, who does not squander the funds of others that are sacredly intrusted to him by his constituents. Why, gentlemen, the salaries that are paid now to your clerks are greater than those which are paid to men doing like work in other places, or to State and municipal employees, unless they occupy great partisan positions. Where will you find any getting such salaries as these? The $1,500 paid to a Congressman's clerk is greater than the average paid to men doing like work in other places. One Member said that he himself had to go to the departments. I will tell you why he went to the departments. He went just as I go, because by going himself he gets better satisfaction and better results than when he sends his clerk. The gentleman who makes the statement that the clerk will do that work knows that he is not going to send his clerk down for the purpose of securing an appointment or for the purpose of securing some matter that is out of the ordinary; and for any ordinary matter of business that you transact with a department you can write a letter, and if it is something that is a matter of course, the letter is all sufficient, and you do not have to do anything else.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman know that Senators are able to secure such excellent secretaries for the salaries paid them that they nearly always send their secretaries?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman in the departments to whom the Senators send their secretaries know that when they send in names for appointments those appointments have got to be confirmed by the Senate. Not only that, but Senators demand certain rights, which the Members of the House have willingly surrendered, and when a Senator walks into a department the doors fly open wide. His senatorial majesty is coming; but when a Member of the House of Representatives, like my friend or myself, goes down we cool our heels for hours at a time in the waiting rooms of the departments before we can send in our names. That being so, how do you expect your clerk to get in? Oh, no!

You wait because you are only a Congressman. You attend to these matters yourself, and as to those Members who do not want to attend to those duties, there are a great many men back home in their districts who would be glad to take their places, and who will attend to these congressional duties.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I very much dislike to disagree with the members of my own committee at any time, but because I believe this amendment is a meritorious one, and because I voted for it when it was offered in my committee, I want to take this opportunity of saying to the House that at a time when we are spending a billion and a half of the people's money in a year, as the gentleman from Mississippi claims, it is about time we did something for the little fellows. [Applause.] Now, it is all right for my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] to say that if any Member's secretary is dissatisfied with the salary which he receives, the gentleman from Mississippi can supply the Member with at least 50 applicants for the position almost at a moment's notice. Of course he can, Mr. Chairman. The world is so constituted that there are always a great many applicants for almost any position whatever, and their willingness to apply is often in inverse ratio to their ability to do the work; and if the gentleman from Mississippi or any other Member of Congress is dissatisfied with the emoluments which come to him in the way of salary, I dare say that there are hundreds of his constituents who will be glad to come to Congress and work for less than he is receiving as a Member of this body. But that is no argument whatsoever. It is all right to draw comparisons, as the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee] has drawn them, between the $1,500 clerks in the departments and our secretaries, but I for one believe the work which our secretaries do is in no way comparable with the average daily work of a department clerk. [Applause.] Far be it from me to even attempt to minimize the worth of the intelligent department clerk, but his work is of a vastly different character. No one will deny this statement. While it may not apply to the gentlemen who oppose this amendment, I stand here firm in the belief that there are many Members of this House who would never come back here for a second term were it not for the work of the secretaries in their employ. [Applause and laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this amendment is going to prevail, and I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] when he says that the people back home want us to vote for a living wage for intelligent men and women here. [Applause.]

I know that my secretary earns twice the amount of money he receives from Congress; my people think so and they appreciate his worth; without his earnest cooperation and untiring effort the work they ask of their Representative would be only half done. And speaking in his behalf and in behalf of the many other capable, earnest, honest, young men in the employ of Members of Congress, I hope that without division of party we will all stand up and be counted for the private secretaries. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the committee in adopting the amendment for a stenographer at $75 a month for the session has, under the practice in vogue among Members, increased the clerk hire allowed to each Member $450 a year. That is predicated on the idea that 9 months constitute the long session and 3 months a short session; in all, 12 months, or $450. Every Member of this House knows that by the adoption of that amendment $450 additional is available to the Members of the House to be paid to the clerk, making $1,950 for utilization of services of one man, or, to divide it up, as he sees fit, in the employment of one, two, or three clerks. The public are not going to be deceived by this plan for the increase in clerk hire. The public are fully aware of conditions and we can not deceive them. We have voted an addition of $450 for clerk hire. It is now proposed to increase that still more to the extent of $500 a year, or, in all, $950. How can you reconcile a vote in favor of the present amendment when the committee has just adopted a $450 increase?

And further, gentlemen, it is true that we can get all kinds of clerks to perform our services. We can get a clerk for $2,000 or $3,000, but the question before the House is whether we can get the right kind of a clerk at $1,500 per year. Most of us have found out that we can.

And furthermore, the argument that there are instances where clerks are married and not able to support themselves on $1,500 is not applicable generally. There may be some exceptional instances where clerks are married, but I take it that 90 per cent of the clerks of Members are not married.

Further, we are appropriating for clerk hire from June 30, 1917, until June 30, 1918. We know that these clerks, whom we have on the permanent roll, will be at home with expenses less than they have down here, with work not near as cumbersome as it is here, and so I call upon members of the committee to ask themselves whether they favor an increase of clerk hire from $1,500 to $2,500, for that is what it means. Can you justify such an extravagant increase of clerk hire? You have already voted yourselves an additional $450, and now you want to pile up another additional $500 that may be available for clerk hire.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment on the ground of public policy. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] just said that about 90 per cent of the clerks to Congressmen are unmarried. That 90 per cent will continue to be unmarried as long as the salary of a clerk is $125 a month and the cost of living remains what it is to-day. [Laughter and applause.] It is impossible for anyone to maintain a family in Washington on such an income. Let us make it financially possible for these overworked and underpaid employees to marry, "multiply and replenish the earth."

It has been urged by the opposition that we should not adopt this amendment because we have already provided $75 per month for an additional stenographer for each Member during the time that Congress is in session. It is obvious that this provision is of no economic value to the clerk. It may result in lightening his work. It can not help him in his struggle to keep soul and body together on $125 per month.

We are falling into the habit of straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel when appropriation bills are under consideration. We are about to appropriate three-fourths of a billion dollars for warlike purposes, and those who are declaiming most vehemently against this amendment to provide a small increase in the salaries of clerks will vote for the larger appropriation with the utmost complacency. The present rate of compensation for clerks was established many years ago, when the purchasing power of a dollar was twice as great as it is at the present. These are abnormal times. Food, clothing, and all other necessaries of life cost abnormal prices. To meet the new conditions of the hour almost every private employer of labor in the land has voluntarily increased the wages and salaries of his employees. Almost every corporation in the country is paying its labor higher wages than ever before. Let the Government be equally generous, let it be equally just, let it increase the salaries of these clerks, who toil from 12 to 14 hours per day, from $1,500 to $2,000 per year, thus enabling them to live in keeping with the standard of twentieth century civilization. I hope that the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, a number of reasons have been assigned by gentlemen who propose to support this amendment to serve as alibi in the next campaign, even if they do not help to appease their consciences at this time. The statement that a Member of Congress can not get a competent secretary for $1,500 a year is absolute rot, and any man who has served in this House for more than two months knows it. I know it. I have been here for 17 years. I do just as much work, with perhaps the exception of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader, as any man in this House, and I find time not only to go to the departments to look after the interests of my constituents, which I am elected to do, but to perform all of the onerous duties that fall upon me, and in addition to take a reasonable amount of time for recreation. I do not know anyone within range of my vision, outside of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is engaged more continuously actually in doing what he has been elected to do than I am.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not even my good friend from Idaho who desires now to interrupt me.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I was just wondering how much time the distinguished gentleman had taken to ascertain how much work other Members of Congress accomplish, and also how much time the distinguished gentleman from New York spends in the field in recreation not very far from the city of Washington on pleasant afternoons.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I take considerable time in playing golf. I play every time I get a chance, and I am not ashamed to do it, and I am not afraid to do it, but I do not make the hypocritical pretense that I am so overburdened with work that I have not the time to do it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the time.

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, be fair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I yield.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman is the chairman of a committee, and his committee has clerks to do his work. Is not that so?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my committee has clerks, and the clerks of my committee devote themselves to the work of that committee. That committee has six of the regular appropriation bills, and it has one clerk more than some committees that have only one appropriation bill. The clerks of that committee do not attend to my personal representative work, and every member of the Committee on Appropriations knows it. [Applause.]

This proposition is not something to help the clerk. Do not try to fool us by such assertions. You may fool the people, but do not try to fool a man who has been here as long as I have been. This proposition is to protect ourselves—to protect ourselves. This is a preparedness measure. [Laughter.] It is preparedness against the wrath of the people, and some of us will need it.

We have passed a bill limiting the amount that can be expended to enable a man to be elected to Congress, limiting it to a modest sum, and now that we have arranged that our opponents can not expend beyond a certain modest sum to conduct their campaigns, we are proposing to equip ourselves at the expense of the public so that our campaigns will not be neglected. [Laughter.] It depends upon whether a man is thinking of what he is required to do as a Member of Congress, or what he is compelled to do in order to keep in office, as to how much clerical help he needs. A great deal of the work we do is not because of the duties of our office, but because of our love for the job, and we do a great deal of this work to prevent somebody else taking the place away from us. We have just furnished Members with an additional clerk at $75 a month during the sessions, and now we propose to increase the allowance to each Member, to be disbursed by him to one, two, or three clerks, from $1,500 to $2,000 a year. Some gentlemen have suggested that what is really needed is an "assistant" Congressman in each district; that the Congressmen are so busy studying the great problems of the day in their offices [laughter], that they are so wrapped up in the interest of the common people, delving into ancient records, that they can not find time to attend to the little wants of their constituents! And so they propose that they shall be furnished with an "assistant" Congressman. What has been said—it is true—that many of us would not be here if it was not for the very effective work done by our secretaries; not, however, in the really, truly official work of a Member of Congress, but in the equally important work of keeping a gentleman in Congress.

The amendment we have already adopted adds $218,000 to the cost of conducting the House of Representatives. This amendment will add a couple of hundred thousand dollars more. For the current fiscal year there will be a deficiency of $30,000,000 and that will reduce the surplus in the Treasury to about $113,000,000. In the next fiscal year, not contemplating some of the things Congress will do on its own motion, the estimated deficit is the trifling sum of $284,000,000. The estimates for the Army and Navy alone are about $25,000,000 more than all the money raised in the year 1915 by taxation, and in a time like this, when not only will it be necessary to issue a large number of bonds and greatly increase the public debt but to seek out novel and new methods of taxation in order to obtain money to pay the ordinary running expenses of the Government, we propose to increase the cost of conducting this body, this body that is doing so much for the welfare of the people, by half a million dollars, and upon the plea either that we are not sufficiently competent ourselves to perform the obligations of a Member of Congress or the equally fictitious plea that the cost of living requires us to increase the pay of our assistants by 33 per cent, something not proposed in any other place in the United States or elsewhere.

Mr. NEELY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We ought to have the courage to make some sacrifices ourselves. The country will be compelled to do so and we ought to set the example. We ought to do a little more work, work a little longer, speed up a bit. There is not a Member here who will get any better secretary by this increase. He will either pay the same man the additional money or he will get somebody who will think he is too important and dignified to do a lot of things that a Congressman's secretary now does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Member will either be adding to his own burden——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEELY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Or will add to the troubles of this temporary clerk. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NEELY. The gentleman says that no similar increase is proposed anywhere in the country. I ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that numerous great corporations have within the past 15 months increased the salaries of their employees voluntarily more than 30 per cent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I have not heard of any.

Mr. NEELY. The gentleman has not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ten per cent is the common increase reported in the press. I do not think there is anybody conducting a profitable enterprise sufficiently insane to increase the compensation of his employees 30 per cent. Men of that caliber can not be found outside of the red brick house conducted by Dr. White, commonly known as St. Elizabeth's. Mr. Chairman, this is not a pleasant task. The most pleasant thing to do is to help those who are close to us, those who are intimately associated with us, those who because of our relationship we are glad to help and assist.

I live in a community where not only the scale of living is most expensive, but where the price or cost of public service is on a higher plane than any place else in the United States. It is one of the curses from which the city of New York is suffering to-day of men being paid out of proportion in many instances to the services they render. If we do not exercise care, that is what will happen here. We are not going to make Members of Congress any more effective. They are just like every other human being. They do just as much work as they think is essential, and they do not do any more. They may do a little less if you get a higher type of man.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is that the gentleman's opinion of the membership of this House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think an interpreter is needed to explain to anyone who understands the English language my opinions as I express them.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am surprised that the gentleman should make such a statement to go in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the statement, and perhaps it is the conduct of gentlemen like the gentleman from Minnesota that justifies such a statement.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And, again, it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must admonish gentlemen they must not interrupt the gentleman who has the floor without his consent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not either be frightened or coerced from saying what I know to be truthful about this situation.

Those who propose to vote for this amendment will do so with the light which I can cast upon it. I have no doubt the representation from some districts might be improved by a competent assistant Member of Congress, but I would not have suggested that myself.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Are we to infer from what the gentleman says that he does as little work as he possibly can?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do just as little as I can, but that is a heap lot more than a number of other gentlemen are willing to do—a heap lot more. [Laughter.] I do not boast of what I do. I would be glad to be relieved of a great deal of the labor I am compelled to perform and to shift to somebody else some of the responsibilities that fall upon me because of my position, but I do not shirk them and I do not intend to do so. And yet I am not going to try to be hypocritical about it or pretend I am breaking down or losing my health because of the burdens of public service. I was not ready to quit just at present, and so when a proposal was made during the last summer that I should involuntarily retire, I did what most others do under those circumstances—everything possible to stay here, and I am here.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman from New York, like Members on this side of the House, relieved from one very onerous set of duties to be performed by the Democrats in the House with reference to patronage? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps. Yet I would be willing to continue the sacrifice in order to relieve the country from the misfortune of having the control of the Government pass to that side of the House. And I do know this, Mr. Chairman, that the probabilities of the Democratic Party continuing in control of the Government will absolutely be eliminated, unless somebody, not only here but in other places in the Government, gives some attention not alone to the high cost of living, but as well to the burning question of the high cost of government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHEELER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 72.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. WHEELER took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery for Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, including $5,000 for stationery for the use of the committees and officers of the House, $60,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 4, strike out "$60,000" and insert in lieu therefor "$95,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law fixes the stationery allowance at $125 a session.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment. I understand it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York withdraws the amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistants, and skilled laborers and laborers at not exceeding $2 per diem, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $21,640.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 28, line 8, by inserting after the word "laborers" where it first occurs, a comma.

Mr. SISSON. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. MANN. It reads, "for assistants, and skilled laborers and laborers at not exceeding $2 per diem." The limitation would apply to skilled laborers, and I am sure you can not procure them at $2 a day. And so I move to insert the comma where the word "laborers" first occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For procuring manure, soil, tools, fuel, purchasing trees, shrubs, plants, and seeds; services, including skilled laborers and laborers at not exceeding $2 per diem, materials, and miscellaneous supplies, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence of the superintendent and his assistants not to exceed $200, street car tickets not exceeding $25, and contingent expenses in connection with repairs and improvements to Botanic Garden, care and maintenance of motor-propelled delivery vehicle, under direction of the Joint Library Committee of Congress, $12,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 13, by inserting after the word "laborers," where it first occurs, a comma. That is the same thing as in the other case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 13, page 28, by inserting, after the word "laborers," where it first occurs, a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. LLOYD, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 13, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 13, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the God of all the nations of the earth, we come before Thee for a large measure of wisdom, that we may be enabled to discharge the duties that are upon us. We pray that we may have wisdom in proportion to the ever-increasing responsibility that we have, and that with farseeing vision the statesmen of this country may discern the guidance of God in all the incidents of our national history. With devotion to justice, with love for peace, with a high resolve, with honor unsoiled, we pray that we may pursue our way with an influence upon the nations of the earth; and above all, holding forth Thy truth and Thy name as the supreme end and object of all living. Hear us, and guide us this day in the discharge of our duties. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent to present correspondence of the Secretary of Labor on the subject of the bill now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear what the request was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is to introduce in the RECORD correspondence of the Secretary of Labor touching the pending immigration bill. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MAY 17, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I notice in a morning paper that the Committee on Immigration in the Senate has agreed upon an amendment which "removes the Japanese entirely from the immigration bill, but accomplishes Asiatic exclusion otherwise by specification of latitude and longitude. That portion of China along most of its seacoast is not included in the excluded territory, but the Chinese-exclusion law of this country, it is explained, will be applicable to the Chinese." (See Washington Post of May 17, p. 5.) The committee has not yet made its report to the Senate.

I would like to learn from your department whether it is possible under this bill, if enacted into law, for Japanese laborers, whose immigration is regulated by the "gentlemen's agreement" to enter our territory, or whether, under your regualtions, you would admit them without a passport. I have in mind the possibilities of objectionable oriental laborers sailing from other than oriental ports, as ports of Mexico, British Columbia, or by way of the border, being admitted to the continental territory of the United States, where they have been regularly admitted to those countries by passports issued by their own Government. The Japanese Government is morally obligated not to issue passports to Japanese laborers who intend to enter the United States, but what about those to whom passports are issued for Mexico, for instance, and who come to the United States by a circuitous route?

Senator SMITH, chairman of the Committee on Immigration, as a reason for not including the "gentlemen's agreement" in the immigration bill, calls my attention to the act of February 20, 1907 (34 Stats., 898), as amended by the acts of March 26, 1910 (36 Stats., 263), and March 4, 1913, which provides, among other things, "that whenever the President shall be satisfied that passporst issued by any foreign Government to its citizens to come to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States, or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country, or from such insular possessions, or from the Canal Zone."

Believing that the Department of Labor is determined so far as the law permits to discourage the immigration of oriental laborers as a protection for our own people, and through them our institutions, I would like to have your judgment on this matter. A casual reading leads me to believe that if the "gentlemen's agreement," so called, with Japan is directly or indirectly violated, in letter or spirit, the President has the power to refuse admission to this country to those whose exclusion is desired. This is the reason advanced by Senator SMITH why it is not necessary to enact in terms the "gentlemen's agreement."

The executive branch of the Government in this view controls the situation, provided it is disposed to act, and the exclusion of objectionable orientals rests, therefore, upon the Japanese Government in the first instance and, secondly, in case of violation or of bad faith upon the judgment and determination of the President of the United States.

Please to advise me on this subject at your earliest convenience because the amended immigration bill may be presented to the Senate at any time. I desire in every possible way, without giving needless offense to our neighbors, to protect the Pacific coast and the country against the blight of oriental immigration, which is nonassimilable and which, if not restrained, will crowd out the white population of my State. I am,

Yours, very truly,

JAMES D. PHELAN.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 22, 1916.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, in which you discuss at some length the amendments recently agreed upon in the Senate Committee on Immigration and which it is understood will soon be reported to the Senate by said committee through a reprint of the pending immigration act (H. R. 10384). As it has been the privilege of this department to cooperate with the Department of State and the Immigration Committee of the Senate in perfecting these amendments, I take pleasure in advising you fully with respect to the department's view of the questions which you raise.

In the first place, it must be borne in mind that no one who participated in the preparation of the Burnett immigration bill or in its perfection before the Immigration Committees of the House and Senate has ever had the least intention, as I understand the matter, to have the measure apply in any respect or any degree to the control of the immigration of Japanese. The amendments have been prepared and finally adopted by the Senate committee with no intention of changing in any particular the intent of the act. The only purpose is so to change the form, without modifying the effect, as to eliminate even the least possibility of having the language employed in the measure giving any offense to Japan or to any other foreign nation. Incidentally, in perfecting these amendments, I believe that a general improvement has been brought about. The principal amendment is made in that provision of section 3 of the act having the object of excluding from this country orientals (with certain excepted nonlaboring classes) other than Chinese and Japanese. The Chinese are already cared for by the treaty of 1880 and the exclusion laws of later date, all of which were "reenacted, extended, and continued without modification, limitation, or condition" by the act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 394–428). Inasmuch as the understanding with Japan, commonly called the "gentlemen's agreement," remains in operation in connection with the proviso to section 1 of the act of February 20, 1907, which it is proposed to reenact in the pending measure, nothing further is needed on that phase of the subject.

The joint operation of the proviso above mentioned, the proclamation upon which rule 11 is predicated (quoted therein), and the rule in question is this: The Japanese Government does not issue passports to its subjects who are laborers, skilled or unskilled, permitting them to come to the mainland of the United States or to Hawaii, with certain exceptions in favor of the immediate members of families already residing here and in favor of Japanese who have established a domicile here and returned to their native land temporarily. Any Japanese of the laboring class who arrives at a port of this country and does not hold a passport containing the permission of his own Government to come to the United States or who holds a passport limited to any country foreign to the United States is rejected by the immigration officials and deported to the country whence he came. If it is found in any case (and I am glad to say that this department's experience has been that such cases are extremely rare) that a passport to the United States has been issued by Japanese passport officials inadvisedly or erroneously, the matter is promptly brought to the attention of the Japanese Government through diplomatic channels, with request that proper steps be taken to prevent any recurrence of the mistake. Requests of this nature have always received prompt and careful attention.

The provision which has been amended reads in the print of H. R. 10384 of March 30, 1916, as follows (p. 7, lines 4 to 10): "Hindus and persons who can not become eligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into."

The provision which it is proposed to substitute for the above reads as follows: "Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the Continent of Asia, situate south of the twentieth parallel of latitude north, west of the one hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, and north of the tenth parallel of latitude south, or who are natives of any country, Province, or dependency situate on the Continent of Asia west of the one hundred and tenth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and east of the fiftieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, except that portion of said territory situate between the fiftieth and the sixty-fourth meridians of longitude east from Greenwich and the twenty-fourth and thirty-eighth parallels of latitude north."

You will observe that by using the proposed substitute all reference to race or nationality is avoided, and yet it is made perfectly clear that the purpose of the law is to extend the principle under which certain kinds of Oriental laborers have heretofore been excluded from the country to the cases of other Orientals, the migration of whom has recently commenced, or in whose cases migration might be expected to commence in the future. The geographical lines have been selected with care and include within the excluding provision every part of Asia and every island adjacent thereto, the natives of which would have been excluded by the language for which it is a substitute, while the people themselves are not named by either race or nationality.

Respectfully, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], where, on page 7, line 4——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The pending amendment is now in process of modification, and it will be ready in just a minute. I ask that this amendment be temporarily passed over pending the preparation of an amended amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole save the one which has just been temporarily passed over.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am ready now to proceed with the consideration of the amendment temporarily passed over.

Mr. REED. Referring to the amendment which was passed over, after some conference with the committee, we have agreed upon an amendment in lieu of the amendment I offered. That amendment will now be presented by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In lieu of the amendment offered, as per agreement, on page 7, line 4, after the word "eligible," insert the following, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The SECRETARY. On age 7, line 4, after the words "otherwise eligible," insert "unless otherwise qualified for admission and voluntarily coming from contiguous foreign territory to seek employment in harvesting farm crops, persons whose intention it is to return to the country whence they come, after temporarily engaging in laboring pursuits in the United States; persons who, after having been admitted to the United States, return to the country whence they came to there reside or for the purpose of taking part in any war in which such country is involved."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On page 35, line 8, after the words "United States," I move to insert the following.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 8, after the words "United States," insert:

All aliens coming to the United States shall be required to state, under oath, the purposes for which they come, the length of time they intend to remain in the United States, whether or not they intend to abide in the United States permanently and become citizens thereof, that they have not come for the purpose of securing temporary employment as laborers and with the intention of returning to the country whence they came, and such other items of information regarding themselves as will aid the immigration officials in determining whether they belong to any of the excluded classes enumerated in section 3 hereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am this morning in the receipt of a letter from Hon. Louis Marshall, of New York City, which relates to the Senate amendments to the pending bill, but it probably comes too late for any action upon those amendments, as they have all been agreed to in the Senate unless a reconsideration can be had. I desire, however, to have the letter read to the Senate in order that it may appear in the RECORD and the Senate may have the views of this distinguished lawyer, and that in this way the matter may be given consideration in conference if the bill reaches that stage. I think the letter is well worthy the attention of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE,
356 Second Avenue, New York, December 11, 1916.

DEAR SENATOR: Although I am very much opposed to the passage of the pending immigration bill with the literacy test, because I believe it to be wrong in principle, I wish especially to call your attention to three provisions contained in the bill as reported to the Senate which should be amended:

I. The proviso contained in section 2 of the present immigration bill, intended to admit into the United States persons who had actually been convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude. Under this law the courts have held that Gen. Castro, the former President of Venezuela, though charged with murder committed in the course of one of the numerous revolutions in which he was a participant, and Milus, who had been convicted of publishing a libel on the King of England, were entitled to admission. The present bill, as it passed the House, not only provides that the provisions of section 2 do not apply to persons convicted, but also to those who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission, of an offense purely political (p. 10, lines 3-6). The Senate committee has added the words "unless such offense is a felony" (p. 10, line 7).

Under the provision as it has now been amended, no revolutionist could be admitted into this country. By becoming a participant in a revolution against the constituted government of his country, he would, according to its laws, be guilty of treason. That is not only a felony, but, as was said by Lord Reading in his charge to the grand jury in the case of Sir Roger Casement, it is regarded as the most serious of felonies. Sir Roger Casement himself, and those who were recently participants in the attempt to establish an Irish republic, some of whom were executed by a drumhead court-martial, would have admitted, had they fled to the United States, the commision and advocacy of the commission of an offense which, though purely political, was a felony. Under the law as it is now sought to be amended, they would all have been deported and placed in jeopardy of their lives by the legislation enacted by a Government which has heretofore prided itself upon opening its hospitable doors to political refugees.

In like manner, Kossuth and Garibaldi would, under a similar statute, have been deported to the respective countries where they were sought to be prosecuted for political offenses. The fathers of our Republic were guilty of felony under the English law which prevailed at the time of the Revolution, and which still prevails. Washington was regarded as an archtraitor, as he doubtless was under the law to which he owed allegiance at the time when he joined the Revolutionary cause.

So every Russian who has striven for the breaking of the yoke of despotism under which his country languished, who has become a member of a political organization which has advocated revolution, would be a felon. It is only a few years since the entire country was stirred by the cases of Jan Pouren and Rudowitz, whom Russia asked to be extradited because of alleged crimes that they had committed. It was shown that these alleged crimes were the incidents of an outbreak among the Letts near Riga, and although they bore all the outward semblance of robbery, burglary, and murder, extradition was refused, because these offenses, though felonies, were political.

If this proviso, as it is now proposed to amend it, were to become a law, then it would be unnecessary for a foreign government seeking the punishment of a political offender to resort to extradition. That remedy, which would be futile in the case of a political offender, as has been indicated in the two cases to which I have just referred, would be superseded by a more simple and expeditious remedy. All that Russia, for instance, would have to do to reach its political refugees would be to show to an immigration inspector that the person in question was a participant in a movement which resulted in loss of life or the destruction of property, and that, though political, the offense involved the commission of a felony. At once, automatically, the unfortunate victim of despotism would be deported and enter the ranks of martyrdom. The Congress of the United States would thus become an appanage of tyranny, and enable the despots of other lands to reach across the sea to add to the terrors of their power; only in such case it would be Congress and not the despotic government which would be the instrument of rendering the latter redoubtable.

The Sichinski case has been referred to as justifying a departure from our historic policy. But that is a mistake. His offense was clearly political. It was so adjudged. It is claimed that the amendment proposed by the House would not be applicable to such a case. Yet, as the bill has been amended by the Senate committee, not only would his case be included, but that of many others whose sole offense has been that of participating in an unsuccessful popular uprising. The very fact that they were unsuccessful stamped their offense as a felony. You will remember the famous lines:

"Treason doth never prosper.
What's the reason?
For if it prosper none dare call it treason."

Our history is full of great names of those who sought asylum here from the consequences of political offenses. The men of 1848 who came from Germany included some of our noblest citizens. Carl Schurz, Col. Hecker, and hundreds of others might be instanced. Are we now, at this period in the world's history, when more than at any other time it is important to afford a refuge to those who may be regarded in their own lands as traitors but who in reality are merely the prophets of a better day, to close our doors to them and leave them to their untoward fate by inserting in our immigration laws an amendment like that which is now proposed?

The provision as reported by the Senate committee is a distinct reversal of the American policy hitherto entertained toward political refugees and a destruction of the right of asylum which has long been recognized as a fundamental tenet of the political faith of all of our national parties. In fact, the platforms adopted by the Republican Party in 1912 and 1916 contained an unqualified pledge that the right of asylum shall be maintained.

2. The second amendment called for relates to the separation of wives from their husbands and parents from their children which will be brought about by the definition given to the term "aliens" in section 1 of the pending bill. It reads:

"That the word 'alien,' wherever used in this act, shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States."

Taking this language, it necessarily means that the foreign-born wife or children of one who, after migrating into the United States, becomes a naturalized citizen, continue to be "aliens" within the meaning of this act, since they are neither native born nor naturalized. Hence, if the family of a naturalized citizen should come to this country to join the head of the family, even though they may have resided here and may have gone abroad temporarily only, they may be deported. If this is not a separation of the kind characterized, but which could not have been contemplated, although literally provided for, language loses its significance.

Moreover, a native-born woman who marries an alien loses her citizenship by the fact of such marriage. Should she, therefore, take a trip abroad, on returning to this country she is subject to deportation because of her alienage should she have contracted a disease or have become the victim of a misfortune which brings her within one of the classes of deportable immigrants. That this is not mere fancy is indicated by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in Mackenzie v. Hare (239 U. S., 299). Under the existing law a woman who might lawfully be naturalized who married a citizen of the United States is to be deemed a citizen. (Kelly v. Owen, 7 Wall., 496; Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S., 473.) This excludes Chinese persons but includes those of the white race. Yet a foreign-born woman not naturalized, though she becomes a citizen by the naturalization of her husband, as do their children under the age of 18, will still remain an alien within the meaning of the immigration law if this proposed definition of an "alien" is enacted, and becomes subject to all the conditions and prohibitions which the act contains which are applicable to aliens.

In order to avoid these untoward consequences, the least that can be done is to amend this definition by adding the words "other than the wife and other than the children under 18 years of age of any native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States."

3. A proviso is added to the literacy test (p. 9, lines 10–18), as follows:

"That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the literacy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith."

This makes no provision for those who seek admission to the United States to avoid political persecution. In view of the fact that much of the persecution not only of the Jews but also of other subject peoples in Russia and Roumania, such as the Finns, the Letts, and the Esthonians, is on political as well as on religious grounds, and for political effect, it is desirable, in order that there may be no question as to the protection of these unfortunates and so that there may be no difficulty in ascertaining just where religious persecution ends and political persecution begins, that the clause quoted be amended as follows: That in line 14, page 9, after the word "religious," there be added the words "or political," and, on page 9, line 18, after the word "faith," there be added the words "or the political views that he entertains."

I trust that you may be able to bring about the adoption of these several amendments.

Very cordially, yours, LOUIS MARSHALL.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there are two amendments which are necessary for the completion of the bill. One is a mere matter of keeping the statistical record straight. On page 26, line 19, after the word "cause," I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 19, after the words "from what cause," it is proposed to insert "whether coming with the intent to return to the country whence such alien comes, after temporarily engaging in laboring pursuits in the United States, and such other items of information as will aid in determining whether any such alien belongs to any of the excluded classes enumerated in section 3 hereof."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, Mr. President, on account of the passage of the so-called Philippine government bill, the amendment which I send to the desk becomes necessary in order to take care of that situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 it is proposed to strike out lines 13, 14, and 15 and to insert:

That this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the general government thereof unless and until it is superseded by an act passed by the Philippine Legislature and approved by the President of the United States to regulate immigration in the Philippine Islands, as authorized in the act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment appearing on page 10, which reads "unless such offense is a felony," was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri state precisely just what is the provision, the adoption of which he asks to have reconsidered?

Mr. REED. The provision of the House text, as the bill came from the House to the Senate, is:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission, of an offense purely political.

The Senate committee amendment, which has been adopted, added the words "unless such offense is a felony." I wish to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted in order to submit a motion to strike out the words "unless such offense is a felony."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the committee added those words to the House text after consideration, for the reason that, while they heartily agreed with the provision in the House bill, they took the view that we should be hardly justified in allowing assassins, men who had committed murder, who did not merely revolt against the condition in their country and oppose the form of government under which they were living, but who went to the extreme of committing personal crime. Certain cases were cited in the letter which has been read to-day, which, as a self-respecting nation, we could hardly justify; as, for instance, where a man went to the extent, in his antagonism to his Government, of committing murder, though the incentive or cause was purely political, such an act being the personal commission of a crime, we could scarcely justify it. We maintained that, while this country is an asylum to which the politically persecuted may come, we should hardly want to invite to this country men who, by reason of their violent opposition to whatever form of government they lived under in other countries, take the matter into their own hands, commit murder, and then seek this country as an asylum to escape from their crimes. We are willing to extend the privilege of admission to all who are politically persecuted and who revolt against the tyranny of their government, but who, in the light of modern civilization, restrain their passions to the point of refraining from committing personal violence.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the trouble is that the phrase as used in this bill has no such limitation as the distinguished Senator implies in his address. The phrase in the bill is "unless such offense is a felony." Everyone knows—I am sure there can be no division of opinion upon this matter if the Senate will really pause to consider it—that under the laws of European countries nearly every act which has a tendency to overthrow the governments, even in many instances including ordinary freedom of speech, is a felony under the laws of such countries; and this phrase, as now written in the bill, would exclude every man who has done anything in an effort to change the form of a European or Asiatic government, provided the laws of that country punish the act with imprisonment, raising it to the rank of a felony.

Now, let us see just where that brings us. I do not intend to take much of the time of the Senate, but I want to present this matter. As stated in the letter of Mr. Marshall, Louis Kossuth would undoubtedly have been stopped at the shores of this country and returned to execution if this law had been in effect. Undoubtedly he committed a felony under the laws of the country from which he came when he started a revolution. Undoubtedly all of the Polish patriots who rose in rebellion against the tyrants who enthralled them were guilty of a felony under the laws dictated by those tyrants. Probably any man in Ireland who may to-morrow start an agitation to declare Ireland a free and independent nation will be liable as a felon under the laws of England.

Of course the term "felony" has no very well defined technical meaning, but I employ the term in its broad general sense.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is so much better versed in the law than I am that I hesitate to ask him this question, but is it not intended in this bill that it shall be a felony according to our laws rather than the laws of Europe?

Mr. REED. It is very hard for me to say what is intended in the bill, except as I gather it from the language. The language here employed is, to state it in its positive form, that no man shall be admitted to this country if he shall have committed a felony, even though that felony be of a political nature. I think it would have to be determined whether he had committed a felony or not by the law of the place where the act constituting the alleged felony was committed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say frankly to the Senator that if that is the correct interpretation I am in full sympathy with his contention; but if we are to determine according to our own system of jurisprudence whether a given act is a felony, I think the provision might well remain in the bill.

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator that I always hesitate to answer a legal question offhand; it is a difficult thing to do and be certain that you are right. A man gets more uncertain, the more law he knows, about that kind of an opinion; but my present judgment is that the words must be taken in connection with the entire phrase. The entire phrase applies to political offenders. Of course that does not mean a political offense against our Government; it is a political offense against the Government where the man lives. Then the exception follows, "unless such offense is a felony." Manifestly, reading those words in connection with the phrase "a political offense," it would seem to mean a felony under the laws of the country where the man lives.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if it might not clarify the matter if the words "according to the laws of the United States" were added?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I understood that it was the opinion of the committee that the offense should be a felony under the laws of the United States. I think those words were omitted by the committee because the Supreme Court has held in the case of United States against John Bitte that the word "felony" used in the immigration law meant a felony according to the laws of this country and not according to the laws of any other country; but there could be no harm in adding the words "according to the laws of the United States."

Mr. REED. Then we should, if we reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted and the language will thus become subject to amendment. So I ask that the vote be reconsidered, and I think we can agree on the form of an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, if I gathered correctly what the Senator from South Carolina said, he wanted to prevent a felon from coming here from another country under our immigration laws, and the Senator from Missouri, if I understand him correctly, wants to leave that felon to the laws of the country in which he committed the crime.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator does not understand me correctly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then the extradition treaty would reach that kind of a criminal if he undertook to flee to this country. There is not a treaty that we have with any country in the world that would not reach him if he is a felon and has committed a high crime. So that striking this language out of the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Missouri would not, in my opinion, leave the gates down so that a man accused of crime could come here to live under the immigration law.

Mr. REED. The point the Senator makes, if I understand him, is that if these words were entirely omitted and did not appear in the bill at all, if a man came here who was just simply a murderer he could not come in any way, because of other provisions of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under our extradition treaties they could reach right over here and get him and take him back.

Mr. REED. If he was simply a murderer.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; or if he had committed any other high crime.

Mr. REED. Or a man who had committed some other heinous crime which was not a political crime.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Exactly.

Mr. REED. The first thing to do, of course, is to reconsider this amendment. Then we can take up the matter and discuss it. I ask for a vote on the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in by the Senate.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, Mr. President, as the matter is reconsidered, I propose to amend this language by inserting, after the word "felony," the words "under the laws of the United States."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, before he commits himself finally to that language, whether the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is not right in saying that if the crime be a crime pure and simple, not a political crime, the man could now be taken by requisition from this country? In that connection I make this suggestion, which has been suggested to me: Is it not a felony to take up arms against the Government of the United States? The answer must be, yes. Now, suppose that we adopt the language that is proposed to be inserted by the Senator from South Carolina, which is, in substance, "unless the act would be a felony against the United States." Of course that means unless the act, if committed in the United States, would be a felony against the laws of the United States. Now, it would be a felony under the laws of the United States for a man to take up arms against the United States. Accordingly, if the language which is suggested were employed, if any man took up arms against a European country he would do an act which, if he did it in the United States, against the United States Government, would be a felony; and, accordingly, every man who rises in revolt against a European country would immediately be barred from admission to this country.

To illustrate, let us take the case of the former Kingdom of Bohemia, which has been held in subjection now for hundreds of years, but which has never ceased to contend for its liberty, and which, I think, in 1868—although I may be in error—arose in revolt against the Austrian Government. Suppose that during the course of this war the Bohemians as a nation should revolt. Suppose they should carry on a war for a year or more, but finally be overcome, and thereupon the defeated Bohemians should flee to this country; and suppose we had a law here that provided that men committing a political offense which, if committed in this country would constitute a felony, should be barred from admission. Every one of those patriots, or revolutionists—by whatever name we want to refer to them—would be barred at the gates of this country. I repeat, Louis Kossuth was guilty of numerous acts which not only constituted felonies under the law of the country where he then lived, and against which he rebelled, but which would have constituted felonies in this country if they had been committed here, although his act was merely the act of a revolutionist.

The same thing may be said now of all European revolutionists. I think the wise thing to do, and the only thing to do, is to leave out this language, because if a man is merely a criminal over in Europe and comes here, and his act has been a private act, he can be taken back under the extradition laws that now exist. But if you add the language that is now in the bill and say that he can not be taken back for a political offense unless that offense constitutes a felony, then you have said that you can not take back a man who has been guilty of merely minor offenses against the Governments of Europe and other places; but you can take him back the minute he has done a thing which would be effective, namely, to head a revolution or to join a revolution.

This language is plainly a reversal of our policies. Now, I have read this very able letter from Mr. Marshall, of the New York bar, and it states the matter better than I can state it. Let me earnestly ask the Senate to allow me to read again a part of Mr. Marshall's language:

> I wish especially to call your attention to three provisions contained in the bill as reported to the Senate, which should be amended:
> 1. The proviso contained in section 2 of the present immigration bill, intended to admit into the United States persons who had actually been convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude. Under this law the courts have held that Gen. Castro, the former President of Venezuela, though charged with murder committed in the course of one of the numerous revolutions in which he was a participant, and Millus, who had been convicted of publishing a libel on the King of England, were entitled to admission. The present bill as it passed the House not only provides that the provisions of section 2 do not apply to persons convicted but also to those who admit the commission or who teach or advocate the commission of an offense purely political. (P. 10, lines 3 to 6.) The Senate committee had added the words "unless such offense is a felony." (P. 10, line 7.)
> Under the provision as it has now been amended no revolutionist could be admitted into this country. By becoming a participant in a revolution against the constituted government of his country he would, according to its laws, be guilty of treason.

And let me add, by becoming a revolutionist against this Government any man is guilty of treason. So that if we were to construe the offense according to our own law, as was suggested, it would, nevertheless, be a felony.

Reading on:

That is not only a felony but, as was said by Lord Reading in his charge to the grand jury in the case of Sir Roger Casement, it is regarded as the most serious of felonies. Sir Roger Casement himself, and those who were recently participants in the attempt to establish an Irish republic, some of whom were executed by a drumhead court-martial, would have admitted, had they fled to the United States, the commission and advocacy of the commission of an offense which, though purely political, was a felony. Under the law as it is now sought to be amended, they would all have been deported and placed in jeopardy of their lives by the legislation enacted by a Government which has heretofore prided itself upon opening its hospitable doors to political refugees.

In like manner Kossuth and Garibaldi would under a similar statute have been deported to the respective countries where they were sought to be prosecuted for political offenses.

The fathers of our Republic were guilty of felony under the English law which prevailed at the time of the Revolution, and which still prevails. Washington was regarded as an arch traitor, as he doubtless was under the law to which he owed allegiance at the time when he joined the Revolutionary cause.

So every Russian who has striven for the breaking of the yoke of despotism under which his country languished, who has become a member of a political organization which has advocated revolution, would be a felon. It is only a few years since the entire country was stirred by the cases of Jan Pouren and Rudowitz, whom Russia asked to be extradited because of alleged crimes that they had committed. It was shown that these alleged crimes were the incidents of an outbreak among the Letts near Riga, and although they bore all the outward semblance of robbery, burglary, and murder, extradition was refused because these offenses, though felonies, were political.

If this proviso, as it is now proposed to amend it, were to become a law, then it would be unnecessary for a foreign Government seeking the punishment of a political offender to resort to extradition. That remedy, which would be futile in the case of a political offender, as has been indicated in the two cases to which I have just referred, would be superseded by a more simple and expeditious remedy. All that Russia, for instance, would have to do to reach its political refugees would be to show to an immigration inspector that the person in question was a participant in a movement which resulted in loss of life or the destruction of property and that, though political, the offense involved the commission of a felony.

But I go further than this learned gentleman, and say that the act of raising the revolt is itself a felony; that if this language of the committee is allowed to stand in the bill then there is not a single man who has ever raised his hand in revolt who can hereafter come to the United States, because the act of revolt is an act of felony; not only under the laws of every country where the act may be committed but also under the laws of the United States, to which the man may come, such an act is a felony.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate. We are all impatient to dispose of this bill; but I do think the language to which I have referred ought to come out of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if I understand the parliamentary situation, it is proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, to add to the amendment proposed by the Senate committee certain words which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after the committee amendment which reads "unless such offense is a felony," it is proposed to add the words "under the laws of the United States," so that it will read:

Of an offense purely political, unless such offense is a felony under the laws of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. President, if it be in order, I move as a substitute the striking out of the words sought to be amended by the committee amendment; that is, simply rejecting, instead of adopting, the motion offered by the Senator from South Carolina and also the words "unless such offense is a felony."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is accomplished by disagreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, or agreeing to it and subsequently disagreeing to the amendment as amended. It does not take a motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, Mr. President, I will say just a word on the pending amendment.

I trust that the amendment will not be adopted and that the Senate will immediately thereafter reject the committee amendment, to wit, vote out of this bill the words "unless such offense is a felony," permitting the law to stand as it now is.

I am very much surprised, Mr. President, that the committee has reported to the Senate this bill containing the amendment in the italicized words on line 7, page 10, which I have just quoted. If the Senate Committee on Immigration were seeking to make it impossible for the President to approve this bill, I can not conceive of any way in which they could have adopted language which would tend more to force that result. I can not add to the strength of the argument made by the Senator from Missouri that those words should have no place in any law passed by an American Congress; but I speak first, Mr. President, of the folly of incorporating in this bill the phraseology on line 7, page 10, which would completely destroy the entire policy of asylum which we have preserved from the very beginning of this Government and would raise at once again probably the strongest reason advanced by the President in his veto message against this bill. I want to remind the Senators of the language of that message. The President said:

This bill embodies a radical departure from the traditional and long-established policy of this country, a policy in which our people have conceived the very character of their Government to be expressed, the very mission and spirit of the Nation in respect of its relations to the peoples of the world outside their borders. It seeks to all but close entirely the gates of asylum which have always been open to those who could find nowhere else the right and opportunity of constitutional agitation for what they conceived to be the natural and inalienable rights of men, and it excludes those to whom the opportunities of elementary education have been denied, without regard to their character, their purposes, or their natural capacity.

That last clause is directed, of course, against the literacy test, but the other is leveled at the provisions in the bill which the President vetoed which, as he said, all but closed the door of asylum, changing radically the policy of this Government. The amendment which the committee has reported here is more radical in that respect than anything contained in the bill which the President vetoed.

I read further from the President's message of veto:

Restrictions like these, adopted earlier in our history as a Nation, would very materially have altered the course and cooled the humane ardors of our politics. The right of political asylum has brought to this country many a man of noble character and elevated purpose who was marked as an outlaw in his own less fortunate land, and who has yet become an ornament to our citizenship and to our public councils. The children and the compatriots of these illustrious Americans must stand amazed to see the representatives of their Nation now resolved, in the fullness of our national strength and at the maturity of our great institutions, to risk turning such men back from our shores without test of quality or purpose. It is difficult for me to believe that the full effect of this feature of the bill was realized when it was framed and adopted, and it is impossible for me to assent to it in the form in which it is here cast.

Mr. President, Garibaldi, Kossuth, Gen. Franz Sigel, and Carl Schurz would never have been admitted into this country with that provision in the law; and if this provision be incorporated in our immigration laws you will deny admission into this country of any man who from purely political and patriotic motives raises his hand against tyranny and oppression in any government.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. After consulting with other members of the committee, in order not to burden the bill with what seems to be a matter of grave concern on the part of some, and with the statement also that it is fairly well met by our existing laws against crimes other than political ones, such as murder, to which I called attention a moment ago, I personally withdraw my amendment, and the committee consents to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. I withdraw the committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that is done, I do not rise to strenuously oppose the matter or to oppose it at all, but I think I understand the purpose the committee had in view in using the language that is now in the bill and which it is proposed to eliminate. The law as it now stands is—

That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

That language will not be changed if the amendment or amendments proposed shall be agreed to, but there was one case decided by the Immigration Commissioner which I think perhaps may have influenced the committee. I do not know whether it did or not. I want to read that case:

Miroslav Sichinsky, a Ruthenian, who in 1908 assassinated Count Andris Potocki, governor of the Austrian Province of Galicia, will be permitted to remain in the United States. The Bureau of Immigration has decided Sichinsky's offense was political.

Sichinsky shot the governor during a private audience. He was sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment, but escaped and came to America, and was admitted because his record was not known. Recently Sichinsky went to Ellis Island, gave himself up, said he wanted to become an American citizen, and asked the immigration authorities to pass on his case.

And the immigration authorities decided that his offense was purely political and he was allowed to remain in the United States. That case looks to me very much like deliberate murder. I do not believe the man ought to have been allowed to remain in the United States, but it was decided that it was a political offense. I suppose he is living somewhere in our country.

I apprehend that the committee may have had in view cases of that kind, but possibly——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The committee had just such cases in view. But if the Senator will allow me, in the existing law there is exactly the same wording you will find in the House text here, and there are also the words "not involving moral turpitude," but the House committee concluded that that was a question purely to be decided by the courts and meant nothing in the bill, that it added nothing to it nor subtracted nothing from it. After concurring with members of the committee we are of the opinion that the courts can take care of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, I submit to the judgment of the Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the committee, and his associates on this as I would on almost any other question connected with this very important bill, yet I am troubled in my mind about cases such as I have cited.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator from New Hampshire that just such cases as he cites, and particularly that case, largely influenced the committee. As I said in my remarks this morning, it looked like a question of pure personal malice or murder; yet we recognize the fact that we can not legislate here for exceptions, that we must legislate for a general rule, and though these exceptions come in and are to be deplored, yet for the greater good the committee makes this concession.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not make the observation I have or cite that case with a view of combating the better judgment of the committee, and of course I shall not oppose the amendments that have been suggested.

Mr. REED. Do I understand that the Senator from South Carolina withdraws the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He can not do it. He has no power to do that. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from South Carolina has withdrawn his amendment to the amendment, but the question now is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire now to call the attention of the committee to another matter which is referred to in Mr. Marshall's letter and which I think I can better state by reading his letter than by offering an amendment. I believe this will meet with the approval of the committee, if they will give it close attention:

> 11. The second amendment called for relates to the separation of wives from their husbands and parents from their children, which will be brought about by the definition given to the term "aliens" in section 1 of the pending bill. It reads:
> "That the word 'alien,' wherever used in this act, shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States."

I hope the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will be so kind as to notice this matter that I am reading, because I think it will appeal to him. The language of the bill Mr. Marshall calls attention to is:

> "That the word 'alien,' wherever used in this act, shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States."
> Taking this language, it necessarily means that the foreign-born wife or children of one who, after migrating into the United States, becomes a naturalized citizen, continue to be "aliens" within the meaning of this act, since they are neither native born nor naturalized. Hence, if the family of a naturalized citizen should come to this country to join the head of the family, even though they may have resided here and may have gone abroad temporarily only, they may be deported. If this is not a separation of the kind characterized, but which could not have been contemplated, although literally provided for, language loses its significance.
> Moreover, a native-born woman who marries an alien loses her citizenship by the fact of such marriage. Should she, therefore, take a trip abroad, on returning to this country she is subject to deportation because of her alienage, should she have contracted a disease, or have become the victim of a misfortune which brings her within one of the classes of deportable immigrants. That this is not mere fancy is indicated by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in Mackenzie v. Hare (239 U. S., 299).
> Under the existing law a woman who might lawfully be naturalized who married a citizen of the United States is to be deemed a citizen. (Kelly v. Owen, 7 Wall., 496; Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S., 473.) This excludes Chinese persons, but includes those of the white race. Yet a foreign-born woman not naturalized, though she becomes a citizen by the naturalization of her husband, as do their children under the age of 18, will still remain an alien within the meaning of the immigration law, if this proposed definition of an "alien" is enacted, and becomes subject to all the conditions and prohibitions which the act contains which are applicable to aliens.
> In order to avoid these untoward consequences, the least that can be done is to amend this definition by adding the words "other than the wife and other than the children under 18 years of age of any native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States."

It seems to me that that is unanswerable and that the committee did not intend to exclude the particular class of individuals referred to in Mr. Marshall's letter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Section 22 provides—

> That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have resided in the United States for seven consecutive years, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, and said wife or any of said minor children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, such wife or minor children shall be held, under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor shall prescribe, until it shall be determined whether the disorder will be easily curable or whether they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons; and they shall not be either admitted or deported until such facts have been ascertained.

Section 22 gives relief on the very point to which the Senator has directed attention. They are detained until it is found whether they would jeopardize the welfare of citizens of the United States. The minor children, I believe those under 18 years of age, and the wife of any naturalized citizen are allowed to come into this country with the exception I have just cited, but if they have contracted some contagious disease or are in a physical condition to endanger the health of citizens of the United States they are detained until it is found whether the disease is curable. If it is incurable, then they must be deported.

Mr. REED. The Senator is correct as far as that goes, but that does not cover, as I understand it, the case referred to by Mr. Marshall. Take the case of a native-born woman who marries an alien. She visits Europe and seeks to again come into this country, but she has contracted or had when she went away some one of the ailments which would make her ineligible as an immigrant.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. She is native born?

Mr. REED. Yes; she is native born, but when she marries an alien she becomes an alien. Such a person would be excluded.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Notwithstanding her birth?

Mr. REED. Notwithstanding her birth.

Mr. LODGE. A native-born woman does not change her legal citizenship.

Mr. REED. The bill says "native born."

Mr. LODGE. She does not change the place of her birth because she marries an alien.

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly she does not change the place of her birth, but she loses her status as native born when she marries an alien, because she thereby becomes in law an alien and comes within the term "alien" as used in the bill and can be excluded as an alien although born in this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. "Native born or naturalized."

Mr. REED. It will not do to undertake to smile away the carefully prepared criticism by Mr. Marshall. He has been a student of this class of legislation for many years, and is a great lawyer.

I will say frankly to the Senate since receiving this letter—for it was handed to me on the floor of the Senate this morning by my clerk after he opened the mail—I have not had the opportunity to read and compare every part of the bill. I know the committee does not want to produce the result which Mr. Marshall thinks is produced by the bill.

Now, I will call attention to two or three things Mr. Marshall says.

First let me say the language of the bill says "that the word 'alien,' wherever used in this act, shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States."

Mr. Marshall makes this observation—I call attention to it again even if I may be a little wearisome:

> Taking this language, it necessarily means that the foreign-born wife or children of one who, after migrating into the United States becomes a naturalized citizen, continue to be "aliens" within the meaning of this act, since they are neither native born nor naturalized.

Mr. LODGE. If the woman is not native born the alien can not be marrying a native born. Let me say to the Senator that this matter was presented by Mr. Marshall to the House committee. Mr. Marshall is a very able lawyer; I have the pleasure of knowing him. He has fought this legislation with the utmost ability always from the beginning. He would like to defeat it all. I think some of his points are good, but I thought in the past this point had not any merit. That is my honest opinion. I refer to the point Mr. Marshall presents, and which he has previously presented, if I am not greatly mistaken.

Mr. REED. Well, let me conclude the statement. Mr. Marshall says:

> Hence if the family of a naturalized citizen should come to this country to join the head of the family, even though they may have resided here and may have gone abroad temporarily only, they may be deported.

What is the language of the bill that escapes from that?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I should like to say that I think the Senator's criticism is not met by the statement made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. What the Senator is speaking of now is the present law?

Mr. HUGHES. This bill provides that an alien may send for his wife. I think Mr. Marshall is directing his attention, and the attention of Senators, to a case where a woman seeks to return to this country, and her children seek to return. This bill makes no provision for such a case. It simply provides that when an alien has resided a certain number of years in this country and has become naturalized, he can send for his wife and children; and, unless there is some disqualification, they may come in; but the language fails to deal with the case of a woman who was in this country, who was married to a naturalized citizen of this country, and then departed and desired of her own motion to return to this country. Suppose the husband does not send for the woman; suppose she returns of her own motion? That is a conceivable case.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The law simply contemplates the putting of the naturalized citizen into exactly the same category with the native-born citizen. If a native-born citizen were to go abroad and marry, and afterwards wanted to bring his wife and children into this country, the status of the naturalized and the native-born citizen under this bill would be exactly the same. I suppose this was not called to the attention of the committee; but if it had been, I do not suppose it would have received very serious consideration. The case cited by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], as I understand, is one where a naturalized citizen marries in this country a woman who is foreign born, and then she goes abroad and decides on her own motion to return. Such a woman would hardly return unless she returned as Mrs. So-and-so. The law contemplates that when a naturalized citizen of this country marries a woman the woman takes on the status of the man, whether she is native born or foreign born.

Mr. REED. Exactly. Now, if she then goes to a foreign country and is at the time afflicted with or while abroad contracts a disease which brings her within the proscribed classes, she could not return under the terms of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. After she has been a resident of this country, she, of course, has the status of my wife or of your wife.

Mr. REED. That is just where I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is as plain as can be. How could the courts decide otherwise? Here is a naturalized citizen——

Mr. REED. I have sent for a Supreme Court decision which I think will settle that matter, if I can get the decision here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It seems to me that the very common sense of the case would appeal to every man here—that a naturalized citizen, having now assumed the status of a native-born citizen, if his wife leaves this country she would be a naturalized American. She is an American citizen; she has established her citizenship, and she goes abroad and comes back with the same status that she had when she left. This bill contemplates that after a man has become a citizen, if his wife and children should go abroad and he afterwards desires to send for them, he can send and bring them here, but with the restriction that they shall be examined.

Mr. BRADY. Before they have been naturalized?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. REED. But the Senator from South Carolina overlooks the point that Mr. Marshall makes; and I have sent for the Supreme Court decision, which I have not had the opportunity to examine, but which Mr. Marshall cites, where the court has held, according to Mr. Marshall, that a woman who marries a resident here who is an alien she no longer has the status of a native-born nor of a naturalized citizen. She does not come within either class, although she was born in this country. If that is the state of the law, the bill ought to be amended. I now have the decision, let me call attention to what the court has said.

The point I am making now is this: Mr. Marshall makes the statement that the only exceptions in the bill are that the term "alien" does not include a native-born or naturalized citizen. Then the bill is built around that definition of the term "alien."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But it does include native born and naturalized.

Mr. REED. But Mr. Marshall makes the point, under the decision of the Supreme Court in MacKenzie against Hare and others, that the court has held that if the native-born woman marries an alien she loses her citizenship by that fact and that she is no longer classed as a native born, because she has married herself to one who is an alien. Neither is she a naturalized person, because she did not after becoming an alien by marriage become naturalized. Such being the case, the language of the bill is broad enough to exclude that particular woman.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The point, then, the Senator from Missouri is making is that if a native-born woman marries an alien and goes abroad, when she seeks to return she then has the status of an alien?

Mr. REED. Yes; and she can not under the bill come in if she is suffering from a disease or has incurred any other of the disabilities named in the bill which exclude an alien. I will merely read the syllabus of this opinion. It is as follows:

In construing a statute whatever was said or given prominence in debate gives way to its actual language as passed. All reasons that induced its enactment and all of its purposes must be supposed to be satisfied and expressed by its words as finally enacted.

Under the Constitution every person born in the United States is a citizen thereof.

The provisions in section 3 of the citizenship act of March 2, 1907, that any American woman who marries a foreigner takes the nationality of her husband is not limited as to place or effect prior to the termination of the marital relation.

Where an act of Congress is explicit and circumstantial, as in section 3 of the citizenship act of 1907, it would transcend judicial power to insert limitations or conditions upon disputable considerations.

Whatever may have been the law of England and the original law of this country as to perpetual allegiance of persons to the land of their birth Congress by the act of 1868, now Revised Statutes, 1999, explicitly declared the right of expatriation to have been the law.

Now, notice:

The identity of husband and wife is an ancient principle of our jurisdiction—

It should have been "jurisprudence"— and is still retained, notwithstanding much relaxation thereof; and while it has purpose, if not necessity, in domestic policy it has greater purpose, and possibly greater necessity, in international policy.

As a Government the United States is invested with all the attributes of sovereignty, and has the character and powers of nationality, especially those concerning relations and intercourse with foreign powers.

Citizenship is of tangible worth, but the possessor thereof may voluntarily renounce it, even though Congress may not be able to arbitrarily impose such renunciation.

Marriage of an American woman with a foreigner may involve national complications of like kind as physical expatriation may involve, and is therefore within the control of Congress.

Marriage of an American woman with a foreigner is tantamount to voluntary expatriation, and Congress may without exceeding its powers make it so, as it has, in fact, done by the act of March 2, 1907. (165 California, 776, affirmed.)

So that, if I can make this plain, as I see it this is the situation: We define an "alien" to be any person whomsoever who has not been naturalized or who is not native born. The committee undoubtedly thought that covered everybody, but here is presented the case of a woman who was native born, but who has expatriated herself by marrying an alien. Hence she loses her status as a native born and becomes under the law a subject of the foreign power to which her husband owes allegiance, and is to be treated as a subject of that foreign power as much as though she were born there. Hence she is an alien within the law.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. REED. In one moment. That woman, who has become an alien by expatriation, goes to Europe, and while in Europe contracts some disease or incurs some other disability which would bar her if she were coming to this country as an original citizen of that country, as one born in that country. When she comes here and pleads "I am a native-born citizen and therefore entitled to return," the answer to her is "Under the decision in Mackenzie against Hare you have lost your status as a native born and can not come in as a native born. Neither can you come back as a naturalized person, and you must be barred from this country the same as though you were born in another country, because you have become a citizen of that country by your act of expatriation, to wit, the act of marrying a man who is not a naturalized or a native-born citizen of this country." So that it seems to me now, with the law so plainly before us, that the committee ought to adopt the language that is suggested by adding the words "other than the wife and other than the children under 18 years of age of any native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States."

Mr. LANE. Now, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. Yes. I merely desired to finish the statement I had in mind.

Mr. LANE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to an example, which came to my notice during the last presidential campaign, of a woman in my State who had married a foreigner who had not been naturalized in this country. She lost her citizenship, and as she had not had time to take out her second papers she was excluded from voting at the last election. Now, it seems to me that is absolute confirmation, is it not, of the position of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. LANE. That incident astonished me. I was not familiar with the law, but the woman assured me she had lost her vote, although she was native born. I knew her parents and knew she was born in this country, but after her marriage to the foreigner she failed to take out naturalization papers and was not entitled to vote in this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have just a word or two to say. This is another case where, in order to take care of an exception, it is proposed to jeopardize the entire rule. The moment the suggested amendment is placed on the bill you open a Pandora's box.

In defense of the committee's position, I want to state now that when an American woman deliberately marries a foreigner, knowing the consequences as to her native country, she must take the consequences. If she elects to cease to be an American citizen, let her take her luck with those with whom she has cast her lot. I do not believe that we should here advocate having a dual citizenship and allow one who was born here to retain her American citizenship when she deliberately establishes her citizenship in a foreign country. It might lead to complications under certain conditions in this country that we would not be very willing to face. Here is the wife of a foreigner, an influential one, who wants to come to this country. We have certain immigration laws that might protect us under certain conditions, but she pleads this very amendment in her behalf. To all intents and purposes she is a foreigner; her heart and life are cast abroad, and yet she pleads her nativity as an excuse for enjoying all the privileges of a native American citizen.

It seems to me that there are enough American men attractive enough for the American women to find their husbands here, but, if there are not, then I am not going to vote for a law to foster this thing of American capital hunting some effete European title. I should like to make the provision more restrictive, if possible. If they want to swap American dollars for some kind of European titles, let them take the consequences of their act, but let us not upset our entire immigration law to suit the fancy of some woman who thinks that her money has procured all that she can get in America, but who also desires to buy some kind of a title that will give her the right to play the fool.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, the kind of woman that the Senator is talking about—and it seems to me that his argument ought hardly to be heard on the floor of the Senate; it would sound all right on the hustings, where one was trying to arouse a little enthusiasm or get a little applause, an offense that we are all guilty of at times—the kind of woman who swaps American dollars for a foreign title, goes to a foreign country to live. She follows the title she bought. However, there are plenty of good women in this country who may fall in love with some man born under some other flag, but who lives here and makes this his home, and who may marry that man and may afterwards see fit to make a trip beyond our borders. Let us take a very easy illustration.

A Canadian—not a man with a title, but a man with a trade—comes across the border into Minnesota or one of our border States, falls in love with an American girl, marries her, and settles there, and she marries him for the same reason that good women have married good men at every stage of the world's history; but the husband does not see fit to renounce his allegiance to the flag of England. The woman discovers that by marrying she has lost her status as an American citizen. She makes a trip to Canada and before going has contracted or while there she contracts tuberculosis or some other disease that would bar her if she had been born in Canada and were emigrating to this country. When she undertakes to come back to her husband she is met by an immigrant inspector who tells her she can not come in. She says, "I was born in the United States. My parents were born in the United States." But the inspector says to her, "You must stay out of the United States because you are neither native born nor naturalized; you lost your status as a native-born person when you married a subject of England."

Now, we ought not to allow a thing of that kind. It is not necessary to mar or break up the harmony of this bill by admitting an amendment that will do away with a possible wrong of that sort.

Mr. President, I move to insert in the bill, after the words "United States," on page 1, line 5, this language:

Not, however, including the wife of an alien, provided such wife was born in the United States, or the children of such marriage under 18 years of age.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken in his construction of this bill. The decision which he referred to a while ago was dealing with the right of a woman to vote under a State law. I presume that a State may provide that a woman who marries a foreigner expatriates herself to the extent of preventing her from exercising the right to vote where she otherwise might have that right; but nothing that the Supreme Court can write in the way of an opinion and nothing that any State legislature can enact in the way of a statute is going to alter the effect of this language, which is not dealing with naturalization except as it uses the term "naturalized" in order to classify certain people who are attempting to obtain admission to this country.

The first section of this bill provides that native-born citizens shall not be classed as aliens. Now, a woman may marry a foreigner and may thus lose her right to exercise the franchise in this country; but by no possible construction of this language can any such decision as that in any way affect her rights when she presents herself, in the capacity of a native-born American woman, and demands that she be admitted into the ports of the United States.

It seems to me that any attempt to amend the bill with a view to remedying a defect of that kind will perhaps open the bill and make it amenable to other criticisms, because it will be hard to follow the precise effect of the language which the Senator has just proposed. As far as I am concerned, if I thought the bill had the effect that the Senator thinks it has, I would not have any hesitancy in voting for his amendment or some other amendment calculated to remedy the difficulty; but in my opinion every native-born woman or native-born man or native-born child, regardless of what State courts may enact with reference to their right to vote, will be admitted under the language of this bill; and I propose to vote against the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to say, in conclusion, that the Senator is entirely in error. While this was an election case, the principle laid down is that marriage by an American-born woman to one who is neither native born nor naturalized immediately annuls her citizenship and makes her an alien, just as though she had been born in another country.

Mr. HUGHES. This act makes her not an alien. It says precisely that native-born persons are not aliens; and no decision of the Supreme Court and no statute of any legislature can make an alien out of a native-born woman.

Mr. REED. That is exactly what was contended in the Mackenzie case.

Mr. HUGHES. They simply contended that she lost her right to vote. A State has a right to put practically any qualification on the right to vote.

Mr. REED. But the language in the act was language similar to this. The Senator overlooks the fact that when in writing a law you employ a term you employ it in the light of the definitions that have been in the past attached to that term; so that, as is laid down in the Mackenzie case, the definitions have always held that one ceases to be regarded as a native-born citizen the moment he expatriates himself from the country, and that that act of expatriation may be the simple marriage of a woman to a foreigner.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, would the Senator contend that this rich New Yorker who has gone and taken up his abode in England, and is now a member of the Britsh House of Lords, if he presented himself at the ports of the United States for admission, would be held not to be a native-born American?

Mr. REED. Why, certainly I would say that.

Mr. HUGHES. Then the Senator is wrong about it, because that particular individual has returned to this country a great number of times, and has always been treated, as he has a right to be treated, as a native-born American citizen. He is a native-born American citizen, and this statute is not dealing with citizenship. It is not dealing with any of his rights except the naked right to come into this country.

Mr. REED. The argument which the Senator makes gets him nowhere.

Mr. HUGHES. It does not get me anywhere with the Senator.

Mr. REED. No; and it does not get the Senator anywhere with anybody who understands the logic or the law of the Mackenzie case, because it is in the teeth of the case. The court says:

An earnest argument is presented to demonstrate its invalidity——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from what case he is reading?

Mr. REED. Mackenzie against Hare, Two hundred and thirty-ninth United States, page 299. [Reading:]

Its basis is that the citizenship of plaintiff was an incident to her birth in the United States, and, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, it became a right, privilege, and immunity, which could not be taken away from her except as a punishment for crime or by her voluntary expatriation.

The argument to support the contention and the argument to oppose it take a wide range through the principles of the common law and international law and their development and change. Both plaintiff and defendants agree that under the common law originally allegiance was immutable. They do not agree as to when the rigidity of the principle was relaxed. Plaintiff in error contests the proposition which she attributes to defendants in error "that the doctrine of perpetual allegiance maintained by England was accepted by the United States," but contends "that the prevalent doctrine of this country always has been that a citizen had a right to expatriate himself," and cites cases to show that expatriation is a natural and inherent right.

Whether this was originally the law of this country or became such by inevitable evolution, it is not important to inquire. The first view has certainly high authority for its support. In Shanks against Dupont (3 Pet., 242, 246) Mr. Justice Story, deliverying the judgment of the court, said: "The general doctrine is that no persons can by any act of their own, without the consent of the Government, put off their allegiance and become aliens." And Kent, in his commentaries, after a historical review of the principle and discussion in the Federal courts, declares that "the better opinion would seem to be that a citizen can not renounce his allegiance to the United States without the permission of Government declared by law, and that, as there is no existing legislative regulation on the case, the rule of the English common law remains unaltered." (2 Kent, 14th ed., 49.) The deduction would seem to have been repelled by the naturalization laws, and it was certainly opposed to executive opinion and, we may say, popular sentiment, so determined that it sought its vindication by war. Further discussion would lead us far afield, and, besides, would only have historical interest.

The condition which Kent suggested has occurred; there is a legislative declaration. In 1868 (ch. 249, 15 Stat., 223) Congress explicitly declared the right of expatriation to have been and to be the law. And the declaration was in effect said to be the dictate of necessity. The act recites that emigrants have been received and invested with citizenship in recognition of the principle of the right of expatriation and that there should be a prompt and final disavowal of the claim "that such American citizens, with their descendants, are subjects of foreign States." (Rev. Stat., par. 1999.)

But plaintiff says, "Expatriation is evidenced only by emigration, coupled with other acts indicating an intention to transfer one's allegiance." And all the acts must be voluntary, "the result of a fixed determination to change the domicile and permanently reside elsewhere, as well as to throw off the former allegiance, and become a citizen or subject of a foreign power."

The right and the condition of its exercise being thus defined, it is said that the authority of Congress is limited to giving its consent. This is variously declared and emphasized. "No act of the legislature," plaintiff says, "can denationalize a citizen without his concurrence," citing Burkett v. McCarty, 73 Kentucky (10 Bush), 758. "And the sovereign can not discharge a subject from his allegiance against his consent except by disfranchisement as a punishment for crime," citing Ainslie v. Martin, 9 Massachusetts, 454. "The Constitution does not authorize Congress to enlarge or abridge the rights of citizens," citing Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat., 737. "The power of naturalization vested in Congress by the Constitution is a power to confer citizenship, not a power to take it away * * *. The fourteenth amendment, while it leaves the power where it was before, in Congress, to regulate naturalization, has conferred no authority upon Congress to restrict the effect of birth declared by the Constitution to constitute a complete right of citizenship"—

Now, that is the contention that the plaintiff made.

It will thus be seen that plaintiff's contention is in exact antagonism to the statute. Only voluntary expatriation, as she defines it, can divest a woman of her citizenship, she declares; the statute provides that by marriage with a foreigner she takes his nationality.

It would make this opinion very voluminous to consider in detail the argument and the cases urged in support of or in attack upon the opposing conditions. Their foundation principles, we may assume, are known. The identity of husband and wife is an ancient principle of our jurisprudence.

That is the point, if I can have the attention of the Senator from New Jersey:

The identity of husband and wife is an ancient principle of our jurisprudence.

And if there is an identity under the law, then the status as native born gives way to that status the law fixes where it declares that the identity of the woman is merged in that of her husband, so that if he be a foreigner, she by marriage becomes also a foreigner.

It was neither accidental nor arbitrary, and worked in many instances for her protection. There has been, it is true, much relaxation—

And so forth; and so the court proceeds. I will not take the time to further read the opinion; but upon that doctrine, that the identity of the wife and husband are fixed by the marriage relationship, and that the wife takes the identity and citizenship of the husband, you make of this woman a foreigner. Being a foreigner, she can no longer be treated as native born. She has lost her status and her rights as a native-born American because of that act of expatriation. Now, unless the language of the bill is changed, women of that character will be excluded.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, if the Senator's reasoning is correct, then, of course, this section of the bill, section 22, is absolutely useless and may be discarded as mere verbiage. The Senator contends that the identity of the wife becomes merged in the identity of the husband. This bill that provides that when an alien becomes naturalized he under certain restrictions may send for his wife. Why, if the identity of the wife became merged in the identity of the naturalized citizen, his wife could come in without any restriction at all. But we are not dealing with the right of various people to vote. The right to vote is entirely different from the right to obtain admission to this country. There may be a very good reason for saying that the wife of a man who owes allegiance to a foreign power shall not exercise any influence in the government of this country, while there would be no reason at all for denying the same individual admission to the country.

Mr. REED. Well, let us vote. I am ready to vote on it. I have stated the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the words "United States" and before the semicolon, it is proposed to insert:

Not, however, including the wife of an alien, provided such wife was born in the United States, or the children of such marriage under 18 years of age.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All those in favor of the amendment will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is lost.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair hold that the amendment was lost? Did the Chair cast the deciding vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair voted in favor of the amendment. The vote was 5 to 6.

Mr. REED. Very well. That vote indicates—and I hope it will be recorded—the attention that the Senate is giving to this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. There is one other amendment that I desire to offer, if the Senator will permit me, and then I will be through with my amendments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, after the colon following the words "United States," it is proposed to insert:

Persons who can not become eligible under existing law as citizens of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That amendment raises the same question we have been debating here for several days. It seeks to accomplish the same thing which has been voted down several times.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was present during a considerable part of the debate the Senator from South Carolina refers to and paid very close attention to it. My understanding of the issue that was involved there and the objection that was made by the Senator from South Carolina was that the proposed amendment interfered with some treaty obligation of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it was interfering with no treaty obligations; it was rendering ineffective certain treaty obligations by statute. If the Senator from Washington will allow me right here to make a statement, the committee that have charge of the bill have tried to guard this country right along the line the Senator from Washington desires to do, and we have accepted amendments from time to time that have drawn as clearly as can be done the color line without giving offense or without violating our pledged word in a written form of convention, treaty, or statute. For that reason I think that everything the Senator desires in reference to his section of the country will be accomplished by the bill so far as legislation of this kind can accomplish it. The thing that is sought by Senators from that part of the country can only be accomplished by a modification of the existing treaty.

I earnestly implore the Senator to consider that the amendment which he proposes can only give offense, and in the administration and execution of this law could bring no possible good. The redress the Senator seeks can only be given by a treaty or by a statute in this country prohibiting in words or rescinding and abrogating the agreement that is now kept with this country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from South Carolina corroborates the assertion I made a moment ago, that the amendment which was debated here the other day hinged upon the contention that it was in violation of a treaty obligation, or, in order to make the statement comprehensive enough, either a treaty obligation or some passport agreement or gentleman's agreement outside of the formal provisions of the treaty.

The Senator from South Carolina is entirely mistaken if he assumes that the amendment which I have just proposed will interfere with any agreement between this country and any foreign country, either in the form of a treaty or otherwise. I would be very much obliged to the Senator in a moment, when I have taken my seat, if he will point out to the Senate in what way this amendment in any way conflicts with the treaty obligations of the United States or with any private agreement.

The contention which has been made against amendments upon this subject has been that they violated the favored-nation clause of certain treaties which the United States has with foreign countries. That can not be said of this amendment, because it is applicable alike to every nation in the world.

The Senator raises the issue here that we are seeking to reach some special problem that exists on the Pacific coast in relation to a country that he is apparently afraid to call the name of. I know what he is talking about; he is talking about Japan. This amendment has no relation to Japan any more than it has to England and Germany and France. How can Japan, if the Senator from South Carolina desires to put the argument upon that basis, claim that this is a violation of the favored-nation clause of our treaty with Japan if it is applicable to every other nation in the world? The most favored nation in the world would be subject to this amendment, if it is adopted, as well as the least favored nation. It is absolutely universal. It comprehends the entire world. It applies to every nation. The Senator from South Carolina can not successfully dispute that proposition. The language is too plain to admit of any dispute.

So I should like to know what objection the Senator can find to the amendment if he is in favor of the object which is sought to be accomplished, as he has said that he is.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the language that was stricken out by the committee, and which was ratified by the Senate yesterday overwhelmingly, is as follows:

> Hindus and persons who can not become eligible, under the existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

There was very strenuous objection to calling attention to the existing law which makes certain nationalities ineligible, but who by virtue of an agreement acknowledge that fact in spite of a treaty existing which recognizes the most favored-nation clause. For that reason, in order to avoid making this discrimination, which we have agreed not to make, the committee substituted certain geographical lines to exclude those they desired to exclude for the reasons which have been discussed here, and in those lines not to include those that we had agreements with but which agreements did exclude them in spite of the favored-nation clause.

I think, Mr. President, this is about the thirtieth time I have repeated this statement. The Senate ratified the action of the committee yesterday. It is the identical language sought to be reincorporated here that the Senate yesterday voted out because these people are not eligible, but under the most favored-nation clause in our treaty they would become eligible. Therefore, by private agreement, they living up to it and we living up to it, those we wish to exclude are excluded. We made no invidious distinction, but lumped it all together, and it met the approval of the Senate and reaches the very object the Senator from Washington desires to accomplish.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield to the Senator from California in just a moment, if he will pardon me.

Mr. PHELAN. I merely desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina in charge of the bill what warrant he has to say that there is any provision in any treaty with Japan giving them the privileges of the most favored nation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Because it is in the treaty.

Mr. PHELAN. Will you name the treaty?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The treaty of 1911.

Mr. PHELAN. I have examined the treaty and can not find it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I presume the reading of the text and the construction of the State Department would be authority. The State Department informed the committee that it was advisable to have this very matter incorporated which we incorporated. That is the department which has to deal with the administration and execution of treaties and conventions, and they advised us that this was a solution agreeable to them and agreeable to foreign powers. It was their construction of the law that the present treaty is to all intents and purposes a favored-nation treaty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. When we were confronted here a short time ago with legislation controlling the use we should make of the Panama Canal, after we had expended an enormous sum of money in its construction, supposedly for the benefit of the people who paid the money, we were told that we could not use it for the special benefit of the people of the United States because there was a treaty with a foreign country which prohibited us from doing it. Likewise, a short while ago, when Congress by formal action attempted to favor its own citizens against aliens by making a discriminating provision in the tariff duties in favor of goods that were imported in American ships, authorities outside of Congress held the law to be entirely nugatory, because they said that we could not favor our own citizens in that way on account of a treaty with a foreign country.

So it is now, when we are attempting here for the third or fourth or fifth time to put on the statute books a law that has long been needed, to bring up to date, to suit the new conditions of population and of competition of labor, a law regulating the immigration of aliens in the United States, we are told in the same tones, in a familiar way, that we can not accomplish what we seek to accomplish, because our hands are tied by some provision in a treaty with a foreign country.

These are only a few examples, Mr. President, of the encroachment upon the freedom and sovereignty of the United States, which is supposed to be a sovereign Nation, in dealing with its own affairs by constructions that are forced constructions, which are put upon treaties that are passed here frequently without being read.

Mr. President, the same sovereign authority which made these treaties may modify or repeal them. I for one am getting weary of the limitations which we find ourselves hedged around with in attempting to legislate upon purely domestic matters—and this, in its essence, is purely a domestic matter. No foreign country should properly have any right to discuss it with us. By a surrender which we have made in treaties with foreign countries we are said to be ousted of our sovereign rights.

I think myself that a great many of our treaties need revision, and that as long as so many commissions are being appointed it might be very timely to appoint a commission to codify and revise treaties of the United States with foreign countries and propose the same for ratification, with amendments to make them fit the needs of the time.

But all that is aside from the question which is before the Senate now. The most favored nation clause of the treaty with Japan, or the treaty with any other country, does not provide, if such a clause exists, that they shall have certain rights in their relations with the United States. It provides, if it exists at all, that they shall have the same right in their relations to the United States that that nation has which is the most favored by the United States.

If this amendment is adopted, can Japan point out any nation in the world which is more favored than she would be under its terms? Certainly not, because it is applicable to them all alike. So how can it be said that it is in contravention of the favored-nation clause of any treaty?

The discussion here the other day was in regard to other portions of the House provision which the Senator from South Carolina invoked, which I have left out entirely in the amendment which I have offered. I refer to the House text which was stricken out by the Senate amendment containing this language:

> Unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

It was the effect of that language which was discussed. That language is eliminated from the amendment which I have offered.

At the same time it may be said that the House of Representatives, by the provision which included this amendment, has shown that it favored the principle which it contains. So we have the encouragement at least of adopting, out of the many things which were referred to in the House provision, this one, which is free from the objections which were made to other portions of the provision, that it interferes with some foreign agreement or gentlemen's agreement or agreement in regard to passports or treaty with a foreign country. It contains no reference to any such thing, and yet it accomplishes the purpose which those of us who are interested in this question desire to accomplish, and it accomplishes it in a perfectly legal way. I do not think that any respectable court would entertain a discussion of the proposition that there is a discrimination by this provision which I have offered, that is universal in its application by its obvious terms.

Now, there is a question that is involved here. I had not intended to discuss it, because it is not necessary to discuss it. Why should it be raised here like a ghost as a taboo upon dealing with the question of immigration upon the Pacific coast when it is not necessarily involved in the amendment which I have offered?

This amendment applies to the Atlantic coast, to the Pacific coast, to the Bahama Islands, to certain races in Africa, not to others. It extends the rule which limits naturalization to citizenship in the United States to immigration into the United States, and the effect of it is a wholesome provision that our industrial life should not be crowded, that our people engaged in the ever intensifying struggle for existence should not be put to sharp competition by a horde of aliens who have not the essential elements which will enable them ultimately to become merged into the currents of American citizenship.

If we can not make them citizens, has not the time come to prohibit their immigration and permanent residence in the United States? I am of the opinion that it has. I think we ought to be sufficiently free to deal with our social and economic problems to be able to say, and we ought to say, that all those who come to our shores to reside permanently and to make their homes here, to enter into our industrial life, should be such as ultimately may be accepted into full citizenship in our great national Republic. The House of Representatives have adopted that principle, as I said before, and it is a wholesome principle.

So far as the merits of the question are concerned which lie underneath this discussion as to oriental immigration, I am not going to pass strictures upon the peculiar, and I might say fantastic, amendment that has been evolved perhaps by some clerk up in the State Department, drawing an arbitrary line on the map across Asia and saying that those who are born on one side shall be admitted and those born on the other side shall not be admitted, regardless of their race, or blood, or character, or religion. There never was anything more farcical attempted in legislation, and there never could be anything that would be more offensive to intelligent people in the foreign countries affected than that sort of arbitrary, unreasonable, inconsistent arrangement, to exclude one and to admit the other when there is no difference whatever between them. It may be that in the case of members of the same family, born of the same parents, one would be excluded and the other admitted. They would be excluded because they happen to be on the wrong side of a red line that is drawn on the map, a line that includes a part of China and excludes a part of China, that includes great countries containing white people, and it was only after considerable insistence that they were accepted by a belated amendment. Yet the countries in which they live are included by this arbitrary classification.

This, Mr. President, is a real problem. It is not a mere academic discussion. It is no moot case and it is not a trivial matter. It is not like the problem that was referred to here yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] with attempted sarcasm, the race problem of the South. The race problem of the South is historical. It had its origin 300 years ago. It has done all the damage that it is capable of doing to the people of this Republic. As he said, there are 14,000,000 of those people there. I dislike to see that discussion constantly brought up in the Senate of the United States every time we attempt to deal with some modern question. It is an old question. It is in process of settlement; it is something that can not be undone. This question that we are concerned with on the Pacific coast has its development in the womb of the future. We still have it in our power, with all the immense effect it may have upon our national destiny, to direct the course which it may take. That is not true of the conditions which exist in the Southern States, because they have been fixed by time, which we can not undo or recall. But if we have any pretense whatever to the qualifications which should fit a man for a seat in this body we can look somewhat into the future and deal with the beginning of another great racial question which begins to loom in large lines on the horizon, and a greater question than any that have troubled other sections of the country in the past.

It is not a question of how many orientals a month come into the United States but it is a question of having 168,000,000 orientals who are ready to come in or to send emigrants in to begin their competition in the industrial life of America, if steps are not taken to insure their exclusion.

The Senator from South Carolina says that this amendment will not make any difference in the existing conditions. If it does not make any difference in the existing conditions, it does not affront any nation; it does not name any nation; why does he object to it? It does make a difference in existing conditions because it puts upon the statute books of the United States what is now merely a patched-up informal understanding, illy enforced, through which there are constantly coming into the United States that stock which the Senator from California has described, which is to breed upon our shores those who do not have to comply with the naturalization laws of the United States, because they are born citizens. That is the difference which it makes. It makes it without the violation of a treaty, without infringing in the slightest particular any passport or gentlemen's agreement. The Senator from South Carolina has wholly failed to say how it interferes or conflicts with any treaty.

I should like very much for the Senator to accept the amendment. I do not like to continue the discussion of the question here or to press the matter, with the inevitable result that we should be put to the test to see whether or not we can get a quorum, for it is doubtful whether or not we can—but let the matter go to conference. Then, in a quiet discussion, where the members of the conference committee can sit down and read the amendment and read the treaty, if it is then found that the assertion of the Senator from South Carolina, that it conflicts with the treaty, is true, let it be rejected. I should be perfectly willing to submit it to that test, and I hope that the Senator will not oppose it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington. Those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed will say "no."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the decision of the Chair is made, I shall ask for a vote by yeas and nays, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I understand the announcement of the Chair was made before the point of no quorum was raised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair had not made his announcement of the result. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Hughes	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Bryan	Husting	Nelson	Shields
Catron	James	Norris	Simmons
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Clark	Jones	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Colt	Kenyon	Page	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Kern	Penrose	Smoot
Cummins	Kirby	Phelan	Townsend
Curtis	La Follette	Pittman	Underwood
Fernald	Lane	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Walsh
Gore	Lippitt	Reed	Warren
Gronna	Lodge	Saulsbury	Watson
Harding	McCumber	Shafroth	Weeks
Hardwick	McLean	Sheppard

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I rise to announce that my colleague [Mr. MYERS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is detained from the Chamber by sickness, and that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is also absent by reason of sickness.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] by reason of illness.

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, after the name "United States," it is proposed to insert the words "persons who can not become eligible under existing law as citizens of the United States."

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Secretary please state how the text will then read?

The SECRETARY. So that it will read:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: Persons who can not become eligible under existing law as citizens of the United States, all idiots, imbeciles—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the roll is called I merely wish to make a statement to the effect that this amendment is practically the same amendment relating to the Japanese question which we voted down on yesterday. I hope that the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, I want to make a counterstatement, that this is not the same amendment which was voted down on yesterday. It is true that it is a part of the House provision, but that part is entirely distinct from all of this controversy about treaties and passport agreements. It has no reference to any treaty or passport agreement. It does not violate any favored-nation clause; it does not, as the Senator from South Carolina would lead us to think by his statement, apply especially to Japan. On the contrary, it applies to every country in the world. It necessarily does so, because it is universal in the terms by which it is expressed.

The purpose of the amendment is simply this: If immigrants are coming to the United States—this is somewhat a repetition of what I have just said—to reside here, we admit them for the purpose of becoming residents in the United States and engaging in our industrial life; that they shall be such people as ultimately may become eligible for citizenship. That is all that the amendment effects. It embodies a principle which has been favored by the House of Representatives, it being true, as already stated, that it was contained in the House provision, for which the Senate substituted its amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington what his view is as to whether or not his amendment does contravene the provision of the treaty which has been the subject of so much consideration here?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Montana inquires as to whether the amendment conflicts with any treaty or agreement?

Mr. WALSH. Not with "any" treaty. I inquire what is the opinion of the Senator from Washington as to whether or not his amendment does contravene the provisions of that treaty?

Mr. POINDEXTER. My opinion is that it does not. I do not think that that question is open to controversy. The Senator from Montana can determine it in a moment for himself. The language of the amendment is that there shall be excluded, along with various other classes which are mentioned, all those who can not become eligible for citizenship. The Senator can readily see that that does not conflict with any favored-nation clause, because it applies to the most favored nation as well as to the least favored nation.

Mr. WALSH. But would it not, as a matter of fact, exclude all from the Asiatic countries who can not become citizens of the United States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it would not.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire, then, can citizens of China and Japan, by immigrating to this country and residing here for a period of five years, become citizens of the United States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They can not.

Mr. WALSH. Then, they would perforce be excluded by this amendment, would they not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They would, so far as all those who are not free whites are concerned. There are a number of people in Asia who are white people.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, but I am speaking of the great generality of people in China and Japan.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, it would exclude those; but it would also exclude similar peoples in every other country in the world, whether they are brown, yellow, or of whatever race or blood they may be, along the same lines that they are now excluded from becoming citizens of the United States. Can the Senator point out how such a provision relating to immigration conflicts with the favored-nation clause of the treaty any more than the same provision relating to naturalization does?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Washington, I desire to say that the Senator from Montana is not to be understood by the Senator from Washington as taking any position about the matter. I arose to ascertain the view of the Senator from Washington concerning the effect of his amendment. Of course, I appreciate that it would exclude all peoples who can not become citizens of the United States by the process of naturalization, and that no individual country is singled out by its provisions; but that was not the question that I asked the Senator. I asked him whether it would not exclude all citizens of China and Japan who could not become citizens of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That could be answered in the affirmative and it also could be answered in this way: It would not any more exclude the citizens of Japan and of China than it would exclude the same kind of people from any other country in the world.

The question which I asked the Senator from Montana was not intended so much to elicit an answer from him as it was to state an argument. I did not intend to call on the Senator to announce any opinion that he might have, but rather to make the argument, which seems to me to be a perfectly sound one, that we have just as much right to lay down conditions in the immigration laws as we have to lay down conditions in the naturalization laws, so far as foreign treaties are concerned.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the language of the Senator's amendment, of course, is in very general terms. Under the pending bill there are certain specific classes of men and women who are not permitted to enter the United States. Those are defined in various ways, and it is not necessary for me to refer to that language; but what special classes has the Senator in mind when he offers this amendment, which are not already included in the category of those who are forbidden to enter under the terms of this bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only have in mind—and I have in mind no others—those that are not eligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, under the present bill there are certain classes of people who are permitted to come here, as, for instance, merchants, professional men, and others that I might name. Does the Senator expect his amendment will have the effect to exclude them?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not; it does not exclude them because of the proviso excepting them, which is contained in the bill which is now before us. It would make no change whatever in regard to them because they are covered by a special proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence I will withhold my vote. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. In his absence I withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote if present.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). My colleague [Mr. THOMAS] is absent on official business.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] has been called from the city upon important matters.

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I observe that he has not voted, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is not present. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Borah	Hollis	Phelan	Sutherland
Brady	James	Pittman	Townsend
Chilton	Jones	Poindexter	Vardaman
Clapp	La Follette	Reed	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lane	Sherman	Watson
Hardwick	Lee, Md.	Smith, Mich.	Works

NAYS—41.

Bankhead	Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harding	Norris	Smoot
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Overman	Sterling
Bryan	Hughes	Page	Swanson
Colt	Husting	Pomerene	Tillman
Culberson	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Underwood
Cummins	Kern	Shafroth	Walsh
Dillingham	Kirby	Sheppard	Weeks
du Pont	Lippitt	Shields
Fernald	Lodge	Simmons
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—31.

Ashurst	Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Broussard	Johnson, Me.	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Catron	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Gorman	Stone
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Oliver	Thomas
Clark	Lewis	Owen	Thompson
Fall	McCumber	Penrose	Warren
Fletcher	McLean	Ransdell	Williams

So Mr. POINDEXTER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask the Secretary to read it. I do not think the chairman of the committee will object to this amendment. It merely relates to the administration of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, section 24, line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Assistant Commissioner General of Immigration, chiefs of division, and assistant chiefs of division, and all supervising officers of every description in the Bureau of Immigration shall be appointed by the Secretary of Labor from field officers of the Immigration Service for a period of four years' duty, at the expiration of which they shall return to the field service, unless reappointed as hereafter indicated. Such officers may be reappointed for an additional period of four years' bureau duty, but no such officer shall serve more than eight years' bureau duty until he shall have actually served four years in the field following said period of bureau service. Upon the taking effect of this act all supervising officers of the Bureau of Immigration who have served more than eight years in such position, except the Commissioner General of Immigration, shall be assigned to field stations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this amendment applies to the Immigration Service a rule which for a long time has been in force in the War Department, which limits the time that an officer of the service shall remain in the bureau here in Washington City. It fixes a period of four years, with permission to reappoint him for another term of four years, and then requires that he shall go into the field, where he will have an opportunity to become acquainted with the practical things relating to the exclusion of immigrants from this country.

On the 29th of July last I submitted to the Senate considerable data in regard to the inefficiency of the Immigration Service along the northwest borders of the United States, particularly in relation to the illicit entry into this country of Chinese. Those who were familiar with the situation there attributed the failure to enforce the immigration laws against the unauthorized entry of Chinamen to the overburdening of the service with expensive officials in the bureau at Washington City and the inadequacy of the number of employees, or of the ability of the employees in the field whose duty it was to enforce the laws along the border. I can see no objection to a rule which would provide for a rotation in the positions of the service without in any way infringing upon the principles of the civil-service regulations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is possible that the amendment is in proper form, but I will ask the Senator if it would not be better to provide that these men shall be detailed rather than appointed by a Cabinet officer?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is a good suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I will ask permission to change the word "appointed" to the word "detailed."

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator may have to change it again, possibly, in the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. There are a number of places where the word appears.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The amendment is not offered without consultation with a number of people who are in a position to know from practical experience the need of a provision of this kind, and I offer it in the hope that the Senator from South Carolina will not oppose it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, all that I have to say in reference to this amendment is that it is practically the same amendment that was brought before the House Committee on Immigration, and was carefully gone into over there. It affects the administrative features of the bill. After discussion in the House, it was overwhelmingly voted down. So far as our committee is concerned, the administrative features were very carefully guarded, and the machinery is working so splendidly now that we are loath to have any change in it at this stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, preparatory to making a motion to strike out a portion of this bill, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question relating to its merits.

Is it the purpose of this bill to defend the citizenship of this country against a class of citizenship which would deteriorate our own?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am rather surprised that the Senator should ask any Senator here such a question, because the purpose of this bill, of course, is to protect, as far as may be, the citizenship of this country. I can not conceive what we would have an immigration bill for if that were not its object.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is there any other purpose than that in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the other purpose?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is to promote the welfare of the citizens of this country; to improve it, if possible.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is there any purpose in the bill to assist any people from a foreign country to enter this country who would otherwise, according to the provisions of the bill, be ineligible because of deficiency either in learning or in mentality?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is going into details to bear out the general statement. I have made my general statement. In working out the details we have tried to work them out in accordance with the general statement, so I guess the Senator already has from the bill the information that he seeks.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. Then let me ask the Senator this question: If an illiterate German Jew should be kept out of this country because of his influence upon our citizens, why should an illiterate Russian Jew be allowed to come in?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as I have said heretofore, I presume that is one of those conditions that no legislative body can remedy. In taking care of a general rule there are some exceptions that suffer. We have tried to apply a general rule. There are exceptions around which we would be very glad to make little circles, but that we can not do. We are limited, and therefore we tried to apply the general rule of "the greatest good to the greatest number."

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to know the reason of the exception that is found in the provision on page 9, from line 10 down to line 18, inclusive:

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith.

Mr. President, we have been receiving from Russia an immense number of immigrants of Jewish faith. They have come over to this country in hundreds of thousands in the last few years. We all understand that there is either a law or a regulation in Russia which requires those of that faith to live within restricted territory. Therefore they are discriminated against. There are a vast number of those who are illiterate; and yet you invite them over here, not because the illiterate Russian Jew will not be just as detrimental as the illiterate German Jew, but for some other ulterior purpose, and I should like to have the purpose definitely stated.

For instance, the illiterate Christian in Russia can not come over to the United States. Therefore you penalize him because he is a Christian and not a Jew. The illiterate German Jew can not come over to the United States; but if he will remove to Russia and remain there a few months, then he can come over from the Empire of Russia.

This may appeal to a certain class of our citizenship; but I have listened to the argument of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which has been given here by the hour—and a very strong argument, indeed, it has been—to the effect that the purpose of the illiteracy clause was not so much to keep out the illiterate because they are illiterate as it was to keep out a greater number of citizens from sections of the country in which we thought their citizenship would be detrimental to the interests of our own. I was somewhat surprised and disappointed when the Senator from Vermont yesterday admitted that he wanted that class of people in here, and that he was not seeking so much to keep out any great number as he was to bring people in and make them remain here.

Therefore we put into this law yesterday, as an amendment, a provision whereby hundreds of thousands of people who have been coming to this country for the purpose of earning our higher wages for a few months and then returning, and not becoming citizens, will now come and remain here. In other words, there are about 300,000 men coming over every year from certain sections, and about 150,000 to 200,000 return later on in the year. Under the amendment which was put into the bill this morning, offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], they are penalized for returning to their own country. They will naturally come to the country that will give them the greatest remuneration for a given amount of labor. They will come here, and while heretofore they did not care about becoming citizens, now they will come; and you compel them to become citizens and a part of our body politic and invite them to remain instead of attempting to get rid of that class, as was indicated by the address made by the Senator from Vermont many times upon this floor.

Now, we are making class legislation. We are saying to a certain class, "If you come from the Empire of Russia, you can be admitted whether you are illiterate or not." I have nothing but the most severe condemnation of the ancient practice of all of the Christian countries of persecuting the Jews; but while I think the pendulum should swing to the center, I am opposed to its swinging to the reverse side and now persecuting people because they are Christians, and saying, "If you come from a country where the laws discriminate against the Jew, he can come in; but you, a Christian gentleman, can not come to the United States because you are illiterate."

If this provision is put in the bill as a bait to our American Jewish population, I must confess that I have enough regard for that population to believe that they are not asking for it. I think most of them are probably opposed to this bill as it is, but I do not think any number of them are asking for class legislation which will give a special benefit to them because of their religion, and that is exactly what this does. If the Senate wants to put that provision in, and if we wish to say that we will penalize the Russian Christian because he is illiterate, but we will not penalize the Russian Jew, no matter how illiterate he may be, of course we can vote this provision into the bill. I think, in all fairness, the illiteracy test ought to apply to all people.

Mr. President, we have nothing whatever to do with the laws of foreign countries. If the purpose of this law is to defend the standard of American citizenship, then certainly it ought not to be varied to meet a particular law of some other country where we have no control over that law. There ought to be no exception whatever. There ought to be no penalizing of any nationality or any people on account of their religion, nor ought they to be given special rights because of their religion, because of the act of some foreign country.

Believing that the provision to which I have referred ought to be out, Mr. President, I move to strike out lines 10 to 18, inclusive, on page 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, in the following words:

> That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, perhaps Senators would expect some member of the committee to make this statement; but I believe there is a reason for the discrimination against which the Senator from North Dakota has animadverted. I will know in a moment. I have sent for some data upon the subject; but I believe that in Russia there is by law a discrimination against the Jews respecting educational privileges that prevails in no other country, and it would be quite appropriate if they were admitted to this country under more favorable conditions than others who are ignorant, not because of compulsion but from choice.

I simply make that statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator claim that there is any law which prevents or prohibits Jews in Russia from learning to read and write? Certainly, a great many of them, and, in fact, most of them do read and write; so I know of no law that will prohibit them from obtaining that education.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not know definitely just what the discrimination is nor to what extent it goes, but I am very certain that there is a discrimination which renders it very difficult for them to get even a rudimentary education.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of what has been said by the Senator from North Dakota it may be well to give a history of this provision of the bill.

Under the existing law we recognize the right of asylum in America of all persons, from whatever country they may have come, who have suffered from religious or political persecution. In the existing law the clause reads "solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution." That evidently was not satisfactory to the other branch of the United States Congress, and so when this bill came to us it came with this alteration, leaving out the clause "solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution" and containing the clause which has been read by the Senator from North Dakota. I suppose it is a matter familiar to all persons in this body, and that they are aware of the circumstances under which that clause was adopted in the other branch of the Legislature.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator give us the circumstances under which it was adopted?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It perhaps would not be proper for me to do so at this time, but I think it was for political purposes. I will leave it there.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we should understand the reason clearly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was put in the bill in another branch of the Legislature and has come here in this form and was passed by the committee of this body without any recommendations.

With this explanation, Mr. President, I desire to correct an impression conveyed by my friend the Senator from North Dakota as to my attitude in respect to this particular class of immigration which comes from Russia, Austria-Hungary, the Balkan States, and Italy, and which the Immigration Commission termed the new immigration, as contrasted with the immigration which came in such large bodies prior to 1880 and to 1882. The position taken by the commission was that the latter immigration had come in such numbers that the common labor market of the United States was overcrowded. They found that adopting the literacy test or reading test as a restrictive measure would naturally decrease this particular flow of immigration perhaps 30 or 35 per cent, and in that way they would relieve the overproduction of common labor at the seats of the great basic industries in the United States, where that labor was not only competing against American labor but where it existed in such abundance that it was competing against itself and reducing wages to a point where the laborers were compelled to live under conditions which were certainly un-American. If we could reduce that, the conditions would be satisfactory.

America needs labor. There is no question but that the industries of America have grown to a point where they need foreign labor; and if we had a proper amount of it, so that wages could be fairly maintained—I am speaking now of the conditions before the European war, of course, as we found them in 1909—there would have been no effort to restrict immigration. I was not in favor of it when I came to the Senate. I only became in favor of it when I discovered these conditions. As has already been demonstrated, a considerable portion of this immigration consists either of unmarried men or of men who have left their wives at home, indicating that they are here only for a temporary purpose. It was to stop that class from coming, as far as possible, that the amendment was proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yesterday. I could not favor the amendment as it was then offered, because of its form; but I thought the object of it was good.

I simply wished to make this explanation so that my position on this subject might be understood.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there seems to be something of a difference between members of the committee as to the real purpose of this legislation. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] claims that his purpose is to uphold the standard of citizenship of the United States. The position taken by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is that it is to regulate the quantity of labor that shall come to this country from the old countries. The position of the Senator from South Carolina, if I understand him correctly, is that as a rule the illiteracy test will keep out of this country at least a certain degree of undesirable citizens, and therefore will prevent the deterioration of the American standard of citizenship.

I hope that is the purpose of the bill—one of the purposes, at least—but if that be the purpose, I think I am justified again in asking the question of the Senator or of the Senate: How will it threaten or menace our standard of citizenship any more to allow an unlettered German to enter this country than to allow an unlettered Russian to enter this country?

The Senator from Vermont says that we have recognized in this bill the principle of making this country an asylum for the oppressed. Suppose the Japanese or the Chinese should be oppressed—and there is no question as to the latter in their own country—I am doubtful if the Senator would carry his asylum ideas to the extent of allowing them to enter this country.

So we get right down to the proposition that the real purpose of this bill is to defend the American standard of citizenship; and when you say that a German Jew or a German Christian, an Austrian Jew or an Austrian Christian, if unlettered, can not enter into the United States, but a Russian Jew can, you are making a discrimination in the one instance against the Russian citizen because he is a Christian and in the other instance as against the German or the British or the French citizen simply because he is not a Russian citizen. Now, I do not think any provision of that kind ought to be in this bill, and I do not think there is any excuse for a provision of that kind. There might be very much in what has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, that if the Russian Government so oppresses its people that it will not allow people of a certain religious faith to learn to read and write, we might then possibly make an exception in their favor, because otherwise we might be discriminating against them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for just a moment, since I called the Senator's attention to the matter I have confirmed the view which I expressed, that there are such discriminations, and that there are legal provisions that deny to Jews in Russia in certain territory the privileges of any school opportunities whatever.

Mr. McCUMBER. Even by their own people?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not certain as to whether they are permitted to maintain schools themselves or not; but I am positive that in certain territory only a small percentage—5 per cent—of the people of school age are permitted to attend upon the schools. I find it impossible right now to quote the statutes, but can do so within a few days. However, I am certain that the discrimination which is practiced in Russia against the Jews, which is not found elsewhere, and is because of their religious faith, furnishes a reason for this language which the Senator proposes to strike out.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I doubt very much whether there is anything in the Russian law or practice that will prevent those of a certain religion from teaching their own children to read and write. If there is discrimination against them as to where they may reside, undoubtedly the prejudice might be so great that there would be a discrimination against them in other respects; but the mere statement that only a certain per cent can attend school in certain localities would not be sufficient at least to satisfy my mind that there was a provision which prevented them from obtaining the simple primary education of learning to read and write their own language. We know, as a matter of fact, that we provide in this bill the Yiddish as a language, and require that those who speak that language only must also be able to read and write it, which of itself, it seems to me, admits that there is education along that line.

But I can not believe that the conditions are such that we ought to discriminate against any religion or against the people of any other country in coming to the United States, and if we are to apply a test in one case we ought to apply the test in all other cases.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, the law is to be general. If the Armenian Christians were to come to this country persecuted this clause would apply, as the Senator from Wisconsin points out. There may be a religious persecution in any of those nations now at war, and when the war shall cease they will be admitted.

I want to call the Senator's attention to his reference to the position that I took in regard to the Jews. This much can be said, that wherever a people are so tenacious of a moral standard canonized in the form of a religion, that they will suffer persecution for the principle's sake it is good evidence that they would make pretty good citizens when they have the principles involved in the principles of our Government. I think the Jews of this country have exemplified the fact that that principle can be applied to our citizenship.

There is another point I want to make in reference to these people. We are not discriminating in favor of or against them, but we are legislating for all those persecuted for religion's sake. The clause is broad enough for that. As I had occasion two years ago when the bill was under discussion to read into the RECORD, even in Russia where it is alleged, and I presume it is true, that the Jewish people are forbidden the privileges of the common school, they are higher in their per cent of education than the average of the Russian people themselves. I took occasion then to have the department work out that percentage, and in every nation on earth where the Jews are found their per cent of education is higher than that of the country in which they reside, showing that they now have this characteristic of adhering to a religious faith, believing in the God that they worship, but also believing in education. I have not those tables before me now, but they could be easily reproduced.

Now, one other word as to the point the Senator from Vermont makes, that one of the characteristics of the Jews is that they are not birds of passage. They are a family people. Their history for all time substantiates that. When a Jew comes he comes for the purpose of becoming a citizen. He makes a good citizen. He does not go back to Russia, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. From every standpoint this is not a discrimination for or against anyone, but it seems to me to be a splendid provision of the bill to open the door for this purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the last statement made by the Senator rather annihilates the proposition that the Jew does not have the opportunity of other people in Russia to obtain an education. The statement of the Senator is that the standard of education is considerably higher than that of the average Russian citizen.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Do I not quote the Senator correctly?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me frame the phraseology so that I can bring out the idea. The Jew has every difficulty thrown in his way, but despite the persecution he surmounts the difficulty. The Senator knows as well as I do, if he is at all acquainted with the conditions set forth in the stories from that country, authentic and otherwise, that the Jew surmounts those difficulties. He is persecuted, and the Senator knows it. He is denied the privileges of a Russian citizen, and the Senator knows it. He is held down, but despite that he shows his superiority by rising above it. For that reason, as suggested a moment ago, this should be called an enabling clause rather than a discriminating one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, we abandon the high principle which was enunciated by the Senator some time ago, that the purpose of the illiteracy clause was to uphold the standard of American citizenship. I rather like that sentiment. I was in hopes that the Senator would stand entirely upon that sentiment.

I do not want the Senator to think for a single moment that I would make it more difficult for the Jew to come into this country than for a Christian, but I would make it just as easy for a Christian with the same standard of intelligence and learning as a Jew to come into this country. That is all I contend for in asking that this portion of the exception be stricken from the bill.

The Senator from Vermont intimated that that provision was put in by the House for political purposes, and that may be true. Then, if it was put in for political purposes, we ought to put it out for the purpose of the protection of our American citizenship or else we ought to dispose entirely of this illiteracy test.

I am perfectly free to say that I do not think any material good will come from this illiteracy test. I am certain that there are greater dangers to this country through educated people from Europe than there are through the uneducated people coming here. I believe that all of our dissensions and all of our troubles that have come to us through foreign citizenship have not come through the illiterate classes, but, rather, through those who could readily gain admission under the provisions of this bill.

I am not, therefore, in favor of the illiteracy test as a mere standard of mentality of the proposed citizen, but I do think it not only an insult but an injustice to the citizenship of other countries, to the Christian people of other countries as well as the Christian people of Russia, to say if you belong to a church in that country and that church is persecuted, you may have free access to the United States, while those other people who have nothing to do with the persecution shall be kept out. That is really what it means.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] is hardly fair in his comparison and in his analysis. This does not penalize a Christian in any land where the Christian does not have the fullest opportunity to avail himself of the public schools. Some years ago we went into this subject very thoroughly and we found a condition in Russia—not so much in the public laws of Russia as in the rules and regulations that are imposed—which is unquestionably designed to restrict the opportunities of Jews in many sections of that country as to the opportunity of education.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. Are there not Provinces in Russia in which there are no public schools whatever, either for Christians or Jews?

Mr. CLAPP. If there are, then clearly the Jew in Russia is not responsible. He is not the governing class of Russia.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is the Christian?

Mr. CLAPP. The Christian is the governing class of Russia, and if the governing class of Russia itself does not want educational opportunities, that is its fault and not ours.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator claim that the Christian subject in Russia has very much to do with the Government?

Mr. CLAPP. I claim that the Christian subjects to-day, through the modernizing of the Russian Government, are overwhelmingly in favor of schools and would undoubtedly have schools under that Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. GORE. I would like to state in this connection that 4 per cent of the people of Russia are Jews, but only about 1½ per cent of the school children in Russia are Jews. I think those statistics indicate the discrimination against the Jews in their way of acquiring education.

Mr. CLAPP. There is not any question but that the investigation we made shows that especially the rules prescribed with reference to the number of pupils who may be assembled in one room not only discriminated but they were designed to discriminate against the Jews.

The fact that the Jews surmount those obstacles has no bearing upon this question, because if the Jew surmounts the obstacle, then he is protected one way or the other. But those people in the main are people of small means, and it does seem to me that when a citizen is barred from the full and free privilege of the public schools there is such a discrimination against him that if he is enabled then, through his own efforts and those of his own race and religion, to get an education at his expense or their expense it is a discrimination which we ought to recognize, and we should exempt him from the operation of this bill.

I repeat, there is no question but that the investigation shows in the figures themselves, in the rules limiting the number of pupils to a single schoolroom and the rules limiting the number of schoolrooms, that it was only as a bar to the more complete and fair opportunity of Jews, and was designed as a discrimination and to prevent him from having the opportunity of a public-school education.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that only 10 per cent of the children are, I understand, pupils in any school.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are millions of Russian Christian children who can not get an education, just the same as there are a proportion of Jewish people in Russia who can not obtain an education, because of the lack of public schools in certain sections of that country. The people are very poor, and their parents not being educated they can not give those children the benefit of an education. Now, you keep those children out because they are Christians.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. The effect of this law keeps them out if they are illiterate and because they are Christians, while it allows the others to come in who are illiterate because they are Jews. If we are defining the standard of our citizenship, we ought to place it upon some broader ground than the persecution or the prejudices of some foreign people.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, we do not penalize the Christian. If there is a man on this earth who by reason of governmental policy is barred from the right of education because he is a Christian, no matter where he comes from, he is entitled to enter under this exemption, as was well said by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the difference in the cause provided the child is not responsible for the cause? What difference does it make to us, who are looking out for our own citizenship, whether the Russian child be Christian or Jew, as long as neither of them has the opportunity to obtain an education? Neither of them is responsible for the governing power. I do not say that you penalize the one; I say you discredit the one through the operations of the law because he happens to be a Christian. You make one rule that will apply to him because we will say that he is discriminated against, and I am not speaking alone of education, because the Jew in Russia is compelled to live in certain Provinces and in certain quarters irrespective of education, and that is a discrimination. That discrmination, irrespective of the educational qualifications, qualifies him for admission to the United States, but the Christian Russian, against whom no such discrimination is placed, is excluded by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, first those are excluded who can not pass this test. Then, recognizing the asylum principle, under which we owe something to the oppressed, we do not discriminate against the Christian or against any other sect, but we do say that where illiteracy comes as a result of the laws of a country, owing to the fact that the child is not responsible for his religion in either case at his birth, if he belongs to a religion which is discriminated against he shall be exempted from this test. The Senator's argument puts the exemption first. The exclusion comes first. Then we recognize where they come to this country because of religious persecution, whether Christian, Jew, or of any other faith, that they may be exempt.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I was very much interested in what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has said, and I simply rise to make this observation. It may not do any good; probably it will not. For years here I have voted in favor of restricting immigration. I never voted for a bill restricting immigration because of the literacy test in my life that I did not feel that I was doing wrong.

I do not feel that that is the appropriate test at all for citizenship. Honest persons may have had no opportunity in youth for education, and the literacy test is, in my opinion, unfair. Why should not character be the test of immigration? If the immigrant has made a good citizen in the country from which he comes, why not welcome him here? I have always felt that some method of that kind could be worked out, although I have never undertaken it in detail and have never been a member of the committee charged with this responsibility. Yet I assert without any hesitation whatever that the poorest test that can be applied is the literacy test. Why not have our proposed immigration surrounded by such safeguards as the Consular Service could extend? When a person proposes to come to the United States to live, why should he not go to the nearest American consul and apprise him of his intention, furnish him proof that he has made a good citizen in the town where he has lived or in the country where he has resided? Why is not that the appropriate test for citizenship here?

We refine our laws to suit territorial, and I was almost going to say climatic, conditions, and we draw a line arbitrarily through a great Empire and say that a child who was unfortunately born on one side of the line shall not be permitted to enter this Republic, where opportunities are so fair and so many, but the child born on the other side of the line may come. A quarter of the Empire of Russia is under ban and its citizens forbidden to come; vast stretches of territory where Polanders live rest under the same territorial inhibition. We owe a debt of gratitude to the Polander. Yet there are areas restricted in this bill, and defined so closely that millions of Poles are prohibited from ever aspiring to American citizenship. Aliens have helped to win our battles. Foreigners unfamiliar with our language have made it possible for this Republic to survive its severest trials.

In the Hall of the House of Representatives the only portrait upon the wall is the portrait of the immortal Lafayette, who came here from France to uphold the banner of our liberty. In Statuary Hall are the statues of Kosciusko and Pulaski, Polanders, who fought on a hundred battle fields that we might enjoy our liberty. One of the great parks of this Capital fronting the White House has upon its four corners the statues of foreigners who have rendered our country distinguished service in time of greatest need, and we sit here and speculate and contrive and plan to keep people out of our country who would be an honor to it.

I do not like it and never have liked it. I have voted for it in the past reluctantly.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion if I may? I may be wrong, but I think the bill has been amended so that it does not exclude large portions of Russia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It did exclude them yesterday, and it may exclude them to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. My understanding is——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It may go to the House of Representatives, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. NORRIS. It is my understanding that such an amendment has been adopted. I agree with the Senator entirely that it would not be fair if that still is the case, if that amendment has been agreed to. Certainly the Senator was not here yesterday. Probably it was adopted when the Senator was not in the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have been here steadily ever since this bill has been under discussion, and I am addressing myself to the spirit which has seemed to prevail generally upon both sides of the Chamber, asking that an amendment be put on and sent to conference, and by and by the bill will come back here in some form, no one knows exactly the form, and we will be expected to ratify what the conferees do, because that is all that can be accomplished.

But I simply rose to emphasize what has been in my heart here for a long time, that every bill we have passed has been passed upon the false theory that because a child was fortunate enough to be educated in his youth he would therefore make a better citizen than the unfortunate one whose responsibilities perhaps kept him from the privileges of education, and I rose to emphasize our debt of gratitude to aliens. It is not for us to close our doors against good people, no matter where they come from. If they are bad people they ought not to be admitted even if they can pass the literacy test, and if they are good people they ought to be admitted even though they can not pass the literacy test. I think the test proposed is not the best test, that character is the best test, and that we have the machinery of government present in every part of the world, where we may inquire first-hand into the life and the character and the antecedents, if you please, of those who apply for admission into the United States.

I have been very much interested in what the Senator from North Dakota said, and he always says what is sensible, and he says it fearlessly and fairly. I do not think that this bill meets the situation we are aiming at. I believe that we have let in a great many people who should have been kept out. I believe our laws of naturalization have been too weak. It is not fair to take classes of people who have not made good citizens at all before they have been here five years and give them a place alongside the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who fought as a soldier for four years that our Republic might last, while his son and my son, educated in American public schools, reared amidst our institutions, rocked by patriotic mothers, are obliged to wait 21 years before they have the right to exercise the sovereign right of citizenship. Yet within five years we take in strangers who do not furnish credentials of good citizenship abroad, who are mere birds of passage, who linger here because they find this soil and this Government congenial to their exploitation, and we hastily permit them to exercise all the rights of citizenship in this Republic.

I believe that these privileges are conferred often inappropriately. But I repeat what I said when I rose that the debt of this Republic to aliens who were never citizens of our country can never be repaid. Our armies were made up of men who did not speak our language. My honored friend from Minnesota told me a few moments ago that in the Mexican War thousands of Germans and Irishmen enlisted for service when Americans held back. But we dot our capital city here and there with statues of illustrious citizens, foreigners who came to render great service here, and then we meet in consultation and undertake to restrict, and, indeed, to forbid the children of those patriotic soldiers from coming here at all. I am entirely out of sympathy with it. I would keep every criminal out of this country; I would not allow the anarchist to come here under any condition. He ought to be deported. Thousands of them are here because of the laxity of our laws. Thousands of them come in under one test or another. They are intelligent, although misguided. But let us be sure that we do not erect barriers so high that the deserving and the honest and the patriotic and the country loving may be unfairly discriminated against. Our country should be an asylum for every good man and good woman who wants to come.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question.

Mr. STERLING. I withhold the amendment for that purpose.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, some of the best people in the world—real home-loving and honest people—live in Asia. There are about 600,000,000 of them in all. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if he would encourage their immigration here and open the Pacific coast to them? There are the Chinese and the Hindus, both of whom are a good people. There are no better; the Chinese are absolutely honest; as a class they are equally as honest as the average citizen of the United States. They are a good people and a kind people, but there are large numbers of them. They work for from 3 cents to 10 cents a day at home, which would be rather a hardship upon our people should we adopt them as citizens.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, well, Mr. President, that is not my proposition. In our relations with Asia we must not overlook the fact that the Asiatics are entitled to be treated fairly.

There is much in Asia that is desirable; there is much in Asia from which we could draw a very valuable lesson. I have heard the special agreement between our own Government and that of Japan referred to. I know about that agreement. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I was asked concerning it; and I said, when I was asked, that we should be very careful not to give one Asiatic people favors that we would not give to another; that, if we were ready to favor Japan, we ought also to be ready to favor China, which has just as high ideals of honor as has Japan.

No, Mr. President, I would not favor Asia especially, but I would not pass my favors out to portions of Asia and discriminate against other portions of Asia. I would have the courage to say that we do not believe that they would appropriately amalgamate with our people; that assimilation is impossible. I would have the courage to say that our racial differences were such as to be irreconcilable; but I would not pass favors to one country in Asia when I was withholding favors from another.

No one can tell how rapidly the Chinese Republic is to progress. Japan has progressed rapidly during the last quarter of a century, and China has gone from an Empire to a Republic. Perhaps the Chinese have not fully comprehended the purposes of republican institutions, but they are progressing.

Russia is making greater progress at the present moment than almost any other country in the world. Since the Russo-Japanese War the economic policy of Russia has been practically changed. Instead of forbidding her people to make her laws, as soon as Mukden fell the Russian was given the right to choose his legislators. There was no land which was owned by the peasantry of Russia up to the time of the Russo-Japanese War, and there are millions and millions of acres of land to-day owned by the peasantry of Russia. The Russian peasant who goes out on his farm to work now knows for whom he is working; but the Russian peasant of 10 years ago went first to one plat of ground and then to another as he was ordered. To-day they own their own soil from the place where their feet rest to the center of the earth, and they cultivate it for the benefit of their children and of their children's children.

We should not take to ourselves credit for all the progress made in the world. The whole of the world is progressing. We lighted the lamp, and they sit in the glory of our achievements. We were the first Republic. Now there are 20 Republics, which girdle the earth. We have no monopoly of virtue or of character or of intelligence; and I would have the test of citizenship here, especially among the races of people who naturally amalgamate with us, one of character, and not the mere question as to whether or not a man can parse a sentence correctly.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the amendment which the Senator from South Dakota proposes to offer an amendment to the text of the bill?

Mr. STERLING. It is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 15, after the word "residence," it is proposed to insert "and which persecution involves a restriction or denial to any class or sect of such aliens of the means or opportunities of obtaining an education sufficient to comply with the literacy test hereinbefore provided," so that it will read:

All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence and which persecution involves a restriction or denial to any class or sect of such aliens of the means or opportunities of obtaining an education sufficient to comply with the literacy test hereinbefore provided.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up time in the discussion of this amendment. I fully appreciate the point made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. Under the terms of the bill as it reads it will bar the illiterate Christian, but it will admit the illiterate Jew, if he can claim, of course, that he is a victim of religious persecution. This amendment recognizes the literacy test by providing that if the religious persecution involves a denial or a restriction of the means and opportunities of education, so that the immigrant is not enabled because of the laws or regulations of the foreign country against his sect or class to acquire the education sufficient to enable him to comply with the literacy test provided in the bill, he will nevertheless be admitted.

I think I can corroborate what was said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] a while ago, that in certain Provinces or districts of Russia there are those restrictions and those denials to the Jewish population of the means and opportunities of obtaining an education. I offer the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask to have the amendment again read to see whether or not it contains the provisions that are denied as to certain peoples and not denied to others. We ought to treat them all alike. The right of education may be denied also to another class, and they ought to be treated alike.

Mr. STERLING. It seems to me that the amendment will treat them all alike. That is the object of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 15, after the word "residence," it is proposed to insert the words "and which persecution involves a restriction or denial to any class or sect of such aliens of the means or opportunities of obtaining an education sufficient to comply with the literacy test hereinbefore provided."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, my motion being one to strike out, I can hardly see how this amendment can be moved to that amendment, but it seems to be in the nature of an original amendment and would be satisfactory to me. If the matter can be facilitated by withdrawing my amendment at the present time and allowing the Senator from South Dakota to offer an amendment to the original text, I shall be glad to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the parliamentary situation to be that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] had moved to strike out. Now, pending the motion to strike out, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] moves to amend the text sought to be stricken out. The Chair thinks the Senator from South Dakota has a right to do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree to that, and would be glad to see the language so amended; and I would say that if it is so amended I would not press my motion to strike out the whole provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those in favor of the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment to the pending bill. Yesterday afternoon I referred to a proposed amendment on the subject of the prohibition of "picture brides," a new situation which has grown up in the West. I now submit the amendment as drafted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 7, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

No woman not legitimately married according to our laws and not otherwise excluded by this act shall be permitted to enter the territory of the United States or any possessions thereof when the men of the same race and class are excluded either by law, treaty, or agreement. No proxy, picture, or other marriages not regularly solemnized between the two contracting parties in person before the date of the departure of either or both of the parties from their own country shall be held to be legitimate for the purposes of this act by the departments and courts of the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have in my hand an article by Dr. W. C. Billings, surgeon, United States Health Service, chief medical officer of the Immigration Service at Angel Island, San Francisco. In this article Dr. Billings goes on to say:

The immigration received at our Atlantic ports, while certainly racially heterogeneous enough to satisfy the most extreme longing for variety, still admits, and as time goes on will admit, more and more, of an opportunity to study from an eugenic standpoint the ultimate product of the "melting pot."

The "melting pot," as we all know, is that crucible into which the people of the earth are put to the test of amalgamation. Sometimes they amalgamate and sometimes they do not. It is established that the brown and black races do not amalgamate with the white, but remain identically the same as when they are put into this melting pot or smelting pot. They do not amalgamate; they do not "smelt"; and therefore they are undesirable elements in the composition of our population. Of course, ultimately we all look to a homogeneous American population. Disraeli, I remember, once remarked that he regretted that the Republic of the Puritans had not blended with the tribes of the wilderness, for then we would have had a real American nationality. That was a poet's fancy, but what nationality we have is certainly a composite nationality; and here we find a process going on on the Pacific coast which defeats the purpose of our American Commonwealth.

The Rev. B. C. Howorth, who lived 19 years in Japan as a missionary, and for the past eight years in the Immigration Service of the United States, says that there is no fear whatever of any attempt being made to amalgamate the Japanese and the Americans, as we understand them, because it seems to be repugnant to both parties. Not more than 20 cases have come to his knowledge. And Dr. Billings adds:

Occidental races will intermarry to almost any extent, but under such conditions as have so far existed in the United States the occidental exhibits no tendency to intermarry with the oriental, and that lack of inclination seems to be entirely mutual.

The large number of orientals coming into the western coast finding that intermarriage is impossible for centuries-old racial reasons—the product of such union, whenever it takes place, being degenerate, the faults of both parents being accentuated in the child and the virtues diminished—decided to import their own brides; and that practice has been going on, I claim, in violation of law. Now, it has come to be our duty to see that this loophole of the law is closed, if the law is ineffective, and the practice stopped.

I have in my hand a table by Dr. Billings showing that in the 10 years 1905–1914 the whole number of females and "photo" or "picture" brides, as they are called, coming into the port of San Francisco, one port of this country, aggregates 6,003. From 1905 the increase has been constant, until in the year 1914, according to Dr. Billings's table, a total of 1,595 such persons arrived in the port of San Francisco. On account of his great familiarity with the subject, I will continue to quote briefly from the doctor. Referring to his table, he says:

The column headed "Photograph brides" represents one of the most interesting classes of Japanese immigration, although the term is, strictly speaking, a misnomer, inasmuch as a photograph, although very naturally often exchanged, is in no way a necessary or indispensable part of the arrangement. The term "proxy brides," which is frequently applied to the same class, is, in so far as it implies the presence of a third party, also a misnomer, as, properly speaking, there are no proxy marriages in Japan.

The agreement referred to between the American and Japanese Governments to stop the emigration of laborers was made in 1908, and at that time a very considerable number of Japanese laborers were domiciled in this country, particularly upon the Pacific coast. Section 37 of the law, already quoted, allows domiciled aliens to bring their wives to join them, and these men very naturally take advantage of the privilege.

I question the interpretation the doctor gives to section 37, which I will presently read. He goes on:

Marriage in Japan is arranged by the parents of the contracting parties, and consists of removing from the register of her own family the name of the bride and adding it, in the official register of the administrative district in which he lives, to the names of the family of the groom. There is no civil or religious ceremony, unless the contracting parties happen to be Christians. The ceremony of removing the name is followed by a social gathering of friends, and assumes a congratulatory character.

So that it is a mere announcement of a wedding when a wedding occurs. But here we have a Japanese living in San Francisco marrying a woman 6,000 miles away by an agreement based upon a photograph, which serves for her identification, and then she comes to San Francisco, where, I believe, another ceremony is performed. The commissioner of immigration at the port of San Francisco is Edward White, a brother of the late United States Senator Stephen M. White, and he again in a letter addressed to me in answer to one of mine reiterates erroneously, I believe, that under section 37 of the immigration act these marriages seem to be authorized and this immigration permitted. He says that—

On the production of the marriage licenses and certificates of marriage, these women are granted their discharge.

That is, from the immigrant ship after the ship has arrived at the immigration station.

After they have left our control it is not possible to keep very close track of them, as they are scattered over a very large area, and our force is not sufficient to keep in touch with them, investigating social conditions—

And so forth.

Therefore, he says, he is not responsible for the conduct of these persons. He adds:

From personal observation and from reports received at this station we are satisfied that with very few exceptions these women do not come here for immoral purposes. As a rule they become mothers of large families—and at the same time do a man's work on the farms wherever located.

That is the very point that I wish to accentuate—

There are at present over 15,000 native Japanese children in California, and the number is increasing to the most alarming extent. At the present rate of increase it will be but a short time when the native Japanese population of this coast will be numbered by the thousands. In many of the farming districts in California the Japanese farmer has practically obtained control; in fact, the fruit, potato, and beet industries are dominated by Japanese. As an instance in this connection I will cite that of George Shima, called the "Potato King," who came to this country a few years ago without means and who now has title to 5,000 acres of the best land in San Joaquin County, and leases 15,000 acres more, all of which he farms to potatoes, barley, and beans, and controls as a result the potato market of California.

That is one example to show the very great cleverness of these nonassimilable people. They are so industrious, so thrifty, so, if you please, superior in industry and thrift to our own people that they beat them at their own game.

Now, I wish to point out that while I do not in any way detract from the thrift and industry of these men, still I submit where they are not assimilable it becomes a question of abandoning our western coast to them unless they are excluded, unless their means of propagating their species is denied. That is the question; the question of abandoning the western territory to them if their immigration and increase are not restricted, and that is why we are all in favor of the restriction of the immigration in order that the American people there may, pursuing their higher standards, live in comfort. They do not work 16 to 20 hours a day, as do their Japanese competitors. That is a test of industry and also of endurance. Our people work from 8 to 10 hours a day, and have time for rest and recreation and play; time, if you please, to participate in political activities and civic life, for supporting churches and schools and theaters, enjoying all the gratifications of an enlightened people under the ægis of this Government. If that is denied them, they will be driven by sheer necessity to get down to the level of the others, who come without any of those burdens to bear of civilization, of church, of school, who do not take holidays, but work unremittingly all the time. So we must not therefore say that because our own people are less industrious, refusing to work for a longer period, that they are not the instruments of Providence for the uplifting of civilization and humanity. They may be unconscious of it, but their demands for better conditions mean the advancement of the world.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator make plain—I did not understand the figures which he gave—how many so-called "picture brides" come into California or come in at the port of San Francisco every year?

Mr. PHELAN. According to this table, the last which Dr. Billings quotes, in 1914 the number of males who entered the port of San Francisco was 2,018, the number of females 1,856, the number of photo brides—he seems to segregate them—1,595.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not a large number. The evil is not a very great one, according to those figures.

Mr. PHELAN. No; but when each photograph bride can, on account of the great productivity of the race, bear 5 or 10 children, they multiply themselves at an alarming rate; and it is a fact that the productivity of the Japanese is exceptional. Hence in five years a picture bride will have multiplied herself five times; or, if they come in at the rate of 1,500 a year, it means possibly the addition of 1,500 more every year; and that goes on by geometrical progression.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Do the figures that the Senator has available indicate how many Japanese leave this country every year?

Mr. PHELAN. I have not those figures here now; but they are insignificant, since they value their residence in the United States so highly that they hesitate to depart until they have made a stake. I am told that in the Hawaiian Islands when they make a thousand dollars they go back home and live in luxury, where men of that class only receive a few cents a day in wages—not more than 10 or 15 cents.

I should like to continue the letter of Commissioner White. It is practically closed. He says:

The social and economic conditions under which the Japanese live are such that our American farmer can not compete with him, and if something is not done in the immediate future to stop this class of immigration the time is not far distant when the entire farming industry of this coast will pass into the hands of the Japanese. Already the Japanese are reaching out for the commerce of the Pacific Ocean, and with the land of California and our commerce in their hands we will be more an adjunct of Japan than part of the American Union.

That is the opinion of a man engaged in handling these immigrants, who is and whose fathers before him for two generations have been farmers in California, and whose brother, Stephen M. White, as I remind Senators, was some years ago one of their colleagues.

One moment, Mr. President, to give another example of this great change that is happening in our country through the West, and with which apparently the East is not familiar, misinformed and moved largely by the skill of diplomacy, moved by the opinions of the press, and the creation of a certain sentimentality of brotherhood by well-meaning men—

The steady patriots of the world alone,
The friends of every country but their own.

I have here a population chart of the Territory of Hawaii printed in the last report of Gov. Pinkham, and it shows this:

Japanese, 97,000.
Hawaiians, 23,000.
Americans, British, Germans, and Russians combined, 16,000.

The increase of the Japanese is out of all proportion to the increase among the other nationalities. In fact, there has been practically no American increase at all, and the Hawaiians have actually gone back. But what bears upon this discussion is the comparative table of births in the Territory of Hawaii, an American Territory:

July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1916: American births, 1,343; Chinese, 4,031; Japanese, 22,387.

The Americans are in possession of that country, and their birth rate during that period is 1,343, as against 22,387.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what is the resident population of Japs and the American population in Hawaii. There is a wide difference, I think.

Mr. PHELAN. I believe I have just stated that the Japanese numbered 97,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And the Americans?

Mr. PHELAN. They group here the Americans, British, Germans, and Russians at 16,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There is a very wide difference in the population.

Mr. PHELAN. I think the Americans alone are about 10,000 in number.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Naturally the Japanese birth rate would be larger then. That is a legitimate result.

Mr. PHELAN. I think that is perfectly obvious. I will say that on account of the productivity of the Japanese, as opposed to the lack of productivity in the more refined and less, therefore, prolific peoples—civilization and productivity do not go together—the Japanese are populating the land out of all proportion to their numbers.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Does not the same condition prevail throughout the world, not alone with reference to the Japanese race? Does it not apply to the highly cultivated races, if you choose, of England and of France? The great problem in France to-day is the lack of births, the decrease of the birth rate; so as that condition has been cultivated, seemingly, the propagation or increase of their kind lessens.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I suppose the ruder the people are the greater the productivity.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is doubtless true.

Mr. PHELAN. And hence there becomes manifest the necessity of peopling this land, where our own people do not produce their kind to the extent desired, by desirable immigrants from the white nations of the earth. Otherwise, the great principles for which our Government stands will be lost to the world, unless new lovers of liberty, like the original immigration, are now permitted to come in here freely to support them. We only are busy in the Senate to-day, as I understand, to keep out undesirables. The orientals are such.

But there is the story of the "picture brides." I do not believe we should tolerate such a condition. Both Mr. White and Dr. Billings refer to section 37 of the immigration act, under which they have apparently, as officials of the San Francisco station, doubtless at the direction of the Department of Labor, admitted these picture brides. Section 37 says:

That whenever an alien shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country, and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him—

If they are without disease—

they shall, if otherwise admissible, thereupon be admitted.

First, you will observe that this right inheres in one who has taken up his permanent residence in this country. These people,

I venture to observe, have not taken up a permanent residence. They come, make a stake, and return, and by some legerdemain another takes their place. It is hard to identify them, and that is the way the population of the oriental is maintained. Even when he goes away he leaves his counterpart behind, so there is no gain for us—gain in the sense of losing him.

But secondly, he must also have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen. Now, inasmuch as under our naturalization laws the Japanese are ineligible to become citizens, it is a perfect mockery to say that if one so ineligible should declare his intention to become a citizen he could qualify himself under this act for the purpose of importing a wife. This section seems to have been written for the very purpose of keeping out oriental brides, and yet these officials refer to section 37 of the immigration act and the inherited practice thereunder to justify the admission of these brides. Is that another example of the subserviency under which we labor to the oriental Empire? There seems to be such an overweening desire to strain the law, aye, even to violate it, in order to help out these unfortunate people. "If you do not favor us, even to the extent of violating your own laws in our behalf, woe unto you, ye men of the West! We are aroused. We shall resent any attempt on your part to interfere with our nationals, even though they live in violation of your municipal laws."

But whereas the present law practically denies them the right to import their women, because they are incapable of making a declaration of naturalization, what was my surprise to find that in the bill which is submitted to the Senate, the Senate committee has amended it and the House language in the interest of the picture brides—the very evil of which we complain! As it came from the House, section 22, on page 49, reads:

> That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him—

His wife and children may join him. The Senate committee had stricken out the words "taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen," and has substituted "shall have resided in the United States for seven consecutive years." It does not require permanent residence in this country beyond a period of seven years, which is a convenience for somebody who does not intend to remain, and it does not require him to have filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen. Why abandon the advantage we have? Why defeat the purpose of the House?

I do not think that the language proposed by the Senate committee should have been approved by this body, but I will not move now a reconsideration, because the hour is late. I do ask, however, that the amendment I have submitted may be adopted. By that means, going into conference, there can be devised some scheme by which this purpose may be reconciled with the language of the amendment, to the end that this evil, which is aggravating the Japanese peril, and which is bound to result in further irritation and possibly in serious trouble, may be abated by act of Congress.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] a question which has suggested itself to me. If these Japanese men send for native women of their own country and marry them, does the Senator claim that their children become citizens?

Mr. PHELAN. Children born upon American soil, whether in the Territory of Hawaii or in California or in Oregon or Washington, as the Senator well knows, do become citizens and voters.

Mr. LANE. That being the case, would they not then be under the absolute control of the laws of this country and the will of our Government, and therefore removed from the influence of Japan; and would not that remove the objection that they would remain loyal to the country of their parents, and follow or obey its behests?

Mr. PHELAN. It has been my observation of a lifetime that the Japanese always adhere to their own allegiance; they always feel that they are subjects of the Emperor; they have a superstitious regard for the Emperor, and feel that they owe loyalty only to their native land; and that is one of the elements, apart from physical considerations, of their nonassimilability.

Mr. LANE. Then, would not their becoming citizens remove them from that influence and perhaps make them of less danger to the country than they would be if you denied them the right of citizenship? Do not the Japanese, or the people of any other nation where there are large numbers of males only, in an American community debauch our own women? Do they not prey upon us in that way, and is not that an evil? Is it wise to refuse them the right to bring their own wives? Is it a proposition that in the long run is wise?

If a man will marry a woman on a picture of her, he ought to be allowed to have her. We ought to punish him by making him marry her and live with her. At any rate, laying that view of it aside, would it not in the long run be for the betterment of the general condition of the country that they have their own women to marry and to raise children by rather than to let them loose upon this country to prey upon our women?

Mr. PHELAN. I am looking at it as a broad national question. I am not concerned about the individual.

Mr. LANE. Not about our people—the women of our race? The Senator is not concerned about their welfare?

Mr. PHELAN. If it can be said that the women are exposed to danger because of the presence of men without wives, I suppose our laws are well able to take care of them. That is what laws are for; and it will be an additional reason for them to return to their native shores and renew their companionship with their wives, if they have any, or otherwise to make matrimonial arrangements. It will be an additional incentive operating in our favor for them to go back home. For racial reasons Japanese so born do not become American citizens, even if intellectually they are our equals and even if they possess an intellectual appreciation of our institutions. When they come in such large numbers, being unable physically to assimilate with us—or, to put it the other way, as in the South, it being undesirable to encourage assimilation—they should be discouraged from coming here. They can not, in the nature of things, make desirable American citizens; and the problem is insistent and aggravated on account of the large number on the other side of the ocean who desire to come.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] was surprised that we were not interested in immigration from the West Indies and from the Azores. That is no problem. Those people are not trying to get into this country in any appreciable numbers; but we on the Pacific coast have been holding back, in the matter of the Chinese and the Japanese, a real, silent, but overwhelming invasion. They are accomplishing by silence and diplomatic means what they dare not attempt by open and forceful means.

The Senator will remember, from his reading of history, that the civilization of Europe, of which we are so proud and of which we are the product, was saved from these Asiatic hordes by the little band of Greeks at Marathon, which gave us two centuries of Athenian life, by the Gauls, who drove back Attila and his Asiatic hordes, and by Sobieski at the gates of Vienna, who repelled the Turkish Mongolian incursion. They were always fighting a horde of migratory Asiatics to protect and save our civilization; and we are making that same fight upon the Pacific coast to-day, and we are not understood nor appreciated. We are saving this country from Asiatic contamination. The orientals now have all the commerce of the Pacific. Out of every six ships from the Orient that come in five are Japanese, giving a preference to the Japanese in matters of freight and passengers; and we are indulging the "pipe dream" that these are a harmless and inoffensive people, who have no designs whatever on our commerce nor to possess our land. Yet I say they are insidiously possessing themselves of our land to-day, and in violation of the law smuggling themselves over the border and importing "wives." This is a land which attracts them. Climatically better than any land on earth are Hawaii and California to the Japanese. They do not invade the colder climates. In some instances they can not be controlled by their own Government, which I believe would turn them to Korea and Manchuria, where they have vast undeveloped areas. They have a great destiny in their own country, where, I believe, they should stay, and keep us out of it, except as they come here for commerce and trade. We ask nothing which we should not be ready to grant to others.

Mr. LANE. I appreciate the statement that if more came they would be inimical to the country; but I was wondering whether or not if they had family ties, they being an independent and proud people, it would be a step toward the settlement of the matter if the children of those already here became citizens.

The Senator knows, because he has lived there all his life, and I know, because I have lived there all my life, that they were brought into Hawaii because they furnished cheap labor. They were imported there. We sought them. They did not come until we did seek them. We had hard work to get them. We sent agent after agent to Japan to get them in in order that some of us might grind the face of Caucasian labor and beat down the price of it. We put them on our railroads for the same purpose; we did it also with the Chinese, and the Japanese are there yet in the section gangs. You in California put them out in your orchards, your vineyards, and your hop fields so that you might get the cheapest of labor, cheaper than the white man could afford to render, and you have them there now, and we have them in Oregon, and we are both responsible for it. They like our country. We put them into Hawaii for the same reason, and they like that, and there they are, and they will not stand brushing aside. You can not go up to a Jap and boss him around or tell him to get out of your way. He will personally insult or offer violence to you, and you will have to take it or fight. They do not stand for any such talk. You have to treat them fairly.

I realize that if the hordes of that country and the immense hordes of China are allowed to come in freely they will push our people out. But we are responsible for it to a certain extent; and in the case of those that we have brought in here we ought, in making a basis for future action, at least give them a fair, square deal and adopt those means which will be least harmful in our efforts to stop further immigration.

I was just wondering whether it would not be better for this country, in the larger aspect of the case, in view of the situation that exists, to let them bring their women here, and marry them, and be their legitimate husbands? That might make their children loyal to this country—and their loyalty to the country they love is unsurpassed by the loyalty of any other people in the world. Would not that be better than to leave them loose upon our women, if you please? Is not that our duty as the people who imported them?

The Caucasian hunted down and made a slave of the African, and lived on his labor, in order to get labor at a cheaper price than the white man would work for. The white man brought the Japanese to the Pacific coast because he would work cheaper than the white man. I have seen it done all my life, and I have not much patience with the theories or methods which overlook the rights of the white men of the country. They are getting possession of the land now. They are becoming the leaseholders of the land. They are digging into "big business" now, and for that reason they have become obnoxious. Just as long as they worked here for less wages than the white man, and lay low, and kept dark, and would stand for the orders that were given to them, whether they were just or unjust, there was no question regarding them raised in this Senate. We of the poorer class of the Pacific coast resented it when they came in on our backs, and when certain other gentlemen put them there and said they were superior to the white man for the reason that they would work for less money and get along on a smaller amount of food. Now they are digging into the ribs of the gentlemen who brought them here, and they are very much interested in it now—and I am, too, looking at it broadly, to protect the white women—and I am not sure you will accomplish your object by excluding the Japanese women. There is no better mother in the world than the little Japanese woman. There is no woman kinder to her baby, no better wife than the little Japanese girl makes to her husband. We have them there, the Senator says, to the extent of 97,000 in Hawaii and 45,000 in California, and in Oregon we have our share, necessarily preying upon our white girls. Give an eye and a thought to them, if you please.

That was what attracted my attention. I am not saying this to the Senator from California personally. It is what we all have done, and what the people on this side of the country did with the race of people that they forced to come here.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the vote on the amendment of the Senator from California, although I was not privileged to hear it read, having been absent; but I do want to express the hope that this discussion of the relations of our Government with Japan may end before long. We went behind closed doors the other day to discuss that question, and it has been discussed at least half a dozen times since then along substantially the same lines that it was discussed behind closed doors.

I do not know what effect this prolonged discussion may have upon the interests of our people in the future, but I really think we ought to terminate it in the near future. Japan has control of the Pacific Ocean to-day. It is our fault that she has. Our commerce on the Pacific Ocean has been wiped out because of our own fault in matters of legislation. Japan is a great nation, and not only a great naval power but a great military power. We are on terms of friendship with her to-day. I hope that we will always continue to be on terms of friendship, but I suggest that if we are to have interminable debates on questions relating to Japan in this body or in the other body, we may possibly regret it at some time in the future.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say on this matter. My only purpose is to express the hope that we will soon get through discussing the relations—commercial, industrial, economic, or political—between ourselves and a nation that has given us no occasion for entertaining anything but friendly thoughts toward her and having friendly relations with her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following words:

No woman not legitimately married according to the laws of the United States, and not otherwise excluded by this act, shall be permitted to enter the territory of the United States, or any possession thereof, when the men of the same race and class are excluded either by law, treaty, or agreement.

No proxy, "picture," or other marriages not regularly solemnized between the two contracting parties in person before the date of the departure of either or both parties from their own country shall be held to be legitimate for the purposes of this act by the departments and courts of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is too late. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am new in this body. I should like to know why it is too late to call for the yeas and nays. Ordinarily the Chair pauses to see if it is the intention of either side to call for the yeas and nays. There was no such pause. I therefore ask the Chair to submit the question on ordering the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the yeas and nays were called for and, I think, only two hands were raised. The call was denied under our rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not the intention of the Chair to act in any way adverse to the interests of the Senator from California, and the Chair was not conscious that he did it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is a provision in the bill which would have made those who engaged in the Boston tea party inadmissible to citizenship in this country if the destruction of the tea had occurred in a foreign country. I apprehend that those who framed the bill in the language which is before me on page 5, a portion of which I purpose to move to strike out, had in mind a purpose with which few would disagree, but I think the language is very inapt. I move to strike out, on page 5, lines 10 and 11, the words:

or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property.

And also the same words in lines 19 and 20 on the same page. As the words are identical, I think I can make the motion in that way.

The clause on page 5, lines 10 and 11, would exclude from this country anyone who advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property. No revolutionary movement could possibly be conducted without resulting in the destruction of property, and those who were organizing for that purpose would have to agree among themselves that they would perhaps blow up a fort or take forcible possession of an arsenal.

I called the attention of the chairman of the committee and of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the phraseology, and both of them agreed that it ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, this is in keeping with the clause that has already gone out of the bill, and as chairman of the committee I accept the proposed amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then there should also be another clause stricken out in connection with that; but I suppose the vote should be taken first on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I presume that language was placed in the bill by the other House to meet a condition that does exist in this country to some extent. In the hearings before the late Industrial Commission in the city of New York a Mr. St. John, representing a great organization in this country, openly declared that he and his men with whom he was associated believed in sabotage; that they believed it was right; that the means justified the end—to destroy the machines upon which they were working and to compel obedience to their demands by methods of that kind.

Now, I apprehend this language was put in there for that purpose. It may be unfortunate language, but I want to say before it goes out that that is one of the problems which we shall have to deal with in the future, as long as we tolerate at least one organization in this country, composed of possibly hundreds of thousands of men, who openly say that any means whatever, lawful or unlawful, fair or foul, which are employed in the name of labor are legitimate. I take exception to that view, and I think our Government in some way, not in the far distant future but in the near future, will have to face that problem as well as other serious problems that are not far away from us at the present time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Only a word, Mr. President. It will be dealt with, I trust, whenever it is taken up in language that will not destroy the privilege of asylum in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 57, I move to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 23 and ending with line 3, on the next page. I will read the language proposed to be stricken out:

> Any person who knowingly aids or assists any alien who advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property to enter the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Of course, with the other language stricken out, there is nothing for that to relate to in the bill, and it should go out. I move to strike it out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not quite sure about that. Here is a proposition that we think we ought not to legislate against a man who knowingly aids or abets or assists any alien who advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property to enter the United States. Mr. President, I think we ought to take pause before we place ourselves on record in opposition to that declaration.

We are going pretty rapidly in mutilating this bill, and I am not quite sure it will not become my duty or the duty of some other Senator to move that we yield to the demands of every alien, whatever his demands may be, whether they are fair or foul, lawful or unlawful, who comes into this country.

The unlawful destruction of property is a very serious matter, because, as a rule, it means the destruction of human life at the same time; and if we are to admit men to our country and uphold them by our laws and by public sentiment, who openly declare that property and life may be destroyed simply because the condition of society is not what they would have it, I think we are entering upon a very serious condition of things.

I want now, Mr. President, simply to say to the Committee on Immigration, with whom I have cooperated in this legislation, and I want to address myself to the chairman of the committee—I say to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and the other members of that committee with whom I have cooperated cordially and sincerely with reference to this kind of legislation, not only this year but in former years—that if every proposed amendment, no matter how absurd it may be, is to be agreed to by the committee offhand and allowed to go on this bill, it is barely possible the bill will not get through any faster than it would if the committee acted on their judgment and gave us the benefit of their views.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will remember that the paragraph in the bill which the Senate committee had written in in reference to this matter, as was called to the attention of the Senate, would preclude those who were under persecution abroad or under what would be considered intolerable conditions of their government who might revolt and be guilty of what is known as a political crime. The Senate took action on that question after extended debate here.

Now, this is of less consequence. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has had more experience than I have had in these matters, as this will refer under the administration of our immigration department to those political offenses which have been taken care of heretofore, suggested that the committee allow these clauses to go out after the first one had already gone out.

The committee deemed that on this last proposition to amend by striking out, having the other two provisions eliminated, the clause has nothing to which it would refer. We do not debar those who teach the unlawful destruction of property when they are resisting the government they are subject to when they come here. That is the reason why the suggestion was made to the chairman by perhaps the oldest member of the committee, that it would be very well for us to allow this clause to go out on account of the political aspect, this country heretofore having been able to take care of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this country has not taken very good care in cases that I might cite if I cared to occupy the attention of the Senate. In my own State property has been destroyed, and yet these men have been upheld and very few of them punished. I think that we may well consider this as a very serious matter. If we have eliminated from the bill other provisions of more consequence looking to the safety of our people and the property of our citizens, I think it is about time we allowed at least a mild proposition such as is contained in these words to remain in the bill.

But I think I understand the situation pretty well. I have seen it done here before a great many times. I have never been a party to it. It is to allow anything to go into a bill for a day or two and to take care of it in conference.

I should like the committee to stand by the report they have made to this body if they believe in it. If they do not believe in it, that is another proposition.

I repeat, if the bill is to be hastened through by accepting pretty much any proposition that is made by way of amendment, it is barely possible that it may be halted by some of us who do not believe in that kind of legislation.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am a little afraid that we made a mistake in striking out the other portions of this bill. I am quite sure that this provision ought not to be stricken out. I do not think we ought to put ourselves in the position of encouraging or acknowledging the lawfulness of just such a thing as is forbidden by this clause in the bill. We ought not to be encouraging anarchy or the willful and unlawful destruction of property.

Whatever may be done with this provision when it goes into conference the Senate is putting itself in the attitude of waiving that sort of thing by striking out this provision in the bill. For that reason I do not like the effect of it myself.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from California entirely misapprehend the scope of the language which it is proposed to strike out of the bill. I think one can fairly assume that both those Senators will readily agree that the destruction of property by any revolutionary movement before that movement has arrived at such a stage as to have recognition as belligerents would be an unlawful destruction of property, and that those who had engaged in seeking to overthrow an empire, to establish, we will say, a democracy, who have advocated and have participated in the destruction of property in carrying on their revolutionary movement, in the event of its failure before they reach that stage where they were recognized as belligerents and where the destruction of property would not be unlawful, would be forever barred from admission to this country.

Mr. President, I apprehend no one would have moved to strike out this language or to strike out any provision in the bill, which was directed to reach the destruction of property through those who were opposed to organized government.

Mr. WORKS. The trouble about that is that we are striking out a clause in the bill which does cover just that condition of things.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then it could be framed so as to cover that and nothing else.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator is perfectly right; but this language goes to the anarchistic destruction of property, if I may use that term, and that portion ought not to be stricken out. If it could be limited to that, of course that would be all well enough.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The language as framed now would deny to this country any man who ever participated in a revolution in Europe.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; but it would exclude a great many other people who ought to be excluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But it is so framed as to deny the privilege of asylum to good, patriotic men, such as we have always welcomed in this country since we have been a government. It is because it is so framed and not that I desire to give harbor to the undesirables referred to by the Senator that I moved to strike it out.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I voted against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, which struck out the previous provision referring to undesirable aliens. Although there was no record vote, I was one of two who voted against it. I shall vote against this amendment, first, because I do not think that anybody here properly understands the situation, and, second, because it is wrong.

The suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin should be framed in such a way as to cover what he has in mind, but this provision excluding criminals should remain. The amendment we are now considering is a part of section 28. That section deals principally with anarchists. Shall we strike that paragraph out and thus invite that class of people into this country? With that out of the bill it will contain no provision to punish those who encourage and induce the landing of anarchists known as such because of their profession of destroying property.

If we are going to confine this to the class of men suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, to whom few would take exception, it should be so expressed. I for one want it understood that I did vote to strike out the other provisions, for I think they excluded most undesirable immigrants.

You are going too far. This bill is being relegated to a conference committee to frame. Provision after provision has been criticized by its proponents as being such as were not properly understood; they ask to have it shaped some way in conference. Is that the way for the Senate to legislate in matters of this grave importance?

Mr. President, I shall be obliged to vote against this bill if these provisions are to be stricken from it. I want to support the measure. I have supported similar bills in the past, because I have believed in restricting immigration; and I have known no better provision, at least no better provision has been presented, than the literacy test. If some better one could be presented, I would gladly support it; but this, it seems to me, does exclude a large class of unworthy people from our country. Therefore I have expected to vote for it. I shall not be a party to any unwise attempt to extend a doubtful benefit to a few revolutionists who may be patriotic which, however, clearly does admit a class of undesirables, of which we already have too many. If we do not want to exclude the better class, let us mention them, and so confine the bill in terms to what we really desire. I object, Mr. President, to this matter being stricken out in this way.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I was not paying attention to the proceedings when that action was taken, and I suppose I am therefore counted among those who voted for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has a right to move to reconsider.

Mr. PHELAN. That was my purpose in rising.

I simply desire to say that I did not agree with the Senator from Wisconsin in making it appear that the clause relates to revolutionists. I believe in "the divine right of revolution." I believe this refers to what is known as sabotage, where property is destroyed as a means for obtaining some industrial end; and I do not think it should be encouraged. The destruction of property is not the way to settle difficulties or even to get a hearing. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the language was stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question first comes upon the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to strike out the language at the bottom of page 57 of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. First, Mr. President, there is a motion pending to strike out. Perhaps that is what the Chair stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not catch the statement. I have a motion pending to strike out the last paragraph of section 28, on page 57. The Senator from Michigan states that if that last paragraph is stricken out there will be no provision of the bill under which the offense of aiding in the bringing in of anarchists can be punished. All the first part of section 28, down to line 23, takes care of that, and provides a penalty of $5,000. I think the Senator must have overlooked that or he would not have made the statement. The language is:

SEC. 28. That any person who knowingly aids or assists any anarchist or any person who believes in or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government, or all forms of law, or who advocates the assassination of public officials, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, to enter the United States, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such anarchist or person aforesaid to enter therein, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

The provision on page 5, which remains in the bill after the two clauses which have been stricken out upon my motion and which relates to anarchists, will read as follows:

Anarchists—

That is, those persons who are debarred from admission altogether—

anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials—

I am now reading it with those words out—persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character.

So the change which would be made if the pending amendment be adopted would still leave in the bill the provision against the admission of anarchists and the punishment of those who aid such persons to enter this country.

It leaves the bill infinitely stronger than is the existing law, which excludes anarchists or persons believing in or advocating the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States. I assume that it was the purpose of those who drafted this measure in this clause to shut out people who would be inclined to engage in or who advocated or taught the unlawful destruction of property. However desirable that end, these clauses were so drafted that no man who participated in any attempt to overthrow a tyrannical government, if these clauses had been the law, could possibly have gained admission to this country. These clauses were stricken from the bill, and the pending amendment merely seeks to strike from the bill a clause under which any citizen of this country could be punished if he aided a revolutionist like Carl Schurz to enter this country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In moving to strike it out, I took the easiest means of producing a situation which would leave the committee that framed the bill in the other House and the committee of the Senate, from whom will be drawn the conferees, to find apt and proper language in the deliberations of the conference committee, where they would be able, as I believe and as has been suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], to frame a provision that would properly be a part of such a paragraph.

I do not think that under a total misapprehension here we ought to permit to remain in this bill in a way in which it can not be amended in conference a provision which brings it entirely within the criticism made by the President when he vetoed this measure, that we were incorporating in it any phraseology or any provision which would deny, or could be construed to deny, the right of asylum in this country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire again to state that if we strike out, in addition to the two provisions which have been stricken out, the one now under discussion, I can find no provision in this bill that would attempt to punish anybody who sought to bring into the United States an anarchist, whose business is the destruction of property. I do not believe that the Senate wants to pass a bill upon which that construction can be placed. I think we had better adjourn to-night and let the bill go over until to-morrow, and it will be an easy matter to provide just exactly what we want to exempt and what we all agree upon should be exempted, rather than have the Senate make a serious mistake.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the point that was made in reference to the President's veto of the last immigration bill, which has had great weight with the committee. The House framed the bill and sent it over to us containing the two provisions which have been stricken out and the one which it is now proposed to strike out. If we can, we should so frame this language as to meet his objection and yet save us from any unfortunate conditions that may confront us, because all of us know that certain acts will follow whenever an oppressed people rise up to resist oppression. If we strike out the provisions drafted by the House, it will afford an opportunity in conference between the two Houses to adjust the matter satisfactorily. Let us, with a clear understanding of what they want and what we want and what opposition we are to meet, put the bill in such shape that it may be perfected. The action taken is not due to any attempt on our part to encourage anarchy or to encourage the unlawful destruction of property. We are not proposing to do anything of the kind. Nor can it be considered as catering to passions that may sometimes be present in our labor troubles. It is due to a disposition on our part to get a bill, if possible, that may meet the objections of the Chief Executive in the exercise of his veto power and yet preserve to us the very things that we want in this bill. A reading of the President's veto will disclose the fact that this provision is one of the grounds upon which he based his action.

Now, as to the provision concerning anarchy and the destruction of organized government, we have not touched that, and, as has been pointed out, the provision in regard to anarchists is separate and distinct from that paragraph which provides a penalty for aiding and assisting those advocating anarchistic principles who desire to come in. I am sure that the conference committee can find language that will meet the cases to which the Senator from New Hampshire and others have called attention, and not to run the risk of denying asylum to those patriots who in resisting oppression have incidentally done violence to property.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, does not the Senator think that if we take an adjournment the committee could do that as well as the conference committee? The Senator knows how helpless we are when a conference report comes in here. We have to vote it up or down without the power to amend it.

Again, Mr. President, I want to suggest that we are now trenching on a new field of legislation, that we are to legislate to please the Chief Executive, that we are to legislate so that he will approve of the bill we pass.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I will venture to ask the Senator from South Carolina, if he has any information that he would feel like divulging as to whether or not the President of the United States has changed his mind regarding the literacy test because of which he vetoed the last immigration bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have no information that I would not give to the Senate if I were in possession of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the facility with which the President can change his mind as to other matters, and possibly he has changed his mind in reference to the literacy test, but, whether he has or not, I think we ought to legislate along a line that we approve of and take our chances with the Chief Executive.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from New Hampshire, of all men in the Senate, would not impute to me a desire to be untrue to a principle in order to avoid what others may do in reference to that principle. That is not the point. Some men are masters of expression, and we desire to so express ourselves in reference to this matter as to keep what we are striving for and match expression against expression when it comes to the question of a reason for vetoing it. I would be delighted to be able to present a bill that keeps the principles that we all want, and yet deny asylum in this country to no one who desires it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will pardon me, let me state it in a little different way. We are not trying so much to draw this bill so as to meet the Executive approval as to draw this bill so as to meet an objection already urged that may to our minds be good in part. That is perfectly proper, whether the objection comes from the Executive or anybody else. An objection has been made along this line. There is some merit in it to some extent, so that we ought when we are passing the bill again to try, so far as we can, to meet that objection. It is not a question of subserviency to the Executive at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and yet this is not the first time during this debate that we have been told that we ought to be careful and not put anything in this bill that would cause the President to have substantial grounds for vetoing it. I do not like that expression in the debate on a bill of this kind. But, however that may be, I will again ask the Senator from South Carolina—and after making the inquiry will take my seat—whether he does not think if we adjourn to-night that the committee, composed of wise men, with the aid, if you please, of the Senator from Wisconsin, who takes much interest in this matter, can frame a provision that we may agree to, without having it go to conference, where whatever is agreed to we will have to adopt, whether we like it or not? I ask that question of the Senator in all sincerity and good faith.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has served so long a time in this body that I am sure he sympathizes with me and appreciates fully the position that I occupy. I ask the Senator to let us have a vote on this measure to-night, because we never know what a day may bring forth. We have a good bill, I think an excellent bill, and I am sure that no violence will be done to the principles of anyone by allowing the bill to be acted upon to-night. I ask the Senator not to insist on having the bill go over until to-morrow. So far as I am informed, this is the last amendment, and then will come a vote on the bill itself. I will be delighted to take a vote to-night, and I do not think, as I have said, that any violence will be done to any principles that are dear to us on account of the views of the Executive or otherwise. I ask the Senator, if possible, to let us reach a vote this evening—it is not yet 6 o'clock—and this matter will then be out of the way without any chance of being jeopardized. I appreciate just how the Senator from New Hampshire feels, and I am sure he appreciates how I feel.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator from South Carolina give us any assurance that this is the last amendment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So far as I know.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is always a rash assumption in this body.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state that of course I can not tell any further than just the mere symptoms that I have seen; but I have not seen any very pronounced symptoms otherwise, and I think we have all worked to a common end and have honestly tried to perfect the bill as best we can.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the Senator has forgotten that I have submitted to him an amendment which I expect to offer after this one has been considered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I had proposed to accept that amendment, since it is merely administrative.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not accept it. It is for the Senate to do that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I know I can not; but I mean as chairman, as confidence has been expressed in me, though I am a little shaky just now as to what I do accept.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to meet the Senator on the common ground of good feeling. It has been my fortune or misfortune to have pretty important bills in charge during my somewhat prolonged service in this body, and I was anxious to get them through and made appeals such as the Senator has made. I certainly will not obstruct a vote on the bill this evening if the Senator feels that we ought to have it, because I really have faith to believe that the Senate, when the amendment that is now pending is put before it, will reject it. I do not believe the Senate will put itself on record as agreeing to the amendment that is pending; and I believe that when the Senator from California moves to reconsider one or two other unfortunate amendments that we have agreed to the Senate will stand by him in that effort of his.

With that statement I certainly shall not obstruct the progress of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I also make an appeal to the Senator from South Carolina on the ground that I believe there are a number of Senators, like myself, who would like to vote for this bill, who have been very anxious to assist the Senator from South Carolina in shaping the bill and have supported him from the beginning, who would like very much to have this particular amendment put in such form that we can vote for it here and can express our views upon it. It will take only a little while. I am sure that it will be long after 6 o'clock before the bill is passed if we go on with it to-night, whereas if to-morrow this matter were brought in here in such form as the committee and the Senate desire it could be passed without any prolonged debate.

I am sure that the Senator ought to consider the feelings of some of the rest of us who have also been greatly interested in the bill when we say we do not want to have this matter disposed of by the Senate without any provision being made for the very case suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, because those things are necessary. Even in the minds of the Senate, now, I believe those things ought to be done; and why ought not we to do it, rather than vacate our position and turn it over to a conference committee?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in case the Senate should reject this amendment, and reverse itself on the other votes, would it not deprive the conference committee of any power in the premises?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It would deprive them entirely of all power to deal with the matter.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the Senator from South Carolina and all Senators feel that there should be some provision that will exclude the anarchist and not exclude the man who has simply participated in an unsuccessful revolution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Every Senator here understands that the chairman feels the force of the argument, and I think perhaps there has been a little undue importance attached to it because of the expression in the paragraph. We say, "those who teach the unlawful destruction of property." The paragraph preceding the part stricken out takes care of all the features of anarchy. The paragraph preceding the penalty clause on page 55 also takes care of that. But, as some have pointed out with force, there might be a class which we could reach by having the language properly adjusted.

Mr. CLAPP. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We would like to go before the House. If the amendment is rejected and this does not go out, then we will have nothing to work on when we go into conference.

Mr. CLAPP. That is just why I wanted to suggest to the Senator that offhand to-night there is not much question in my mind but that the proposed amendment will be rejected and the vote reversed upon the other two propositions, which would then leave the Senator in charge of the matter in conference powerless to make any modification, and to make that distinction, which I have no doubt to-morrow at 12 o'clock the Senator himself could report in a form that would meet the general approval of the Senate. His idea that something must be passed to-night that has been twice vetoed, and has been pending for years, I must say does not appeal to me, nor does the principle, that has been so unusually manifested in this bill, of leaving everything to conference. The trouble is that the Senator now faces a situation where, in my judgment—I may be mistaken as to that—the chances are that his hands will be tied in conference, whereas by taking time some form could be adopted which would embody the distinction which is in the Senator's mind and, I think, in the minds of all the Senators; and then there would be something in conference that in turn might require some modification to meet the views of the conferees of the House. It does seem to me that the proper thing to do is to put this matter over until morning.

RECESS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in view of the expressions of friends of the bill in reference to this matter—of course, if we go on it will be thrashed out here—I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, December 14, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 13, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Let Thy tender mercies be over us, O God our Heavenly Father, and incline our hearts to yield our obedience to the insistent influences which are ever going out from Thee; that we may abhor evil, and cleave to that which is good; that our lives and acts may be in harmony with all that makes for righteousness in pure and holy living; to the end that Thy kingdom may come, and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CENTRAL NEWS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend a paragraph of the rules by adding certain words to which I think there will be no objection.

In paragraph 2 of Rule XXXV, after the words "National News Association," I ask to add the words "Central News Association of America," which will allow a seat on the floor for one of the representatives of that association. It appears to be a reputable news association, and I ask unanimous consent that the rules be amended to that effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, has this request been considered by the Committee on Rules?

Mr. HENRY. It was considered at the last session, and was investigated thoroughly by the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. Have the advisory committee of the press gallery indicated their approval?

Mr. HENRY. Yes; it has been thoroughly considered from every quarter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6956. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a wagon bridge across the St. Francis River at a point one-half mile northwest of Parkin, Cross County, Ark.

TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed 10,000 copies of the report made on H. R. 549 as to the interstate transportation of immature calves. This report was made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON]. I ask this at the request of the pure food commissioner of the State of Illinois, who is looking after the dairy business, and who believes that this report is of great value in protecting the calves of the country, so that they may grow into beef instead of being slaughtered for veal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that 10,000 copies of Mr. HAMILTON'S report on the calf bill be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he has an estimate of the cost of this, and whether it has been submitted to the chairman of the Printing Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. It has, and the cost will be about $40.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, this is a mere propaganda in favor of certain kinds of legislation that some people are not particularly enamored of. However, I do not care to object to the views of the gentleman from Illinois being propagated before the people.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas that in Illinois we are endeavoring to increase the beef supply, and there has been established at one place in Illinois what is called a calf farm, where they have now 500 calves. Certain bankers of the State have taken some pains, and have invested some money in distributing cattle throughout the State, with the idea of increasing the beef supply of the State and of the country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this request to reprint this report come from an official of the State of Illinois?

Mr. FOSTER. The request has come to me from the pure food commissioner, asking for some of these reports, and I am unable to get them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know whether the pure food commissioner of Illinois has a contingent fund out of which he might purchase these documents?

Mr. FOSTER. I could not say whether he has or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are to be circulated exclusively in the State of Illinois, are they not?

Mr. FOSTER. In the State of Illinois.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the State of Illinois ought to have them. I do not want to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HEADWATERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI—CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference. On yesterday I introduced the bill (H. R. 18717) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease surplus water power at the Government reservoir dam at the headwaters of the Mississippi, and this bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It should have gone to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I ask unanimous consent for that change of reference.

The SPEAKER. Why should it go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I find that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has always acted upon that class of legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the change of reference?

Mr. ADAMSON. Reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken. The bill is where it belongs.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia object?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 17499) for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that under the rule the proponents of the bill will control one half of the time and those opposed to the bill will control the other half, and the general debate is limited to two hours.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a little more time than is provided for under the rule if the House will consent to it. I do not think that is time enough to present the matter fully in general debate.

Mr. MANN. It is too late to raise that question in the committee; the gentleman may get an extension of time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, this bill, or rather the bill for which this bill is a substitute, was prepared in the Department of Commerce. Bills covering the subject matter of this bill have been introduced in previous Congresses and have been referred to different committees. One bill, which I understand was the counterpart of the bill I introduced at the suggestion of the department in this Congress, was introduced in the last Congress and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; another to the Committee on the Territories. I introduced the bill for which this is a substitute in this Congress, and it was referred, and I think properly so, to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In April and May I gave out statements to the effect that all those interested in this legislation, either for or against it, would be given ample opportunity to be heard, and that the hearings would begin, if possible, in May, at a time to suit their convenience.

The hearings on the bill began on the 25th of May and were concluded, I think, on the 15th day of June. The Secretary of Commerce; the Commissioner of Fisheries; Dr. BOWERS, of the Bureau of Fisheries; Judge WICKERSHAM, the Delegate from Alaska; and the representatives of the fisheries on the Alaskan coast were heard by the committee. After the hearings were concluded the bill was referred to a subcommittee, of which I was chairman, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY; the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BURKE; the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. SAUNDERS; the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. EDMONDS; the gentleman from California, Mr. CURRY; and the gentleman from Washington, Mr. HADLEY, were members. The subcommittee considered the bill at length, covering two months, and then reported it to the full committee, and it was considered by the full committee, and it was reported to the House on the 29th of August.

Those who have read my report on the bill will get a very fair notion of its provisions. It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the bill at length, as I hope to secure its consideration and passage to-day; but when we consider it under the five-minute rule, we can consider it more intelligently than under a brief general comprehensive statement. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to print in the RECORD my report as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17499) for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to engage in the business of canning, curing, preserving, packing, or otherwise dealing at wholesale in food fish, shellfish, or the products thereof, or manufacturing fishery products in the Territory of Alaska, or in any of the waters of Alaska without first obtaining a license for each establishment or works used in such business.

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the business of taking, catching, or fishing for food fish or shellfish in any of the waters of Alaska to use for such purposes any fishing appliance specified in section 2 without first obtaining a license for such appliance.

This section shall not require a license for the taking of food fish or shellfish for personal, domestic, or family use, and not for sale or barter, when not otherwise unlawful to take the same, or for conducting retail trade in fish or fishery products.

SEC. 2. License fees and taxes: That the licenses required by section 1 shall be issued by the Secretary of Commerce to any person not disqualified by law on application and the payment of the following annual fees:

For each canning, mild-curing, salting, smoking, fish-freezing, whaling, or other wholesale fish-dealing establishment, for each fish fertilizer and fish oil works, and for each other fishery establishment, except retail markets, not herein specified, $5; for each pound net, $50; for each fish wheel, $25 (except small wheels in the Yukon and Copper Rivers of the type heretofore used, $2); for each purse seine, $25; for each beam trawl or other trawl net, $10; for each gill-net boat and equipment, $2; for each stake net, $2; for each set net, $1; for each drag, haul, or beach seine 500 feet or less in length, $3, and for each additional 500 feet in length or fraction thereof, $5; for any other kind of fishing appliance used in taking food fish or shellfish, each, $1.

Every persons engaged in the business of canning salmon or other food fish or shellfish shall, by December 31 of each year, also pay a tax on the output for such year as follows, according to species: King, chinook, or spring salmon, and red, sockeye, or blueback salmon, 6 cents per case; coho, silver, or medium red salmon, and steelhead salmon or steelhead trout, 5 cents per case; chum or keta salmon, and humpback or pink salmon, 4 cents per case; all other food fish or shellfish, 4 cents per case.

Every person engaged in the business of curing or preserving fish, or manufacturing fishery products, except by canning, shall, by December 31 of each year, also pay a tax on the output for such year, as follows: Mild-cured salmon, $1 per tierce; pickled salmon, 20 cents per barrel; salt salmon in bulk, 5 cents per hundred pounds; salmon and trout frozen, iced, or otherwise preserved and not hereinbefore specified, $1 per ton, round weight; whale or fish oil, 10 cents per barrel; fertilizer or meal made from whales, fish, or aquatic products, other than kelp, 50 cents per ton; salt cod, 50 cents per ton; pickled herring, 10 cents per barrel; salt herring in bulk or otherwise, 25 cents per ton; all other prepared products not hereinbefore specified, 25 cents per ton.

PROTECTION, ETC., OF THE FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

The license fees and taxes imposed by this act on such business, appliances, and output shall be in lieu of all other Federal or Territorial license fees and taxes therefor and thereon.

SEC. 3. Licenses fees and taxes, how collected: That all license fees and taxes under this act shall be payable to and collected by the Secretary of Commerce or his authorized agents, and all taxes if not paid when due shall thereupon become delinquent, and shall draw interest thereafter at the rate of 1 per cent per month until paid. All such delinquent taxes and the interest thereon shall be a lien in favor of the United States upon all property and rights to property belonging to the person liable for such tax and situated within the Territory of Alaska, and shall be collected by the Secretary of Commerce or his authorized agents by distraint or otherwise in the same manner as other taxes are authorized to be collected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any collector or deputy collector of internal revenue.

SEC. 4. Disposition of license fees and taxes: That all the license fees and taxes collected in money under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States. Two-thirds of the receipts therefrom in each year shall be annually appropriated for distribution in the following manner: An amount equivalent to the license fees and taxes collected under this act on any business carried on within the limits of any incorporated town shall be paid to the treasurer of such town, to be used for school and municipal purposes within the town, and the remainder of such two-thirds shall be expended in the manner provided by the act creating the Alaska fund and acts amendatory thereof.

The remaining one-third of the receipts from such license fees and taxes shall be placed in a fund to be known as the Alaska fisheries fund, which fund is hereby created, and the moneys in such fund shall be held subject to appropriation from time to time by Congress for the construction, purchase, maintenance, and operation of fish hatcheries in Alaska and for the investigation, development, preservation, conservation, and administration of the fisheries of Alaska.

SEC. 5. Licenses, form, renewal, and transfer: That all licenses and renewals thereof shall be designated by consecutive numbers and shall indicate the kind of the particular appliance or the nature of the business for which the license is issued and the name of the person owning the same. The licensee of each fixed fishing appliance shall keep conspicuously affixed thereto a tag, brand, or notice showing, in black figures at least 6 inches in height upon a white ground, the license number for such appliance. The licensee of each movable fishing appliance or set net shall keep conspicuously affixed thereto, in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, the license number for such net or appliance, and shall also keep conspicuously affixed upon both sides of the bow of each boat or vessel used in operating such appliance or net a tag, brand, or notice showing, in figures at least 6 inches in height, either dark upon a light ground or light upon a dark ground, the license numbers for such appliances or nets. All licenses shall expire on the 31st day of December of the calendar year for which issued.

Any license may be transferred or assigned to any person entitled to hold a license under the provisions of this act, and notice shall be given of such transfer or assignment within 90 days from the date thereof to the Secretary of Commerce, who shall cause the date of such notice to be noted on the department records and cause the fact to be indorsed on the license. If such notice is not given, the transfer or assignment shall be void.

SEC. 6. Fixed net locations: That any person occupying, or desiring to occupy, any location where it may be lawful to construct a pound net in the waters of Alaska, shall cause such location to be accurately surveyed by a competent surveyor, unless a survey thereof has already been made, in which event such existing survey may be used, and shall cause three maps to be made of such location from the actual survey thereof, which shall contain a plat and description of such fishing location sufficient for its ascertainment and identification on the premises. Such maps shall also contain a certificate by the claimant, or by his agent or attorney, stating that he claims the fishing location shown thereon, specifying the date and number of the license under which the same is held, or the fact that application has been made therefor. Such maps, with the certificates thereon, shall be filed in the office of the commissioner of records in the district wherein the location is situated, which commissioner shall indorse thereon the hour and date of filing, and shall forward one of these maps to the Secretary of Commerce and another to the Pacific coast office of the Bureau of Fisheries. From and after the date of filing in the office of the commissioner of records such map shall constitute full and complete notice that the locator has complied with all the provisions of this act in regard to such location, and that such location is owned, held, occupied, and claimed by the person designated thereon as the claimant.

Locations for stake nets in the waters of Alaska may be made by erecting a permanent monument near or driving a pile on the location claimed, upon which shall be posted the number of the license under which such net is operated.

Locations for set nets in the waters of Alaska may be made by erecting a permanent monument near or securely anchoring a buoy on the location claimed, upon which shall be posted the number of the license under which such net is operated.

From and after the filing of the map in the case of a pound net, or from and after the posting of the number of the license, as above provided in the case of a stake net or set net, the claimant of the fishing location shown on such map, or marked by such number, his heirs, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns, shall have the exclusive right to hold, occupy, and fish in such location, to renew the license therefor, and to mortgage, sell, lease, or transfer the same during the time that he or they in other respects shall comply with the law pertaining thereto.

If any person (a) lawfully occupies and actually operates a pound-net location during the active fishing season next preceding the time when this act takes effect and also files, before January 1 of the year next after the time when this act takes effect and in the manner heretofore provided, a map or plat of the location, or (b) has, prior to the time when this act takes effect, filed a map or plat of any pound-net location with the Secretary of Commerce and a commissioner of records in the district in which such location is situated, such person shall have a right to such location valid under this act and prior to any right otherwise obtainable under this act, but a right acquired under clause (a) shall be superior to a right acquired under clause (b).

Any location acquired under the provisions of clause (a) or (b) may be continued in accordance with the law as to passageways in force at the time this act takes effect, or may be changed to conform to the requirements of this act in respect thereto, but if such change is made a new map shall be filed, and no change shall be made which interferes with another then existing location.

Each commissioner of records and the Secretary of Commerce shall keep an index of all maps or plats filed with him, showing the hour and date of filing, the names of claimants, and the serial number of the maps or plats in the order filed, all of which shall be indorsed on them when filed.

The failure to renew the license or to have made lawful application therefor for any pound net, fish wheel, or other fixed appliance on any location valid under this act in any of the waters of Alaska on or before the 1st day of January of any year, or the failure of a licensee to construct and operate any such appliance in a bona fide manner for two consecutive years, shall constitute abandonment of the location. The failure of a licensee to construct and operate any set net on any location valid under this act in a bona fide manner for any year shall constitute abandonment of the location.

SEC. 7. Nets, how constructed: That no lead of any pound net in the waters of Alaska shall exceed 3,000 feet in length, and there shall be an end passageway of at least 600 feet and a lateral passageway of at least 2,400 feet between pound nets and an end passageway of at least 600 feet and a lateral passageway of at least 1,000 feet between a pound net and a stake net or set net. The lead of any pound net may be extended to high-water mark on the tidelands owned by the United States or on other tidelands with the consent of the owners thereof.

No supplementary wing or jigger of a pound net shall be of greater length than 300 feet, measured over all, nor shall the outer end thereof approach within 100 feet of the lead of such pound net. Not more than one wing or jigger shall be attached to each side of the heart of any pound net.

No stake net shall be constructed in any other manner than by stakes driven in substantially a straight line, nor shall it be in the form of a pound net or with hearts or pots connected therewith, nor shall it exceed 1,000 feet in length. There shall be an end passageway of at least 300 feet and a lateral passageway of at least 1,000 feet between stake nets and between a stake net and a set net: Provided, That the restrictions as to distance intervals between stake nets shall not be construed to apply to the use by the native Indians of stake nets not over 50 yards in length to take salmon for domestic consumption and not for sale.

There shall be an end passageway of at least 100 feet and a lateral passageway of at least 300 feet between set nets. A set net is not a fixed appliance within the meaning of this act.

For the purpose of determining passageways, base lines shall be drawn at right angles to the general course of locations and shall pass through the ends of the locations; the end passageways shall be measured at right angles to such base lines, and the lateral passageways shall be measured parallel with such base lines.

It shall be unlawful to lay or cast any movable fishing appliance within 300 yards of any other movable fishing appliance or within any area in which under this section a set net may not be constructed or maintained: Provided, That the restrictions of this section shall not apply to drift gill nets, which by force of the elements may unavoidably and temporarily come within such limits.

It shall be unlawful to erect or maintain any pound net, stake net, or set net within any of the lateral or end passageways as prescribed in this act.

No purse seine shall exceed 1,800 feet in length, and no lead or supplementary piece of net shall be used in connection therewith.

No gill net shall exceed 2,500 feet in length, and no beach seine shall exceed 3,000 feet in length.

SEC. 8. Pound nets, how closed: That throughout the weekly close season prescribed by law each pound net shall be closed by an apron placed across the outer entrance to the heart thereof, which apron shall extend from above the surface of the water to the bottom, and shall be securely connected to the piles on either side of the heart of such pound net, fastened by rings not more than 2 feet apart on taut wires stretched from the top to the bottom of the piles. In addition, throughout said weekly close season, there shall be a V-shaped opening in the lead of such pound nets outside the entrance to the heart adjacent to the apron of at least 10 feet in width at the top and extending below the surface at least 4 feet below low water.

SEC. 9. Where unlawful to fish: That it shall be unlawful to take salmon by any means whatsoever, except by hook and line or by spear or gaff for domestic consumption, and except for the purposes of fish culture or scientific investigation under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, in any waters the width of which is less than 300 feet, or with any fixed appliance in any waters the width of which is less than 500 feet, or by any means except by hook and line or spear or gaff, as aforesaid, within 500 yards outside the mouth of any river less than 500 feet in width at its mouth: Provided, That the use of stake nets shall be allowed in the deltas of the Yukon, Copper, Alseck, Setuck, and Ahrnklin Rivers and on the flats and in the divides between the Setuck and Ahrnklin, and that movable appliances shall be allowed to within 100 yards outside of the mouths of the before-mentioned rivers and the Karluk Rivers. For the purposes of this section, the width of any waters shall be determined by measurements at mean high water at right angles to the trend of such waters, and all measurements of water referred to herein shall be made at mean high water, and the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to determine and indicate by suitable markers, monuments, or notices the mouth of any river or other waters referred to in this act. It shall be unlawful to efface, destroy, or remove, or in any manner interfere with any tag, brand, marker, monument, or notice provided for in this act.

No fishing appliance shall be operated in any waters for a greater distance than one-third the width of such waters: Provided, That this shall not apply to any drift gill net which by force of the elements may unavoidably and temporarily exceed such distance.

SEC. 10. Weekly close period: That it shall be unlawful to take, fish for, or kill any salmon, except by hook and line, for sport, or by hook and line or by spear or gaff for domestic consumption, in any of the waters of Alaska, from 6 o'clock p. m. of Friday of each week until 6 o'clock a. m. of the Sunday following, except in the Arctic Ocean and Bering Sea and the waters tributary thereto, Cook Inlet, and the Copper River Delta.

SEC. 11. Closing of waters, how provided: That the Secretary of Commerce may in his discretion set aside any lake or part thereof, or any river or part thereof, or any of the waters outside the mouth of such river for a distance not greater than 500 yards from such mouth, in which fishing may be limited or entirely prohibited, but such power shall be exercised only after a hearing, of which due notice must be given by publication not less than 60 days prior thereto in a newspaper in the district affected; and when the interested parties are known to the Secretary of Commerce they shall be personally notified by notice mailed not less than 60 days previous to such hearing. No order made under this section shall be effective until one calendar year after the same is made.

Any order so made may be rescinded by the Secretary of Commerce, after a hearing as prescribed in this section.

Existing orders of the Secretary of Commerce limiting or prohibiting fishing in certain waters in Alaska, under the provisions of the act of June 26, 1906, shall remain in force until rescinded by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 12. Planting fish unlawful without consent: That it shall be unlawful to liberate, release, implant, or place any fish of any kind or description in any of the waters of Alaska without first obtaining the written consent of the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 13. Unlawful to waste food fish or shellfish: That it shall be unlawful for any person to waste any food fish or shellfish taken or caught in any of the waters of Alaska: Provided, That waste shall not be deemed a violation of this section when resulting from unavoidable causes.

After three years from the time this act takes effect it shall constitute waste to utilize any food fish, shellfish, or any part thereof, other than the offal or waste thereof, in the manufacture of fertilizer, fish meal, fish oil, or other products not used for human food.

SEC. 14. Use of spears and gaffs unlawful for commercial fishing: It shall be unlawful to take any salmon or other food fish or shellfish by means of a spear or gaff, except for domestic consumption, and it shall be unlawful to purchase for commercial use any salmon or other food fish or shellfish taken by means of a spear or gaff.

SEC. 15. Pollution of water: That it shall be unlawful to place or cause to be placed in any of the waters of Alaska any explosive, poisonous, or deleterious substance whatsoever for the purpose of catching, taking, killing, or injuring fish, or to place or deposit in, or discharge or pass into, or cause to be placed where it may pass into any waters of Alaska, any lime or other caustics, tar, petroleum, asphalt, bitumen, or other carbonaceous materials, oils, acids, or sulphates, or compounds thereof, sawdust, shavings, slabs, edgings, mill or factory refuse, slag, sluicings, tailings, or any other substance injurious to fish, fish fry, or the food of fish, or to the spawn or spawning beds of fishes; and in the case of the substances above expressly enumerated it shall not be necessary to prove that the pollution of the waters by these substances in the particular case in question has actually caused injury to or the death or destruction of any fish, fish fry, spawn, spawning bed, or fish food: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the proper use of explosives in connection with the construction of buildings or improvements: Provided further, That the placing of fish offal or fish waste in the waters shall not be deemed a violation of this section.

SEC. 16. Dams to be provided with fishways: That every dam or other obstruction hereafter erected or placed in any stream shall be provided with a durable and efficient fishway, unless the Secretary of Commerce finds that the maintenance of such fishway is not essential to the conservation of the fisheries of Alaska. The Secretary of Commerce may also require that any dam or other obstruction now existing in any stream shall be provided with such a fishway if he finds it essential to the conservation of such fisheries, in which event such fishway shall be constructed within 60 days after written notice thereof has been served on the owner, his agent, or the person in charge.

Every fishway required by this act shall be maintained in a practical and effective condition according to plans and specifications to be furnished by the Secretary of Commerce upon application, and shall be kept open, unobstructed, and supplied with a sufficient quantity of water to freely admit the passage of fish through the same.

If any person shall fail to construct and maintain any such fishway or to remove such dam or obstruction in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of Commerce, then within 60 days after written notice thereof shall have been served on the owner, his agent, or the person in charge, such dam or obstruction shall become a public nuisance and the Secretary of Commerce may take possession of it in the name of the United States and destroy it, and no liability shall attach for such destruction; or the Secretary of Commerce may construct a suitable fishway, the actual cost of construction of which shall constitute a lien upon the dam or obstruction, and the owner thereof shall be liable in a civil action to the United States for such cost. No dam or obstruction shall be erected or placed in any stream to a height that in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce shall make a fishway thereover impracticable, except as hereinafter provided.

In the event that any person desires to construct a dam or obstruction in any stream to a height that will make a fishway thereover impracticable, in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce, and a fishway would be required by this act, such person shall make application to the Secretary of Commerce for relief from the requirement of such fishway; and the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to grant such relief in his discretion, upon the condition that the person so applying shall convey to the United States a site of the size and dimensions satisfactory to the Secretary of Commerce, at such place as may be selected by the Secretary of Commerce, and the applicant shall erect thereon at his expense a hatchery and hatchery residence, according to plans and specifications to be furnished by the Secretary of Commerce, and shall enter into an agreement with the Secretary of Commerce, secured by a good and sufficient bond, to furnish all water and lights without expense to operate the proposed hatchery; and no such relief shall be granted by the Secretary of Commerce until the person applying for such relief shall have actually conveyed such land to the United States and erected the hatchery and hatchery residence in accordance with such plans and specifications. The provisions of this section shall not apply to cases where dams or obstructions have been heretofore constructed or placed in streams to a height where the construction of a fishery is impracticable.

SEC. 17. Barricades and other obstructions: That it shall be unlawful to erect or maintain any barricade, fence, or other fixed or sationary obstruction, or any fishing appliance other than those lawful under the provisions of this act, except for purposes of fish culture, in any of the waters of Alaska having the purpose or effect of preventing or impeding the ascent of fish to their spawning grounds, and the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized and directed to have any and all such unlawful obstructions removed or destroyed.

SEC. 18. Hatcheries: That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to purchase, or to acquire by condemnation in the manner in which lands are condemned or appropriated for public use, any and all of the private salmon hatcheries in Alaska which have been heretofore approved under the act entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," approved June 26, 1906, the same to be paid for by certificates in such denominations as may be desired by the owners, and such certificates may be used at any time by the owners, their executors, administrators, or assigns for the payment pro tanto of any license fees or taxes under this act.

The exemption from license fees and taxes in favor of the owners of private salmon hatcheries in Alaska, as provided by section 2 of such act approved June 26, 1906, for the release of red and king salmon fry, shall apply to existing hatcheries until the date of their acquisition by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 19. All food fish and shellfish included: That the catching, killing, or utilization of any food fish or shellfish of any kind whatsoever not otherwise specifically provided for in this act shall be subject to the provisions of this act, and the Secretary of Commerce shall have power to authorize the catching, killing, or utilization of any such fish or shellfish, under such regulations as he may prescribe.

SEC. 20. Reports, inspections, and regulations: That every person licensed under this act shall make detailed annual reports to the Secretary of Commerce, on blanks furnished by him, covering all such facts as may be required with respect to the business for which license is issued for the information and use of the Department of Commerce and Congress. Such reports shall be made and sworn to by the licensee or his authorized agent, or, in the case of a corporation, by the president, secretary, or authorized agent thereof, a separate blank being used for each establishment owned or operated by such licensee, and such report shall be forwarded to the Department of Commerce not later than December 31 of each year.

The Secretary of Commerce and his duly authorized agents shall have power to inspect all premises, fishing appliances, and all property used in catching, packing, curing, preparing, or storing food fish or shellfish, or in the fertilizer or whaling industry, and may enter upon any such property at any time for any such purpose.

The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized and directed to make and establish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary for the enforcement of this act and for the proper investigation, inspection, and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska, and to detail from the Department of Commerce a force adequate for the performance of the duties required.

SEC. 21. Compensation for injuries: That the provisions of the act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," shall apply to the employees of the Department of Commerce engaged in the protection and conservation of the fisheries in Alaska: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any case arising prior to the time this act takes effect.

SEC. 22. Territorial legislation prohibited: That from and after the passage of this act the Territory of Alaska shall not pass any law that has the effect of repealing, altering, or amending this act, nor shall the Territory of Alaska impose any license fees or taxes upon the business hereinbefore referred to, nor upon the output thereof, nor upon any property, real or personal, used in said business in said Territory, and any such existing statutes heretofore enacted by the Territory of Alaska are hereby expressly disapproved: Provided, That the passage of this act shall not affect the validity of any license fees or taxes levied upon such business, or the output thereof, or upon the property, real or personal, used in such business under any law in force prior to the passage of this act, or the right of the Territory of Alaska to sue for and recover the same.

SEC. 23. Violations; how prosecuted: That any violation of this act may be prosecuted in any district court of Alaska or in any district court of the United States in the States of California, Oregon, or Washington.

SEC. 24. Fines and penalties: That any person violating any provision of this act, or any regulation established in pursuance thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court. Any vessel or other apparatus or equipment used or employed in violation of any provision of this act, or of any regulation made thereunder, may be seized by order of the court or by order of the Secretary of Commerce and turned over to the United States marshal, and by him held subject to the payment of such fine or fines as may be imposed. A further penalty of not more than $250 per diem may, at the discretion of the court, be imposed for each day any obstruction unlawful under section 16 is maintained after written notice to remove same has been served by the Secretary of Commerce upon the owner thereof, his agent, or the person in charge.

SEC. 25. Definitions: That for the purposes of this act the following definitions are adopted to apply to the words in question wherever the same are used:

"Person": Any person, firm, partnership, corporation, association, or society;

"Pound net": Any fixed or floating fish trap or similar device constructed of webbing, wire, brush, or other material, and held in place by piles, anchors, or moorings, but excluding small native nets or traps which may be transported in toto by one man;

"Stake net": A gill net attached or affixed to piles or stakes;

"Set net": An anchor gill net;

"Seine": All forms of nets known as seines, stow nets, drag nets, drag bag nets, bag nets, draw nets, reef nets, and dredge nets;

"Salmon": Wherever the word "salmon" occurs in this act it shall be construed to apply to the red, sockeye, or blueback; king, chinook, or spring; coho, silver, or medium red; chum or keta; humpback or pink; and steelhead salmon, or steelhead trout.

"Case": Forty-eight one-pound cans or containers, or their equivalent in weight of other sizes.

"Barrel": Two hundred pounds of fish or 50 gallons of oil.

"Tierce": Eight hundred pounds of fish.

"Ton": Two thousand pounds.

"Waters": All the territorial waters of Alaska, together with all other waters contiguous to Alaska over which the United States has jurisdiction.

"River": Any stream or creek.

"Mean high water": The mean of the lowest and highest high tides.

SEC. 26. Repealing clause: That after this act takes effect the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," approved June 26, 1906, and all acts or parts of acts of Congress or the Territorial Legislature of Alaska inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, except as otherwise provided in this act.

SEC. 27. Exceptions in favor of natives: That the provisions of section 1, that part of section 2 relating to license fees for fishing appliances, section 10, and section 14 of this act shall not apply to Indians, Aleuts, and Eskimos, except those engaged in catching fish for any canning, mild curing, salting, smoking, fish freezing, or other fish dealing establishment.

SEC. 28. Jurisdiction of War Department over navigable waters not affected: That in so far as this act applies to navigable waters it shall not be construed as modifying or repealing any existing Federal law giving to the Secretary of War authority or jurisdiction over such waters.

SEC. 29. When act takes effect: That this act shall take effect, except as otherwise provided, from and after January 1 of the year next after its passage.

This bill is the consummation of protracted hearings and inquiries, and represents the accumulated experience of 10 years in the administration of the Alaska fisheries under the present law.

The bill is in line with the most advanced State fishery legislation, and in every respect is an improvement over existing law.

New legislation is demanded by changed industrial conditions, by the inadequacy of the present law to afford the necessary protection to the food fishes, and by certain defects in existing law which militate against the efficient regulation of the fisheries.

The purposes sought to be achieved by the bill are threefold:

(1) The conservation and perpetuation of the fisheries of Alaska, so that in the fullness of time they may be transferred to the custody of a great Alaskan Commonwealth. This, in our opinion, is the most important duty devolving on Congress in this connection, and this, we believe, has been accomplished. Without unnecessarily handicapping the fishermen in the prosecution of their calling, the bill throws around the industry numerous safeguards that will have the effect of preventing overfishing and insuring the survival of a reasonable proportion of the annual runs of fish, so that natural production may be maintained.

(2) The orderly regulation and administration of the fisheries, so that the business may be conducted in the most efficient manner. Legitimate fishing is encouraged and protected; unwise or improper methods are prohibited and penalized; and to this end, and to facilitate the enforcement of the law and the administration of the industry, there is provided for the first time a license system, such as has been found desirable or necessary in most of the States and in various foreign countries having important fisheries.

(3) A comparatively large revenue is collected. Part of this is made available for the use of the Territory of Alaska and part is set aside, to be appropriated by Congress for the benefit of the fishing industry of the Territory.

LICENSE REQUIRED FOR APPLIANCES USED IN FISHING.

One of the important new features of the bill is the requirement (sec. 1) that all branches of the industry shall come under a license system. This system is primarily for regulatory purposes; the fact that it yields a revenue is only incidental. The ample experience of various States in the enforcement of fishery legislation clearly indicates the advantages of a license system. The license tax on the major forms of fishing apparatus (such as pound nets and purse seines) is fixed at such a rate as to yield a considerable revenue.

LICENSE FEES AND TAXES, HOW LEVIED.

The chief revenue-producing feature of the bill, however, is that which imposes a tax on the prepared or manufactured products of the fisheries (sec. 2). Under existing law the only articles on which a tax is laid are canned and salted salmon and fish oil and fertilizer; but under this bill every product contributes a share of the revenue; and the tax on canned salmon, the principal item in the fisheries, is increased materially.

The revenue that may be expected from this bill, if enacted into law, on the basis of the operations during the calendar year 1915, when the pack of salmon was 4,500,293 cases, is as follows:

Estimated amount of revenue which would be raised under the provisions of H. R. 17499 upon the basis of Alaska fishery operations in 1915.

License fees on plants: 85 canneries; 15 mild-curing plants; 17 salteries; 6 cold-storage plants; 2 whaling plants, oil, fertilizer; 2 herring plants, oil, fertilizer, fish; 2 by-product plants, oil, fertilizer, fish meal; 19 shore codfish stations; total, 148, at $5	$740
License fees on fishing apparatus:
284 pound nets, driven and floating, at $50	14,200
281 purse seines, at $25	7,025
2,392 gill nets, at $2	4,784
62 haul seines (average 1,097 feet each), at $8	496
4,420 troll lines for salmon, at $1	4,420
3,613 hand lines for cod, at $1	3,613
1,920 trawl lines for halibut, at $1	1,920
12,972 Total	36,458
NOTE.—It is estimated that about 200 small wheels are used in the Yukon River for catching salmon for local consumption and for dog feed. These have not been included in above.
Tax on canned product:
88,251 cases king or spring salmon, at 6 cents per case	$5,295
1,932,312 cases red or sockeye salmon, at 6 cents per case	115,939
124,268 cases coho or silver salmon, at 5 cents per case	6,213
479,946 cases chum or keta salmon, at 4 cents per case	19,198
1,875,516 cases humpback or pink salmon, at 4 cents per case	75,021
Total	221,666

Tax on products prepared otherwise than by canning:
2,781 tierces mild-cured salmon, at $1 per tierce	$2,781
13,293 barrels pickled salmon, at 20 cents per barrel	2,659
360 tons frozen salmon, at $1 per ton	360
29,645 barrels whale oil, at 10 cents per barrel	2,965
1,495 tons whale fertilizer, at 50 cents per ton	748
8,956 barrels pickled herring, at 10 cents per barrel	896
3,934 barrels herring oil, at 10 cents per barrel	393
619 tons herring fertilizer, at 50 cents per ton	309
1,453 barrels by-products oil, at 10 cents per barrel	145
781 tons fertilizer and fish meal, at 50 cents per ton	390
7,097 tons salted cod, cod tongues, and stock fish, at 50 cents per ton	3,548
5 tons frozen trout, at $1 per ton	5
193 cases canned trout, at 4 cents per case	8
194 barrels pickled black cod, at 10 cents per barrel	19
23 tons frozen black cod, at 25 cents per ton	6
4,873 tons fresh halibut, at 25 cents per ton	1,218
2,794 tons frozen halibut, at 25 cents per ton	698
40 tons fletched halibut, at 25 cents per ton	10
Total	17,158

RECAPITULATION.

License fees on plants	740
License fees on fishing apparatus	36,458
Tax on canned products	221,666
Tax on products prepared otherwise than by canning	17,158
Total	276,022

The taxes on canned products, based on three years' average (1913, 1914, and 1915), are shown by the following table:

56,887 cases king or spring salmon, at 6 cents per case	$3,413
2,033,062 cases red or sockeye salmon, at 6 cents per case	121,983
119,037 cases coho or silver salmon, at 5 cents per case	5,951
478,261 cases chum or keta salmon, at 4 cents per case	19,130
1,411,482 cases humpback or pink salmon, at 4 cents per case	56,459

On this basis the tax on canned products would be $206,936 instead of $221,666, on the basis of the statistics for the calendar year 1915 shown above, hence the total revenue would be $14,730 less.

It is also well to keep in mind the hatchery rebates which are to continue until the Government takes over the privately owned hatcheries. Those rebates have amounted to about $25,000 annually.

Deducting the two items, $14,730 and $25,000, from the total estimated revenue of $276,022 leaves the total revenue under the bill $236,292.

It is safe to say that the output will increase each year, with a corresponding increase of revenue, and with the taking over of the private hatcheries by the Government the item of $25,000 on account of hatchery rebates would be eliminated.

DISPOSITION OF LICENSE FEES AND TAXES.

Section 4 provides that all the license fees and taxes collected in money under the act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, two-thirds thereof to be distributed as follows:

(a) An amount equivalent to the license fees and taxes collected on any business carried on within the corporate limits of any incorporated town shall be paid to the treasurer of such town to be used for school and municipal purposes;

(b) The remainder of such two-thirds shall be expended in the manner provided by the act creating the Alaska fund and acts amendatory thereof; and

(c) The remaining one-third shall be placed in a fund to be known as the Alaska fisheries fund, subject to appropriation by Congress from time to time for the construction, purchase, maintenance, and operation of fish hatcheries in Alaska, and for the investigation, development, preservation, conservation, and administration of the fisheries of Alaska.

Distributed on this basis, there would have been available in 1915 under items (a) and (b) the sum of $157,528; and under item (c) the sum of $78,764.

The average annual expenditures of the bureau on account of Alaska fisheries during this three-year period have been:

For fish-cultural work	$32,000
For protection of the fisheries	28,000
For scientific and statistical work	500
Total	60,000

Considering the admitted inadequacy of the bureau's present fish-cultural and regulatory activities, the projected purchase of the hatcheries now privately operated and the increased expense that will necessarily be occasioned by the administration of the more elaborate law contained in this bill, the amount available to the bureau thereunder may not suffice unless augmented by additional appropriations out of the National Treasury. Under existing law the entire cost of the regulation and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska is a charge on the National Treasury.

LOCATION AND CONSTRUCTION OF FIXED APPLIANCES.

The committee has given very careful attention to the matter of the location and construction of fixed fishing appliances and has covered this important subject in a comprehensive manner (secs. 6, 7, and 8). It is necessary, for the purpose of orderly regulation of the fisheries, to recognize the right of fishermen using pound nets, stake nets, and other stationary apparatus to control the sites where such apparatus is set. We have been guided in the drafting of this part of the bill by the experience of the States of Washington and Oregon, whose laws have been closely followed, and by the knowledge of the conditions on the Alaskan coast, and we feel that the provisions of the bill are essential for the proper conduct of the business and will not have the effect, as some persons have suggested or feared, of creating a monopoly. To make it clear that the danger of monopoly is remote, it is pertinent to take into consideration that the fixed apparatus which is the most prominent in this connection is the pound net (the monopolistic control of the sites for which is most feared), which is extensively used in many States, particularly on the Pacific coast, in the Great Lakes, and on the Atlantic coast of South Carolina; that the total number employed in Alaska in 1915 was 284, equivalent to about one net to each 90 miles of coast line; that pound nets require peculiar conditions for their successful operation, and the available sites are limited, so that, even if every such site was occupied by a net, the number would not be such as to make this type predominant or monopolistic. Compared with other parts of the country, the use of pound nets in Alaska is rather unimportant, and with the development of the Alaska fisheries pound nets are playing a less conspicuous rôle every year. The relative catch of salmon with pound nets and other appliances in the three districts of Alaska in 1915 was as follows:

District.	Pound nets.	All other apparatus.	Total.
Southeast Alaska	57	43	100
Western Alaska	7	93	100

The important subject of stream pollution is covered in a broad way (sec. 15) in an effort to prevent the great destruction of fish life and the wholesale depletion of waters which have occurred in some of the States. All dams and other obstructions to the passage of fish to their spawning grounds are required (sec. 16) to be provided with efficient fishways.

Section 18 abolishes the present system under which the operators of private salmon hatcheries are exempted from taxes in proportion to the number of red or king salmon fry released and provides for the acquisition of the existing private hatcheries by the Government. The hatchery rebate feature of existing law has been much criticized, and the law permits or condones hatchery practices that can not be regarded as efficient in the light of the present knowledge of salmon culture. The committee is of the opinion that while private individuals and corporations may find it advantageous to operate their own hatcheries this practice should no longer be entitled to the preferential treatment accorded under existing law. The great work of aiding nature and of replenishing depleted waters by artificial propagation should devolve on and be conducted by the Government.

REPORTS, INSPECTIONS, AND REGULATIONS.

Persons licensed under the act are required to make detailed annual reports to the Secretary of Commerce covering all facts required with respect to the business for which a license is issued for the information and use of the Department of Commerce and Congress.

The Secretary of Commerce and his duly authorized agents are given power to inspect the premises, fishing appliances, and all property used in catching, packing, curing, preparing, or storing food fish or shellfish, or in the fertilizer or whaling industry, and may enter upon the premises of those engaged in the industry at any time for such purposes. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the law as may be necessary for the enforcement of the act and may detail from the Department of Commerce a force adequate for the performance of the duties required.

Employees of the Department of Commerce engaged in the protection and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska may receive compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment under the act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment."

TERRITORIAL LEGISLATION PROHIBITED.

The bill further provides that from and after the passage of the act the Territory of Alaska shall not pass any law repealing, altering, or amending the act, nor impose any license fees or taxes upon the fishery business covered by the act, or upon the output thereof, or upon any property, real or personal, used in such business in the Territory of Alaska, and any such existing statutes heretofore enacted by the Territory of Alaska are disapproved.

The bill provides, however, that the passage of the act shall not affect the validity of any license fees or taxes levied upon such business or the output thereof, or upon the property, real or personal, used in such business, under any law in force prior to the passage of the act, or right of the Territory of Alaska to sue for and recover the same. It was disclosed at the hearings that the Territorial Legislature of Alaska had passed a law imposing certain license fees and taxes upon the fisheries of Alaska, the validity of which is now being contested in the courts, and the bill expressly reserves to the Territory of Alaska the right to collect such taxes if the validity of the statute under which they are levied is upheld by the courts.

Proper fines and penalties are provided for any violations of the provisions of the act or any of the regulations established in pursuance thereof.

Section 26 provides that after the act takes effect the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska" approved June 25, 1906, and all acts or parts of acts of Congress or the Territorial Legislature of Alaska inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall be repealed, except as otherwise provided for in the act.

The provisions of section 1, that part of section 2 relating to license fees for fishing appliances, section 10, which provides for weekly close period, and section 14, which makes the use of spears and gaffs unlawful for commercial fishing, shall not apply to Indians, Aleuts, and Eskimos, excepting those engaged in catching fish for any canning, mild curing, salting, smoking, fish freezing, or other fish dealing establishments.

To avoid any possible repeal of existing law relating to navigable waters by implication, or conflict of jurisdiction between the Department of Commerce and the War Department, section 28 of the bill provides "that in so far as this act applies to navigable waters it shall not be construed as modifying or repealing any existing Federal law giving to the Secretary of War authority or jurisdiction over such waters."

The committee held extended hearings on the bill (H. R. 9528) for which this bill is a substitute, and are of opinion that if this bill is enacted into law it will prove of very great benefit to the fisheries of Alaska; that it will not only conserve a food supply of inestimable value, and will provide the revenue for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, but largely increase the Alaska fund, and that, too, without trouble or expense to the people of Alaska.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill provides that it shall be unlawful to fish in waters of Alaska without obtaining a license. That is a new provision of law as applied to the fisheries in Alaska, but the license feature applied to those engaged in fishing for commercial purposes is a part of the laws of most of the States in the Union which undertake to regulate the fishing industry. It is simply to better regulate the industry, and the fees are not onerous; in fact, the fees are nominal.

The bill also provides for certain taxes on the output of the industry in Alaska. We have had in mind the necessity of conserving this great food supply and at the same time to make this industry pay in license fees and taxes something for the privileges enjoyed and at the same time provide revenue to help defray the expenses of the municipalities in which the industries are located, and also of the Territory of Alaska.

The revenue features of the bill will provide larger revenue for the municipalities in which the industries are located and for the Territory of Alaska than they have heretofore enjoyed. These revenues will increase each year as the output of the industries increases. The output of the industry in round numbers amounts to about $21,000,000 a year. Of course most of the output is consumed in the United States, although part of it goes to foreign countries.

The following statistics of the fisheries in 1915 is worthy of the careful consideration of the committee. It is taken from Appendix III to the Report of the United States Commissioner of Fisheries for 1915:

GENERAL STATISTICS OF THE FISHERIES IN 1915.

In 1915 the total investment in the Alaska fisheries amounted to $37,316,560, an increase of $277,928 over 1914. Approximately 86 per cent of this investment was in the salmon industry. The number of persons engaged in 1915 was 22,462, or an increase of 1,262 over 1914. The total value of the products in 1915 was $20,999,343, or a decrease of $243,632 from 1914. Although the actual quantity of fishery products produced in 1915 was greater than in the previous year, the total value of the 1915 output was less, chiefly by reason of the lower price obtained for several of the grades of salmon packed and further by reason of the decreased pack of the more valuable red salmon. The total value of the products this year is second only to that of 1914, which was the largest in the history of Alaska.

THE SALMON INDUSTRY.

The outstanding feature of the Alaska salmon industry in 1915 was the enormous increase in the pack of humpbacks in southeast Alaska, where 1,875,516 cases of this species were produced as against the previous record for humpbacks in this section of 1,289,737 cases packed in 1913. There was also a good increase in the pack of pinks both in central and western Alaska. Another feature of this season's operations was the lighter run of red salmon in western Alaska. For the three previous years the catch of reds in the Bristol Bay district was unusually good, the approximate catch in 1912 being 19,900,000, in 1913 it was 21,500,000, and in 1914 it was 20,900,000, but in 1915 it declined to about 16,800,000. This, however, is larger than the catch of reds in those waters in 1910, when the take numbered only 11,600,000 red salmon. It is worthy of mention that there is an increasing use of purse seines in the Bristol Bay region. In 1915 more than a million red salmon were taken by this form of apparatus whereas three years ago the catch was confined exclusively to traps and gill nets, chiefly the latter. It is regarded as quite likely that within a few years the Bristol Bay district will be the scene of an extensive purse-seine fishery. Although western and southeast Alaska showed a decrease in the pack of reds in 1915, central Alaska yielded a gratifying increase in this valuable species.

The pack of chums in Alaska was lighter this year than in 1914, but it was apparently due more to the fact that some of the canneries filled all available cans during the extraordinarily heavy run of pinks rather than to any pronounced shortage of chums. A number of plants thus ceased packing without waiting to take advantage of the later run of chums in southeast Alaska. This rather early closing showed its effect also in a somewhat smaller pack of cohos than was put up in 1914. The pack of kings in all three districts of Alaska was better than in the previous year. This is explained in part by the fact that the lessened demand for mild-cured salmon on account of the European war resulted in the canning of larger numbers of king salmon which otherwise would probably have been mild cured. The production of pickled salmon was only about half that of 1914, the reason being due chiefly to the lessened run of reds in western Alaska. The fresh and frozen salmon industries, which are prosecuted in southeast Alaska, showed good increases in 1915.

SALMON CANNING—CHANGES IN CANNERIES.

The plant of the Canoe Pass Packing Co., at Canoe Pass, in southeast Alaska, was dismantled and the machinery moved to a new location at Cordova. The plant at Canoe Pass was built and operated in 1912, but has not been used since. The small cannery of the Revilla Fish Products Co., at Ketchikan, has not been operated since 1912, and unless work is resumed it will no longer be listed. The Hoonah Packing Co. acquired the cannery of the Admiralty Trading Co., operated at Gambier Bay, in 1912 and 1913, but closed in 1914 and 1915. The canneries operated in 1914 by Gorman & Co. at Shakan and Kasaan were operated in 1915 by the Anacortes Fisheries Co. The plant formerly operated by the Pacific Coast & Norway Packing Co. at Petersburg was taken over by the Petersburg Packing Co. The Straits Packing Co. acquired the cannery last operated in 1913 by the Skowl Arm Packing Co. at Skowl Arm. It is reported that this new company was formed chiefly by those formerly interested in the cannery of the Kuiu Island Packing Co., which plant was destroyed by fire in the fall of 1914. The cannery at Hawk Inlet, operated for several years by the Hawk Fish Co., was operated in 1915 under the firm name of P. E. Harris & Co. Another change in firm name this year is that of the Karheen Packing Co., which was formerly known as the Irving Packing Co. The North Alaska Salmon Co. closed its Hallerville cannery and operated for the first time its new plant on the eastern side of Kvichak Bay, above Pedersens Point. Libby, McNeill & Libby acquired from Gorman & Co. the cannery at Dry Bay, formerly operated by the St. Elias Packing Co. It is probable that it will be used in conjunction with the cannery of the Yakutat & Southern Railway Co., which is also owned by Libby, McNeill & Libby.

NEW CANNERIES.

Six new canneries were operated in Alaska in 1915 by the following companies: Doyhof Fish Products Co., at Scow Bay, near Petersburg, in southeast Alaska; Canoe Pass Packing Co., at Cordova; Copper River Packing Co., at Abercrombie, near Mile 55 on the Copper River; the Deep Sea Salmon Co., at Goose Bay, on Knik Arm, in central Alaska; the Nelson Lagoon Packing Co., at Nelson Lagoon; and the North Alaska Salmon Co., on the eastern side of the Kvichak River above Pedersens Point, in western Alaska.

The foregoing, together with the cannery of the newly organized Straits Packing Co., not operated in 1914, makes an apparent gain of seven canneries for 1915, but deduction must be made for the 1914 total of the two canneries destroyed by fire, namely, those of the Kuiu Island Packing Co. at Beauclaire and of the Alaska Fishermen's Packing Co. on Kvichak Bay; also there must be deducted the cannery of the north Alaska Salmon Co. at Tallerville, not operated in 1915, thus making a net increase of four canneries in poeration in 1915 over 1914.

Of the preparatory arrangements for the operation of additional canneries in 1916, there may be mentioned the following: The Alaska Salmon Co. erected buildings at Graveyard Point, Koggiung, which possibly may be used for a cannery next year. The plant was operated as a saltery in 1915. The Bristol Bay Packing Co. erected new buildings for a large cannery in close proximity to their present plant on Kvichak Bay. The Naknek Packing Co. erected buildings for a new plant about 2 miles above their present plant on Naknek River and expect to operate there next season. The Red Salmon Canning Co. also erected buildings on the Naknek River to be used as a cannery in 1916.

CANNERIES OPERATED IN 1915.

During the year 1915 there were 45 canneries in operation in southeast Alaska, 17 in central Alaska, and 23 in western Alaska, a total of 85 canneries for the Territory.

CANNERIES NOT OPERATED IN 1915.

SALMON CATCH AND FORMS OF GEAR.

There were in operation in southeast Alaska in the salmon-canning industry 137 driven and 48 floating traps, or a total of 185 traps; while in central Alaska there were 84 driven traps and in western Alaska 15 driven traps; this makes a total of 236 driven and 48 floating traps, or a grand total of 284 traps operated in the commercial fishery of Alaska in 1915. In 1914 the total number of traps in operation was 252, of which 211 were driven and 41 floating; thus 1915 shows a gain of 25 driven and 7 floating traps, or a total increase of 32 traps over 1914. By geographical sections the gains in 1915 were 7 floating traps in southeast Alaska, 24 driven traps in central Alaska, and 2 driven traps in western Alaska, while there was a decrease of 1 driven trap in southeast Alaska.

In 1915 the total number of purse and haul seines operated in the salmon industry of Alaska was 361 as against 336 the previous year. This gain of 25 seines for 1915 occurred almost wholly in southeast Alaska.

Of the total catch of salmon in Alaska in 1915, the proportion taken in traps was 42 per cent, by seines 29 per cent, by gill nets 27 per cent, and less than 1 per cent by lines and dip nets. By way of comparison it may be noted that in the previous year the trap catch was 31 per cent, the seine catch was 27 per cent, the gill-net catch was 41 per cent, and the proportion by lines and dip nets practically the same as in 1915. The most notable feature of this is a decrease in 1915 of 14 per cent in the proportionate gill-net catch, which must be accounted for by reason of the lessened run of salmon in western Alaska where the catch is chiefly by gill nets. This proportionate decrease was offset by a proportionate increase of over 11 per cent caught by traps and more than 2 per cent in seines. The following table shows the proportionate catches by districts by the three principal forms of apparatus:

The total catch of salmon of all species in the commercial fishery of Alaska in 1915 numbered 63,537,244 as against 54,615,915 in 1914, a gain of 8,921,329. In southeast Alaska there was an increase of about 15,000,000 salmon, but this was offset by decreases of more than 1,000,000 in central and about 5,000,000 in western Alaska as compared with 1914. In 1915 there were gains of approximately 14,200,000 humpback, 110,000 king, and 13,000 coho salmon, while the number of reds decreased 3,950,000 and chums fell off 1,450,000.

STATISTICS.

The number of canneries in operation in Alaska in 1915 was 85, as compared with 81 in 1914. The total investment increased from $30,830,435 in 1914 to $31,282,325 in 1915. This increase was chiefly in central and western Alaska.

The number of persons employed in canning operations in 1914 was 16,307, and in 1915 the number was 17,741, an increase of 1,434 persons. Gains were shown in all three districts. The most notable feature was the increase of 598 Indians over 1914. The total number of Indians employed in 1915 in the salmon canning industry was 4,325. There were smaller gains in 1915 in the number of whites, Chinese, and Japanese engaged in this industry.

In 1914 the pack of canned salmon was 4,056,653 cases, valued at $18,920,589, while in 1915 it was 4,500,293, valued at $18,653,015, an increase of 443,640 cases, but a decrease of $267,574 in value. This seeming anomaly is accounted for by reason of the much larger pack of lower-priced fish in 1915. By sections the case-pack comparison is as follows: Southeast Alaska advanced from 1,776,075 to 2,549,212 cases, an increase of 773,137 cases; central Alaska declined from 658,791 to 632,848 cases, a decrease of 25,943 cases; while in western Alaska there was a decline from 1,621,787 to 1,318,233 cases, a decrease of 303,554 cases from the 1914 pack in that region. Comparisons by species show the following: The pack of cohos declined from 157,063 to 124,268 cases, a decrease of 32,795 cases; chums declined from 663,859 to 479,946 cases, a decrease of 183,913 cases; and reds declined from 2,201,643 to 1,932,312 cases, a decrease of 269,331 cases in 1915. Humpbacks went up from 986,049 to 1,875,516 cases, an advance of 889,467 cases; and kings increased from 48,039 to 88,251, a gain of 40,212 cases in 1915. The net increase for all species in 1915 was 443,640 cases.

The pack of salmon in 1915 is the largest in the history of Alaska, exceeding the previous record of 1914 by 443,640 cases, but, as above mentioned, the 1915 pack was $267,574 less in value because of the smaller production of the higher priced red salmon and the greatly increased pack of the less valuable humpbacks.

The Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, under the provisions of the enabling act of August 24, 1912, passed a law taxing this industry in addition to the taxes already provided for and levied under the act of June 26, 1906. The power of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska to do so was challenged by the fishing interests of Alaska, but the power has been upheld by the district court of Alaska; also by the United States circuit court of appeals. This bill, however, undertakes to take over and vest in the Federal Government the exclusive power to tax this industry and avoid this dual taxation. At the same time this bill provides ampler revenue than that which would be provided under the present law, Federal and Territorial. The committee did not think it good policy to give the Federal Government the right to tax in part and the Territory the power to license and tax in part. Either the whole power should be vested in the Territory of Alaska or in the General Government. Either the General Government should continue its control over the industry in Alaska or it should be given over to the Territory. It has been the policy of Congress thus far to retain control over this great industry, because the output of the fisheries of Alaska is a national asset. It is a large and essential part of the food supply of the Nation, and the output is largely absorbed in the States.

The bill does not require a license for the taking of food fish or shellfish for personal, domestic, or family use, or for conducting retail trade in fish or fishery products in Alaska.

There has never been any disposition on the part of Congress to do anything unfriendly to the local interests in Alaska. Alaska has a population of about 50,000 people, scattered over a vast territory, and that part of the population located immediately upon the coast of Alaska is directly interested in this industry. Under existing law the Territory of Alaska has the right to levy a tax not exceeding 1 cent on real and personal property in the Territory of Alaska; but it has never been found practicable to exercise that right, for the reason that the property, real and personal, that would be subject to taxation is so scattered that to enact revenue laws and undertake to put them into effect, to assess and collect the revenue, would cost from 60 to 75 per cent of the revenue which would be realized. Therefore, that power has never been exercised by the Territory of Alaska.

We provide for the disposition of the license fees and taxes. We provide that one-third shall go into the National Treasury, to be used for the inspection and conservation of the fisheries in Alaska, including the maintenance of fish hatcheries in Alaska. We provide that two-thirds shall go to the Territory of Alaska. Such part as originates in the towns where the canneries are located shall go to the towns for school and municipal purposes. The balance we provide shall go into the Alaska fund for the construction of good roads and for other Territorial purposes. We also provide in the bill for fixed net locations, pound nets, stake nets, and other fixed appliances, and for their regulation. Also, where it shall be unlawful to fish. We provide for weekly close periods, having in view the purpose of giving the largest opportunity for the fish to go to the spawning grounds. Hence we provide that in waters the width of which is less than 300 feet it shall be unlawful to take salmon by any means whatever, except by hook and line or by spear or gaff for domestic consumption, or for fish culture or scientific investigation, and in streams less than 500 feet in width with any fixed appliance, and in streams more than 500 feet in width they shall not occupy more than one-third of the width of any such stream; nor shall they be within 500 yards of the mouth of any such stream, the purpose being to give the amplest opportunity for the fish to go to the spawning grounds.

We also prohibit the planting of fish without consent, so that no undesirable varieties of fish may be planted in the waters of Alaska and also prohibit the unlawful waste of food or shellfish.

We provide that the use of spears and gaffs shall be unlawful for commercial fishing, but give perfect freedom in the use of these appliances for catching fish for domestic or local purposes, and then we remove all of the limitations upon the natives of Alaska, so far as fishing for domestic purposes is concerned, or for any other purpose except for the canneries.

We provide for fishways in the streams, and prohibit barricades and obstructions, and also that the Government shall take over the private hatcheries either by purchase or condemnation and operate them.

Of course we provide for reports, inspections, and regulations, and we provide—and that is a question that will be discussed more fully when we come to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule—that Territorial legislation in conflict with this legislation shall be prohibited. In other words, the bill is drawn upon the theory that so long as this industry remains under the supervision of Congress, Congress shall retain exclusive control.

When the Territory is given statehood, I assume that the industry will be given over to the State; but for the present at least the Government shall retain control. We provide for punishment for violations of the law by suitable fines and penalties, and define the various terms used in the bill, and have a provision expressly providing that the War Department shall retain authority over the navigable streams of the Territory.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM], in opposition to the bill.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I wish to get information concerning the division of the time. Is it understood that the opponents of the bill are to have control of the hour in opposition to it?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule it is provided that those in favor of the bill are entitled to an hour and those opposed to an hour.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] has been recognized in opposition.

Mr. KEATING. Do I understand that the gentleman from Alaska controls the time in opposition? If the gentleman from Alaska controls the time, it is satisfactory to me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] did not take the floor, but asked that the gentleman from Alaska be recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. KEATING. I misunderstood the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. That was satisfactory to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MANN. That was his request.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. To allow the gentleman from Alaska to be recognized in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska is recognized for an hour.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, the fisheries of Alaska constitute the greatest natural food supply which now belongs to the people of the United States, in its natural state. As early as 1888 the canneries were established in the Territory of Alaska, and the salmon of that Territory was canned; and from that day to this the amount of canned salmon put up there has increased from year to year. More than $325,000,000 in value in food supplies has been taken out of the waters of Alaska up to this time. The output of the fisheries in Alaska for the last year amounted to more than $20,000,000. It is, I repeat, one of the great natural food supplies belonging to the people of the United States; but, Mr. Chairman, that food supply is now in great danger of utter extermination. This Congress has given too little attention to protecting and preserving it. The canneries have increased, and they have extended into new waters. The trap sites have become so numerous, the methods of catching the fish with all sorts of appliances have become so widespread that now that great food supply is being depleted and about to be destroyed. It is entirely under the jurisdiction of Congress. When the act creating the Legislature of Alaska was passed objection was made to giving the Territorial legislature any jurisdiction over those fisheries, and a limitation was placed in the bill withdrawing all jurisdiction over the fisheries of Alaska from the Territorial legislature or the people of Alaska, except that one jurisdictional grant was made that the legislature might levy an additional license tax upon the output thereof.

So that at this time neither the people of Alaska nor their legislature has any jurisdiction over the fisheries of Alaska except the power of levying an additional tax upon the output thereof. Whether our legislature ever had that power has been a question heretofore, and has been carried through the courts, but was upheld by the final judgment of the United States circuit court of appeals; but in the bill now before the House it is proposed to take away from the people of Alaska that right. So if this bill passes as it is now drawn and reported favorably to this House, it will take away from the people of Alaska and from the legislature every shred of jurisdiction over these fisheries. We will have nothing to say about them. We will not be able to protect them. We will not be able to prevent them from being utterly destroyed. I want to make this perfectly plain to the House, and I want to impress upon the House that it is within your jurisdiction, and your jurisdiction only, to protect the fisheries in Alaska from monopoly and destruction. Now, they have been canning these fish since 1888. They have canneries at many points along the coast from Ketchikan to Bristol Bay. Wherever there is a great salmon stream there you will find a cannery. There are 146 canneries and similar plants scattered along the coasts of Alaska engaged in putting up fish, and many have been so engaged for many years. Not only is that true, but the number of these canneries has been increased from year to year. The fishing has been extended into new waters. The waters are now being overfished, and great corporations are looking to a movement to eliminate the small fishermen and canners and to secure for three great corporations a control and monopoly of these fisheries. I do not make any question of the good faith of the chairman and members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. If they knew as much about the situation up there, however, as some of us who have seen these fisheries destroyed, they would have put something in this bill to secure the protection of the fisheries. There is nothing in the bill now before the House which is good which is not already the law.

In 1906 Congress passed a law for the conservation and protection of the fisheries of Alaska. It will be found in the thirty-fourth Statutes at Large, at page 478. It is entitled, "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," and it covers in a substantial manner everything which is good that is in the bill now before the House. If Members of the House will read this bill they will say that this or that provision in it is good and ought to be in the bill, but if you will turn to the act of 1906 you will find it there. You will find substantially everything which is for the protection of the salmon in the bill now before the House in the act of 1906. Everything in this bill which is new and which is not in the act of 1906, in my judgment ought not to be the law of Alaska.

Permit me now to call your attention to the value of the investment in the fisheries of Alaska as set out on page 18 of the report of the governor of Alaska for 1916. In reference to the amount invested, he says:

> The investment in the fisheries of Alaska in 1915 amounted to $37,316,360, an increase of $277,928 over 1914. More than $31,000,000 of the investment in 1915 was credited to the salmon industry. Of the total investment more than $16,000,000 was in southeastern Alaska, upward of $6,000,000 in central Alaska, and in excess of $14,000,000 in western Alaska.

I want to call your attention now to the enormous investment in these fisheries and the years of time they have been working them to show you this is not a new matter for congressional enactment, but is an old substantial business in Alaska, now arrived at that stage where the fisheries are being depleted, and there is an effort on the part of three great corporations to get a monopoly and control of them. They have had their lobbyists here for the last six years to secure the passage of this bill. They are anxious to secure its passage so that they may push the small canneries out of business and secure for themselves a monopoly. If this bill passes in its present form they will be able to do that.

I want to call attention to the bill itself. I am going to take up two features of this bill only, because they go directly to the question of the attempt of the Chicago Meat Trust and the Booth Fisheries Co. to secure for themselves a monopoly of Alaska fisheries. The first point is the attempt to secure a rebate of all their taxes. Section 2 of this bill provides:

> That the licenses required by section 1 shall be issued by the Secretary of Commerce to any person not disqualified by law on application and the payment of the following annual fees:
> For each canning, mild-curing, salting, smoking, fish-freezing, whaling, or other wholesale fish-dealing establishment, for each fish fertilizer and fish oil works, and for each other fishery establishment, except retail markets, not herein specified, $5.

Now, to be brief about it, this is the sum total of all the payments which is required of one of these great canning or cold-storage establishments on its real property in the Territory of Alaska. It is not required to pay any real-property tax under this bill, and I call attention now to the top of page 4, the last paragraph in section 2:

> The license fees and taxes imposed by this act on such business, appliances, and output shall be in lieu of all other Federal or Territorial license fees and taxes therefor and thereon.

Whether that excludes the income tax or the corporation tax I do not know, but it certainly excludes the laying of all Territorial and municipal taxes in the Territory of Alaska. But for fear that it did not——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Did the gentleman say the license provided for in this bill is the only tax on the industry in which these so-called trusts are interested?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I did not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understood the gentleman to say it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; the gentleman will not find that in my language. I was very particular to say that that $5 was all the real-property tax that these corporations would have to pay upon any one of their plants in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is not real estate tax at all?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I know it is not, but that is all they have to pay. They have more than $10,000,000 worth of real property in the Territory of Alaska, according to the report of the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to get the purport of what the gentleman said there. Do I understand him to mean that $5 is the only tax that these corporations of which he speaks will pay under this bill?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; the gentleman does not understand me to say that at all.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did understand you to say that.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Then the gentleman's understanding is at fault and not my language. What I mean is that that $5 is all the real property tax the New England Fish Co., for example, will pay on its plant at Ketchikan in one year, and is the only amount in the form of real property tax which any other such plant will have to pay in Alaska under this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Do they pay any other tax for the privilege of fishing there?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Surely.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will you tell us what that is?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will when I get to it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman does not mean that $5 is all these corporations will pay?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all. I hope the gentleman will not get excited.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not excited; I am trying to find out what the gentleman is trying to say.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If you will give me an opportunity, I will tell you.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will. I will not take it away from you. I think you need it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Section 22 of this bill is perfectly clear on this proposition also. It says:

That from and after the passage of this act the Territory of Alaska shall not pass any law that has the effect of repealing, altering, or amending this act, nor shall the Territory of Alaska impose any license fees or taxes upon the business hereinbefore referred to, nor upon the output thereof, nor upon any property, real or personal, used in said business in said Territory, and any such existing statutes heretofore enacted by the Territory of Alaska are hereby expressly disapproved.

So that I repeat, in order that the gentleman from Washington may not misunderstand me, that that means that $5 is all the real-property tax which any of these great corporations will pay upon $10,000,000 worth of real property in the Territory of Alaska if this bill passes. Ten million dollars worth of real property at 1 per cent would be $100,000 per year. The statement added to the report here shows that these great cannery owners will pay $740 only, instead of $100,000. In other words, if this bill passes, it is more than $99,000 in the pockets of these big corporations upon the single proposition of real-property tax in the Territory of Alaska per annum. Talk about giving the people of Alaska an addition of taxes for their use. You actually take away $99,000 on that item alone.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield at that point——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER (continuing). And tell the House how much real estate tax they pay now, and if under the provisions of this bill they will not pay more in the Territory of Alaska than they do under the existing law?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will answer your last question first and say, no.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I say they do.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I say they do not. I say that you have no right to take away from the people of Alaska their right to levy 1 per cent tax upon this property to the amount of $100,000 and impose that burden upon the people of the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield again at this point?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No. I hope the gentleman will excuse me. Now, I know what the gentleman wants to ask. He wants to know if we have levied that real-property tax, and I will say, No, we have not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the question I wanted to ask.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, sir; I was sure of that. The Territory of Alaska is a new Territory. It has only had a legislature now for two sessions. We have not been able to make up a taxing system which will enable us to reach these great interests and tax them, but we intend to do so, and they know it, and they now appeal to this House to protect them and prevent us from securing the proper proportion of real estate tax which they ought to pay under the law which now exists. This bill is worth $99,000 a year to these big cannery interests if they can only drive it through this House and get it enacted into law. Now, if there is anybody in this House who wants to give the Booth Fishery Co., the Chicago Meat Trust, and the Alaska Packers' Association and their allies $99,000 per annum, and make the people of Alaska pay that sum in addition to their present tax for maintaining government there, or pay it out of the Government funds, then vote for this bill. If you are in favor of giving the people of Alaska a square deal on the matter of taxation, then do not vote for the bill.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will.

Mr. BENNET. I am entirely neutral. There is one point of the gentleman's argument I do not follow. He says that this bill is worth $99,000 to the companies now. Will the gentleman take a couple of minutes to elucidate that?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. They have $10,000,000 worth of shore or real property in the Territory of Alaska. It consists of cannery sites and canneries, of cold-storage sites and cold-storage plants, of whale-fishery establishments, and real estate and improvements thereon. It consists of real property, or lands and buildings on the lands. I find that stated, substantially, and I assume correctly, in the report of the Bureau of Fisheries, which is in favor of this bill.

Mr. KENT. Does the gentleman take into consideration the personal property element of boats and equipment?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No. I was considering only real property. The 1916 report of the Governor of Alaska says there are $37,316,560 invested in fisheries in Alaska; $10,000,000 of this is in shore property—substantially that sum.

Mr. BENNET. The State from which I come has a system of real estate tax. Is this land now assessed and valued by any governmental agency?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is not. It is not assessed now, but under the law——

Mr. BENNET. I am not so distressed about the assessment, but what I want to get at is this: Is there any governmental agency in the Territory of Alaska that values property as, for instance, the department of taxation in New York City values real estate in that city?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No.

Mr. BENNET. This estimate is the estimate, as the gentleman states, which is placed upon this real estate by the present Bureau of Fisheries?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; and it has been given to them, as I understand, by those who own the real estate itself. But it is contained in the statement of the Bureau of Fisheries, and I took it from there.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to understand the gentleman's idea. Your idea is that the work of legislation should be left to the Territory of Alaska rather than to the United States Government?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have not said anything about that. The gentleman is anticipating.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I understood the gentleman to say this bill took away from the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska everything in the way of legislation for fishing purposes.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In the organic act creating the Legislature of Alaska it was given but the single power to levy additional license tax on fisheries, and this act will take away that power.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman contend that we should merely legislate as to general legislation or that we should allow general legislation to be passed by the Territory of Alaska? And should it be local or national legislation?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have not been discussing that at all.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to hear from you on that point.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will talk about that when I reach it.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Who owned this property that the gentleman refers to prior to the time it was acquired by the fishery interests?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The United States owned the lands.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Have they bought any property owned by private individuals, to the gentleman's knowledge?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Possibly, but I am not sure about that. I have not looked up the matter of titles.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. FESS. As I understand it, the contention of the gentleman now holding the floor is that if this paragraph at the top of page 24 passes into law the Federal Government would not have authority to add the 1 per cent taxation on real estate, and that not only you would lose the power in the Territory but the Federal Government by this law would forfeit the right?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, no. Congress would not forfeit the right to change the law.

Mr. FESS. As long as the law stands——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. As long as the law stands, of course, there could be no levy of taxes upon that property.

Mr. FESS. Could the mere fact that the Territory has not made the 1 per cent tax be considered as an argument that it will not do it in the future?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No. It will do it in the future. The purpose is to do it in the future.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to take up another feature of this matter, because the question of taxation is in my judgment the smallest evil in this bill. I now want to talk to you about that feature of the bill which gives a monopoly of the control and ownership of these Alaskan fisheries to three great corporations.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, in order that I may get clearly in my mind the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Always; yes.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand, the gentleman's objection is that this bill provides for a license tax and provides for a business tax and an output tax in behalf of the Federal Government, but does not provide for an ad valorem tax upon personal and real property involved in these enterprises?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No. I was objecting to the latter clause only; that it did not provide for any ad valorem tax upon the real property or the personal property of these cannery corporations in Alaska.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand you, taking the whole section of the present bill and the law, there is no tax upon the personal property or the real property of these corporations?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There has been no tax levied yet upon their real property.

Mr. HARDY. Has there been any levied on their personal property?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. By an act of the legislature that will be repealed by this bill.

Mr. HARDY. Let me suggest to you that the saving clause there saves the taxes already imposed.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I know it does; but that was not in the bill before I went before the committee and made objection and secured the attention of the committee to the matter and you put in the amendment.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the other feature of this bill which, it seems to me, ought to condemn it before a Congress interested in finding the remedy for the high cost of living. The President of the United States and Congress and the people of this country are now giving time to the discussion of the question of the high cost of living, and yet here by this bill, if I read it aright and if I construe it aright, is a plan to turn over to three big corporations in Alaska one of the greatest natural food supplies belonging to the people of the United States. I want to call your attention to it, so that you will see if I am correct about it. Beginning with section 6 of this bill, it is provided that—

> Any person occupying, or desiring to occupy, any location where it may be lawful to construct a pound net in the waters of Alaska—

I will stop there long enough to explain to you what a pound net is. It consists of a long row of piles or posts running from the shore out into the water, and at the end of those piles is an arrangement upon which they hang nets, and there is a jigger, or arm, all netted over, in addition, so that when the fish come along toward the spawning grounds they strike the netting on the long row of piles and are diverted away from their course trying to get around it until they work their way into the trap. When they get into the trap there is no escape for them and the fisherman comes along and brails them out. I will read that again:

> That any person occupying, or desiring to occupy, any location where it may be lawful to construct a pound net in the waters of Alaska shall cause such location to be accurately surveyed by a competent surveyor, unless a survey thereof has already been made, in which event such existing survey may be used, and shall cause three maps to be made of such location from the actual survey thereof, which shall contain a plat and description of such fishing location sufficient for its ascertainment and identification on the premises. Such maps shall also contain a certificate by the claimant, or by his agent or attorney, stating that he claims the fishing location shown thereon, specifying the date and number of the license under which the same is held, or the fact that application has been made therefor. Such maps, with the certificates thereon, shall be filed in the office of the commissioner of records.

I will not read the rest of it. It relates to the matter of filing for record in the office. Now, turn to the same matter on page 8, at the beginning of line 6. I read:

> From and after the filing of the map in the case of a pound net, or from and after the posting of the number of the license as above provided in the case of a stake net or set net, the claimant of the fishing location shown on such map, or marked by such number, his heirs, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns, shall have the exclusive right to hold, occupy, and fish in such location, to renew the license therefor, and to mortgage, sell, lease, or transfer the same during the time that he or they in other respects shall comply with the law pertaining thereto.

Now, in brief, when a locator locates one of these trap sites by making a survey, he files his certificate of location for record with the local recorder and one copy of the map made with it is sent to the Secretary of Commerce and another copy is sent to the Bureau of Fisheries in the city of Seattle, and thereupon that site becomes his exclusive property. In other words, he has the exclusive right to fish on it as long as he shall comply with the law by paying $50 a year, and once every two years doing some fishing on it. That is all he has to do, and I call your attention to the fact that there is no limit to the number of claims or locations which any one man or corporation may make of these trap sites. The Booth Fisheries Co. now has about 100 of them, either located or surveyed. That company and others have been surveying all summer along the shores of Cook Inlet and along the shores of Alaska. Hundreds of these locations have been made. All have been made that are of any value. I notice a statement in this report which, if it were not so pitiful, would be amusing. It says, in effect, that suppose there are 250 such claims; they only cover a certain few miles, call it 250 miles, along the coast—I do not remember the exact number stated in the report—but of what importance is that when there are 26,000 miles of shore line in the Territory of Alaska? What have 250 miles of fisheries in Alaska got to do with the case when there are 26,000 miles? That is the purport of the statement made in the committee's report. It is amazing that the committee would put such a statement in their report. If they had the slightest information upon the subject of those fisheries, they would know that there are very few spots along these shores that are fit for trap sites. These fishery companies send out men to scour the coasts to find where trap sites may be located to advantage, and trap sites are located there and nowhere else. Possibly in a hundred miles along the coast there may not be a single trap-site location.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I will ask the gentleman if it is not analogous to some one claiming the right to catch all the automobiles that run along the road, provided other people are allowed to catch all those who run through the fields or on the grass in the park? Do not the fish follow certain routes?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; they do. And the only trap site of any value is along that route. A trap site away from that route would be useless and would be abandoned. These sites are much sought after, and are now already surveyed by the big fishing companies.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I would be very glad to hear the gentleman as to whether he considers that this proposed legislation will supersede the riparian rights.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There are no riparian rights in individuals in Alaska. Such rights belong to the Government of the United States. Alaska is not yet a State; it is a Territory.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Of course, I understand that.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. And all of the tide lands are held by the United States in trust for the people of the future State. So Congress has the right probably to grant trap sites on tide lands and make a gift of them to these big corporations if it desires to do so.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. SISSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I yield to the gentleman in front of me [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman refers to trap-net fishing. Is this a special method by which these fish are caught? Will they catch more fish in a trap net than in any other way?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I infer from the gentleman's remarks, then, that it is possible for one concern to establish 500 of these places?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Undoubtedly. That is what I am trying to make this House understand, that under this bill the Chicago Meat Trust, represented by Libby, McNeill & Libby, which now has probably 100 of these trap sites, can secure all of them, and they are doing it just as fast as they can buy up other companies in Alaska and secure their trap sites.

Mr. SISSON. Right in line with what the gentleman is saying I see that section 6 refers to fixed net locations.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Is there any place in the bill where the number of such locations that may be set apart or surveyed is limited?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will show the gentleman when my time comes.

Mr. SISSON. What is a trap site, and how large is it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will give the gentleman that information.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The provisions of the bill in regard to that are ample and definite.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There are about 320 acres in each trap site. Is not that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it is not.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. How much does it give them?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It says they shall not be located within certain distances. The purpose is to give the fish a chance to move, to go about, and not to trap all the fish.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I am including those prohibited areas as a part of the trap site, because the holder of the trap site gets the advantage of that prohibited area around the trap site, although he does not own it. Nobody else can go there and fish. It belongs to the holder of the trap site just as exclusively as if he had obtained a patent from the United States Government for it, and all other fishermen are excluded from fishing thereon. That effectually enlarges his trap site so that it includes, with his trap site and the surrounding area, about 320 acres, upon which no one may fish but the locator of the trap site.

Mr. SISSON. With the gentleman's permission, I do not think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] answered my question. I want to know how large is one of these areas that is set apart and over which the man holding the trap site has the exclusive control? Is it 2 or 3 miles square?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is all described in section 7 of this bill. Section 7 says:

> That no lead of any pound net in the waters of Alaska shall exceed 3,000 feet in length, and there shall be an end passageway of at least 600 feet and a lateral passageway of at least 2,400 feet between pound nets and an end passageway of at least 600 feet and a lateral passageway of at least 1,000 feet between a pound net and a stake net or set net.

I have made the best calculation that I am able to make from the description given in this section of the bill, and I say to this House that after that most careful calculation it gives substantially 320 acres to each one of these trap sites, or one-half section of land, an area of land 1 mile long and half a mile wide, and there is no limit upon the number of these trap sites which one company may take, and there is no limit to the number of trap sites which may be assigned to one corporation or one man.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that the people of the great United States would be better served if the 350 sites that he speaks of were divided up between 350 men, or whether they should all belong to these three monopolies or concerns that he speaks of? Which would we get the most benefit from as a people in the distribution of the fish?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is an amazing question to be asked. I had always supposed that everybody understood that it was better for the people of this country to have the wealth of the country widely distributed rather than to be put in the hands of one man or one corporation. I think certainly that that is true when it comes to monopolizing the food supply of the people, because that is what this amounts to.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. FESS. My first impression was that the 26,000 miles of expanse would make the fishery industry inexhaustible up there. I want to ask the gentleman if we have sufficient definite knowledge of the habits of the fish so that we can locate where the fish are and another place where they are not?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; with reasonable certainty.

Mr. FESS. Then there is a possibility of exhausting the supply, even though the seacoast is apparently unlimited?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. FESS. There is no doubt about it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman to state something in relation to the habits of the salmon, because no one is better able than the gentleman to speak with authority on that subject?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There are five varieties of salmon in Alaskan waters.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Do they return to the same waters each year?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. They return to some one of the salmon streams.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. This is bearing upon the ability to locate where the fish go each season.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Many of the streams in Alaska are not salmon streams. Generally there is some lake connected with the stream, and there must be some gravel bar, either in the lake or in the stream, where the fish can spawn. It is to that sort of a stream they resort when they come from the sea.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will.

Mr. HICKS. Are not most of these sites in the hands of the big corporations, or are they in the hands of the small fishing interests?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. They are now largely in the hands of three corporations—the Alaskan Packers' Association, Libby, McNeill & Libby, representing the Swifts, and the Booth Fisheries Co. They have had men out all summer surveying and preparing maps to file the minute this bill is passed, so that they can get absolute control and title of these fisheries.

Mr. REILLY. What is the present law regarding these fisheries?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Under the present law the fisheries are free.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to see if I get the gentleman's point about filing maps. Section 6, page 6, says—

> That any person occupying, or desiring to occupy, any location where it may be lawful to construct a pound net in the waters of Alaska, shall cause such location to be accurately surveyed by a competent surveyor, unless a survey thereof has already been made, in which event such existing survey may be used, and shall cause three maps to be made of such location from the actual survey thereof, which shall contain a plat and description of such fishing location sufficient for its ascertainment and identification on the premises.

Now, the gentleman says that these surveys have already been made, anticipating the passage of the bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; which provides for the filing of these maps.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The bill further says:

> From and after the filing of the map in the case of a pound net, or from and after the posting of the number of the license as above provided in the case of a stake net or set net, the claimant of the fishing location shown on such map, or marked by such number, his heirs, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns, shall have the exclusive right to hold, occupy, and fish in such location, to renew the license therefor, and to mortgage, sell, lease, or transfer the same during the time that he or they in other respects shall comply with the law pertaining thereto.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; he gets an exclusive title.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. For how long?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Until Congress repeals the law.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Would not they acquire vested rights under this?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think so.

Mr. ALEXANDER. He has the right so long as he renews his license and pays the license fee and operates the net.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the language here, "his heirs, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns shall have the exclusive right to hold, occupy," and so forth, renew his license? Can anybody else get in?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It gives them the same title that we have in placer and quartz claims under the mining laws of the United States on the public lands.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To put a short interpretation upon it, the claim that these fisheries are open to anybody to have a site and secure it is pure sham?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; and it is much purer sham when you know that these big canneries have the maps already to file, and all they are waiting for is the passage of this bill to enter into the ownership of the fisheries in Alaska.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would this language read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] preclude a citizen of Canada from obtaining these rights?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have no doubt that it would not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no restriction as to citizenship?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. None at all in the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that we are already in conflict with Canada in regard to fishery rights in this vicinity?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman from Pennsylvania is asking for information, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Alaska if there is not another law under which these rights can only be acquired by citizens of the United States?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I know of no such law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not this act, if passed now, supersede existing law?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; so far as they conflict.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I asked the question because the very question of the right of the interference of Canadian fishermen has been raised before another committee, and American fishermen are complaining.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; and I want to say that these big corporations about which I am talking and to which I intend to draw the attention of the House have now established their plants at Prince Rupert at the end of the Grand Trunk Railroad, 90 miles from Alaska, where they intend to manage this business if they get the title to these fisheries.

Mr. SISSON rose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know that American fishermen——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think I shall not yield to anyone.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I just wanted to make this suggestion to the gentleman and to the members of the committee. The gentleman had an hour. I do not remember how much of that hour has been used, but under the rules of the House he has only one hour. Unless his time should be extended by unanimous consent after we get into the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, and, of course, then we have that power, if the gentleman is interrupted so that he is not able to finish his statement, he will not be able to conclude what he has to say, and I express the hope now that members of the committee will not object to his getting such an extension of time when he takes the floor under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SISSON. We might settle that question now.

Mr. MANN. We can not do it.

Mr. SISSON. We might do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The committee can not extend the time for general debate. That is fixed by a rule of the House.

Mr. SISSON. One can do almost anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The House can do it, but we are in committee, and the committee can not do it.

Mr. SISSON. I had overlooked the fact that we are in committee.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That provision with respect to citizenship is a common provision in bills of this kind, and it is so common that you find it in the Oregon and Washington laws relating to this same subject. I call the attention of the committee to section 58 of the annotated laws relating to food and shell fish in the State of Washington of 1915, wherein it is provided:

It shall be unlawful for any person to fish or take for sale or profit any food or shell fish in any of the rivers or waters of this State, or over which it has concurrent jurisdiction in civil or criminal cases, unless such person be a citizen of the United States or have declared his intention to become such, and is and has been for 12 months immediately prior to the time he engages in such business an actual resident of this State or an adjoining State, but this section shall not apply to Indians.

Under that law a citizen of Alaska could not go into the State of Washington or the State of Oregon and catch fish, and it is now proposed in this bill to turn the entire fisheries of the Territory of Alaska over to these three big corporations, who have their headquarters in Seattle and San Francisco, but which they are now transferring to Prince Rupert, at the end of the Grand Trunk Railroad. I want to warn this House that if this bill passes the trap is all set, the maps are all ready to file by which these three big corporations will secure the title to the fisheries in Alaska.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman what the effect on the population of Alaska would be as between more independent and competitive fishing and this trust fishing?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There would be no other fishing except this trust and trap fishing if this bill should be passed.

Mr. KENT. And the fishermen are mostly Japanese?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There are a great many Japanese and Chinese brought up in the cannery crews, but the fishermen themselves are not Japanese and Chinese. They are generally white men brought up from San Francisco and Seattle.

Mr. KENT. But they are migratory labor, are they not?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have here petitions and protests from thousands of fishermen of Alaska against the passage of this bill. Here is one which I shall read. It is dated Ketchikan, Alaska, October 10, 1916, and is addressed to the United States Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned residents of southeastern Alaska, being fishermen and otherwise interested in the fisheries of Alaska, do most respectfully protest against the passage of the bill H. R. 17499, introduced August 18, 1916, by Mr. ALEXANDER, of Missouri, and entitled "A bill for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes." The said bill will result in a monopoly of the fisheries of Alaska by the great corporations and will result in great harm and loss to the people of the Nation.

Petitions of that kind are signed by thousands of fishermen in Alaska and are in my hands, and I exhibit them to this House.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. What is the attitude of the inhabitants of Alaska in so far as the gentleman has been able to learn it in the little towns along the coast there as you go up the inland passageway?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have just read you their protest.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I mean other than the fishermen?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Every one along there who is interested either in business with the fishermen or engaged in fishing signed these protests. It is the unanimous protest of the people of that country.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am anxious to know, because I had the pleasure of going up there this summer a year ago, and I think there are wonderful possibilities in that country, and, as far as I am concerned, I should like to do everything I can to assist the gentleman in building it up.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I thank the gentleman. There ought to be something done by this Congress which will enable us to build up a population of fishermen along that coast. We ought to have thousands of people inhabiting homes in little cities and towns along that coast, building up a population of good American fishermen there, instead of turning all of these great fisheries over to three great corporations, who will catch all of the fish with traps, with the result that no one in Alaska will get a cent out of it. There will not be a schoolhouse built in Alaska out of this money nor a home constructed. It will all be taken out of the Territory by the great corporations and used to add to the wealth of stockholders in New York and other eastern cities.

Mr. Chairman, I want to now talk for a moment about these corporations. I want to refer to Libby, McNeill & Libby, in whose name 40 or 50 of these trap sites are now held.

I have here Poor's Manual of Industrials for 1916, and I refer to page 729 first. I am going to be very brief about this, but it is a very important matter, to show who is going to get the ownership of these trap sites if this bill passes.

LIBBY, M'NEILL & LIBBY (ME.).

Incorporated August 6, 1903, in Maine, and conducts a packing business. Plants located at Chicago, Ill.

Capital stock: Authorized and outstanding, $8,000,000. Shares, $100. Dividends paid at the rate of 8 per cent per annum.

Directors: L. F. Swift, E. F. Swift, L. A. Carton, W. F. Burrows, H. Veeder, Harold H. Swift, G. C. Swift, jr., C. H. Swift, E. G. McDougall.

Officers: W. F. Burrows, president; Edward F. Swift, vice president; Edward G. McDougall, vice president; Henry W. Hardy, treasurer; Charles E. Hill, assistant treasurer; Harry Williams, secretary. Office, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, Ill.

In other words, those are the men who are the heads of the Swift Meat Trust. They own Libby, McNeill & Libby, and they simply use the trade name of Libby, McNeill & Libby for the purpose of grabbing our fisheries in the Territory of Alaska. They, too, have been surveying trap sites along the coasts of Alaska this summer. They have the maps ready and in their hands down here at the department waiting for Congress to pass this bill so they may go and take the fisheries of Alaska away from the people of the United States. Now, I want to call attention to the Booth Fisheries Co., on page 1557 of Poor's Manual of Industrials for 1916. I am going to read a little more of this because it is much more important and interesting:

BOOTH FISHERIES CO.

Incorporated May 10, 1909, under laws of Delaware; became purchasers at receiver's sale of all assets of A. Booth & Co., Chicago, Ill., formally taking possession thereof on May 24, 1909. The company is engaged in buying and selling, at wholesale and retail, fish, oysters, and all sea foods, and has a large fleet of fishing boats on the Great Lakes and Pacific Ocean. The company operates in over 70 cities of the United States, including New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, St. Louis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Denver, and Duluth. Own four public cold-storage plants and also cold-storage plants for the freezing and carrying on of its own fish at nearly all its branches. Owns real estate and buildings in several cities, upon which its branches and cold-storage plants are located; 117 steamships, tugs, etc., and 571 sailing boats, barges, etc.

I call special attention to what follows:

On April 1, 1911, purchased the entire capital stock and assets of the Northwestern Fisheries Co., a Washington corporation, owning a fleet of boats and 12 fishing plants on the Alaskan coast—

That was the Morgan, Guggenheim, Northwestern Fisheries Co., which was turned into the Booth Fisheries Co., I am told, for participation—

To finance this purchase, provide additional cash working capital, and redeem $1,425,000 of its debenture bonds then outstanding the stockholders authorized a $5,000,000 sinking fund 6 per cent debenture bond issue, due April 1, 1926, and sold $4,000,000 thereof. In 1912 the entire capital stock of the International Fisheries Co. (Tacoma, Wash.) was acquired.

In 1915 acquired the canneries, etc., of Gorman & Co. and transferred the properties to the Anacortes Fisheries Co., incorporated April 15, 1915, in Washington, with $1,000,000 capital stock, all of which is owned by the Booth Fisheries Co. The Anacortes Co. will operate two salmon canneries in Alaska and three salmon canneries in Puget Sound.

The Booth Fisheries and the other companies have put up in the year surviving many of these trap sites in the Territory of Alaska, and are ready to file them with the Secretary of Commerce as soon as this bill passes. They are buying canneries and taking over trap sites and forming a monopoly out of them. Oh, some gentlemen may say that that is my ipse dixit. I was told it was my ipse dixit before the committee. But here is an indictment against the Booth Co. They are under indictment in the city of Seattle for doing what I am talking about in the Territorial waters of Alaska. This copy of this indictment was given to me upon request by Mr. Clay Allen, United States district attorney at Seattle.

I shall first read the title of the document:

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON, NORTHERN DIVISION.

United States of America, plaintiff, v. Booth Fisheries Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware; Booth Fisheries Co., organized under the laws of the State of Washington; the Chlopeck Fish Co. (Inc.), a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington; San Juan Fishing & Packing Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington; Occidental Fish Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington; A. B. Carpenter, W. T. Chutter, William Calvert, jr., H. O. Roberts, and W. J. Maddock, the Christian names of each of said persons being to the grand jurors unknown, defendants. May term, 1914. No. 2791. Indictment.

Now, those are the parties, and each of these minor or subsidiary corporations mentioned therein are the corporations that have been bought up and are being controlled by the Booth Co. at the time this indictment was brought, and since that time the Booth Co. has also bought the Gorman Co. and others.

Mr. HARDY. Is that an indictment under the antitrust law?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; it is.

I now call your attention to the charging clause of the indictment. I think it is on page 14 of this indictment. It says:

That the purposes to be effected by said unlawful conspiracy were:

(a) To control and limit the supply and to control and depress the price of halibut shipped in boxes from Alaska to the markets of Seattle and Tacoma, Wash.

(b) To control and limit the supply and depress and otherwise control the price of halibut produced by the defendants and independent fishermen and offered in the halibut markets of Seattle and Tacoma, Wash.

(c) To control the price paid by independent halibut brokers by making exorbitant and unreasonable bids against the independent brokers from time to time;

(d) To control the price paid for halibut by the refusal to bid against the other defendants herein and by the offer of collusive and fraudulent bids among themselves;

(e) To control the distribution of halibut in the markets of the cities of the several States by concealment of stock ownership and control among themselves and by the maintenance of pretended competition;

(f) To control the prices paid by offering for sale from time to time in the several States halibut purchased and obtained by collusive bids and offered in competition with halibut purchased under normal conditions of trade;

(g) To control the prices paid and refraining from good faith competition in the markets severally allotted by agreement among themselves; and

(h) To control the halibut markets in the cities of the several States by intimidation and coercion of independent brokers to maintain and support prices fixed by themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that can be done.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to the gentleman continuing for 30 minutes if the same time is extended to the other side.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that can be done until we commence to read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not entertain that motion.

Mr. MANN. How much time has the gentleman consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 45 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we commence to read the bill, and then have unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri shall have 1 hour and 15 minutes more, and that would include the 45 minutes due him, and 30 minutes additional, and the gentleman from Alaska to have 30 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am willing to agree to any proposition that will not violate the rule.

Mr. MANN. I do not think we ought to consider in the committee that we can violate the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If nobody desires to be heard further under the two-hour limit, the Clerk will read.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Of course, we have this understanding.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to engage in the business of canning, curing, preserving, packing, or otherwise dealing at wholesale in food fish, shellfish, or the products thereof, or manufacturing fishery products in the Territory of Alaska or in any of the waters of Alaska without first obtaining a license for each establishment or works used in such business.

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the business of taking, catching, or fishing for food fish or shellfish in any of the waters of Alaska to use for such purposes any fishing appliance specified in section 2 without first obtaining a license for such appliance.

This section shall not require a license for the taking of food fish or shellfish for personal, domestic, or family use, and not for sale or barter, when not otherwise unlawful to take the same, or for conducting retail trade in fish or fishery products.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alaska may be entitled to proceed for 30 minutes, and that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] shall be entitled to control 1 hour and 15 minutes. That is adding 30 minutes to what would be the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] be allowed 30 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] be allowed an hour and 15 minutes. The only question in the mind of the Chair is as to whether the Chair should entertain that motion. There is no motion to strike out on this section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, the concluding part of the Booth Fisheries Co. indictment is:

And the grand jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths, do further present: That each and all of the several acts of the several defendants herein set forth was with the common purpose, design, intent, and effect of unlawfully and unreasonably restraining the commerce of the United States, and between the several States, the Dominion of Canada, and the Territory of Alaska, within the meaning of the act of Congress of the United States of July 2, 1890, the same being chapter 647, Twenty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 209, and being entitled "An act to protect commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," first herein more particularly mentioned; contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the United States of America.

CLAY ALLEN,
United States District Attorney.

This indictment was filed in the May term, 1914, and I have been asked to state what has been done with it. That is another phase of the strength, the cunning, and the skill of the people who run the Booth Fisheries Co. and those who represent them. It has not yet been tried, and it has not been tried because the United States district attorney in Seattle says that he is so overcome and surrounded by the powerful influences of these people in the city of Seattle that he can not get a fair trial. I am going to read you that part of his letter. In the body of his letter to me he says:

If I could convince myself that the hazard of a criminal trial in this community with its possible or even probable results would have the effect of doing a great good which you profess to see in that result, I would probably reach the conclusion which you have, that the criminal case should be tried, without further consideration of the plan which I have outlined to you.

As suggested in my former letter, I know this community in the same close and intimate way that you are acquainted with Alaska. I have already been through one of the navy-yard cases lasting 20 days, the Munday case, which lasted 28 days, and the Tape case, which dragged its weary length over 20 days, and I know just the extremes to which certain powerful interests in this community can and will go to prevent a fair and impartial trial of a case of the importance which the Booth case would be to them.

That is why the case is not tried.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Why does not the Department of Justice try to get a change of venue in this case to some place where they can get justice?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have not inquired of the department as to that. Mr. Allen is a good Democrat and loyal to the Wilson administration, and a good lawyer.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman know whether he has asked for help?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to ask for the date. You said it was May, 1914.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; May term, 1914. The number of the indictment is 2791.

Now, that is the situation in which we find this bill at this moment, and those are the powerful influences which support this bill and who have their maps now made. They have their maps under their arms down at the department ready to file them and take possession of the fisheries of Alaska, if this bill passes.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. REILLY. You stated a few moments ago that there are no laws at the present time covering the subject matter of this bill regarding these locations for fishing.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. REILLY. What necessity, if any, is there for new legislation along that line?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think there is necessity for it, and I proposed it to the committee. The committee wanted to know what I would do, and I proposed a leasing system of these trap sites, under such protection as ought to be imposed, so that in five years we could go out and recapture them if we desired, and control them in the meantime, and thus prevent them from passing into the hands of one great fishing trust. [Applause.] That can be done, and that ought to be done.

Now, the gentleman was asking what sort of legislation there is extant now. In the act of 1906 it is provided:

That every person, company, or corporation carrying on the business of canning, curing, or preserving fish or manufacturing fish products within the Territory known as Alaska, ceded to the United States by Russia by the treaty of March 30, 1867, or in any of the waters of Alaska over which the United States has jurisdiction, shall, in lieu of all other license fees and taxes therefor and thereon, pay license taxes on their said business and output as follows: Canned salmon, 4 cents per case; pickled salmon, 10 cents per barrel; salt salmon in bulk, 5 cents per 100 pounds; fish oil, 10 cents per barrel; fertilizer, 20 cents per ton. The payment and collection of such license taxes shall be under and in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for the district," and amendments thereto.

I heard the chairman of this committee say—and if I make any mistake in repeating it I beg his pardon—that there is no present system of licenses in Alaska. I do not know whether I understood the gentleman correctly or not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I said except that act passed by the territorial legislature, which simply taxes the interest. There is no system of licensing that I know of.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Well, that simply shows how little attention the very amiable and very admirable chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has given to this bill, because a very complete system of licenses in the fisheries of Alaska exists, and has existed since the passage of the act of 1906, approved on June 26 of that year. There is not a single new feature in this bill but those features which give a monopoly to these fishing corporations. They are all covered by the present laws; and, judging from the appearance of the document itself, the only purpose of passing the bill now before the House is to enable locators to locate these trap sites and to acquire a title thereto.

Now, I call the especial attention of the House to this act of 1906, in view of the statement I have made.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman read what license fees are provided for under that act of 1906?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is a tax on canneries.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I read:

Shall, in lieu of all other license fees and taxes therefor and thereon, pay license taxes on their said business and output as follows: Canned salmon, 4 cents per case; pickled salmon, 10 cents per barrel—

And so on.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That does not cover a license on pound nets and fishing nets?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is true. The bill before the House does attempt in some minor degree to remove the burden from the big canneries and put it on the little ones, and on the Alaska fishermen.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have taxed them more largely than ever before.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You have added only a few items; but otherwise the bill is substantially the same as the law now is. The only new features are those which attempt to give these big cannery corporations the right to take over the Alaska fisheries.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman answer right there, Is there anything now to prevent those big fisheries from taking over the little ones?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, very much; but there ought to be more. There is no method now by which the big interests or any other interests can secure title to the fisheries of Alaska. They are now free. But when this bill passes and these trust corporations can get to the department with their maps, which are already prepared——

Mr. HARDY. The condition is simply this, that the waters being open, one pound net may be placed right on top of another, and all sorts of conflict and confusion may result. Is not that it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; that is not correct.

Mr. HARDY. When one locates a pound net some one else can locate right on top of it, can he not?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDY. Why not?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Because of the law of possession. There now is no conflict among these people. Indeed, there is so little conflict among them that that sort of litigation would not keep one lawyer alive.

Mr. HARDY. I wanted to get a clear understanding of the matter. I have tried to get that all through this discussion on the bill.

As I understand it, when the public domain is open to the use of all the public, squatters go there. They conflict with one another and nobody has title. Possibly the law might protect the fenced possessions of a squatter, but it would not protect anything outside of his fence. Now, if a man has one of these pound nets set, the stakes driven, and the net out, nobody else could occupy the same place except as a trespasser; but anybody else can go right up to that net and close up the passageway to the fish, can he not?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Theoretically, yes; but as a matter of practical law, no. We settled all those questions in the West long ago. Our mining claims, town sites, and even our land claims on unsurveyed lands are of a similar type, and all such questions are now well understood and settled. The right of possession is as well respected there as any law on the statute books.

Mr. HARDY. Out on the ocean?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Out on the ocean or anywhere else. This is not on the ocean. This is on the tidelands, and when men go there and locate their traps and trap sites their rights are respected and secured by the action of the courts. So there is no question of that kind.

Mr. HARDY. Then this statute only puts into the form of law a custom already prevalent?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Very largely, that is true, and it gives them congressional approval and title to the property, which they can mortgage, pass from one to another, and keep for an unlimited number of years in monopoly of the people's food supply.

Mr. HARDY. Can they not do that anyhow?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. They could, unless Congress passed a law for the conservation and control of these fisheries.

Mr. HARDY. They can do it without any law?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is not anything in this bill which attempts to secure or does secure any conservation or protection of the fisheries of Alaska that is not already the law.

Mr. HARDY. Is there any law now which provides that these fish nets shall be located so far apart so as to leave open spaces?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Where is that law?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The law that gives the Secretary of Commerce the right to make rules and regulations having the force of law, and he can make rules and regulations at any time covering that. There are also statutory rules of that kind.

Mr. HARDY. You would rather leave it discretionary than to fix it by statute.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I will tell you what I prefer——

Mr. HARDY. This does fix it, and it is the only law that fixes it, is it not?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is not the only law that fixes it.

Mr. HARDY. The Secretary of Commerce has not fixed it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think he has. He has made rules and regulations covering many of these matters, and the statute covers more of them.

Mr. HARDY. Are they any different from this law?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. They are probably somewhat different.

Mr. HARDY. Are they any better?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; because they do not give a fixed and permanent title which can be monopolized. Now, the point I want to make again with respect to this bill is that there is not a single thing in it which looks to the protection of the fisheries of Alaska. There is not anything in it which stops the depletion of the fish in Alaska. There is not a single thing in it which prevents the great corporations from taking over these fisheries and boosting the price of the fish clear out of sight. By this bill you not only create a monopoly, but you give it the force of law and legalize a monopoly of the fisheries of Alaska, and in doing it you do not secure the people of this country and their food supply by preserving any control over the price which these monopolizing companies may charge. You make a contract with them which gives them the control of the price of the fish, and they are boosting that price from day to day to such an extent that the price of canned fish has gone up 25 per cent in the last year.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield right there? Was not section 7 intended to protect the fish by providing that there should be an end passageway of a certain width, and a lateral passageway of a certain width, and was not that intended to provide an escape for the fish, so that they could not all be destroyed?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have no idea what argument was made in favor of it, but it does not do that. These fish come every year to the parent stream, great hordes of them, fish weighing from 6 to 25 pounds, and some of them 75 pounds. They come to the mouths of these parent streams. They come out of the salt water, and they do not go into the fresh water on the same day. They get near the mouth of the stream, and they mill backward and forward near the mouth of that stream, maybe for a mile or more. Here are the traps on both sides, within the limits fixed by the rules of the Secretary of Commerce or by the law, and the fish mill backward and forward until they are substantially all caught in the traps. A passageway more or less will not prevent the arrangement of the traps, so the fish will be caught as they now are. There is now authority in the Secretary to make passageways by rules and regulations. Why does he not do it?

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like to have the gentleman state, is it a fact that the fish industry is being depleted and ruined in a sense by the methods that have been in vogue there for the last several years?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I said "yes" to that question, and I have here the report of Gov. Strong for the year 1916 in support of my answer.

Mr. HOUSTON. You say "yes" to that proposition?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to ask if there is anything in the bill now under consideration that will stop or prevent these methods that have been depleting or destroying this industry?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Not at all. The bill legalizes every destructive practice that now exists in reference to the destruction of the fish of Alaska.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform the committee what are the regulations or provisions of existing law which destroy the fisheries of Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; I will.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is what we would like to know.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You give over to these great corporations the right to fish as they want to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We are talking about the past.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; I know you are.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You assented very readily to what Judge HOUSTON stated, and I want to know what those provisions are.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I say that there is no difference in this bill and in the old law, with respect to protecting the fish; this bill only legalizes the effort to create a monopoly, and does not protect the fisheries.

Mr. HOUSTON. My question was as to the method being practiced by the fishermen.

Mr. HARDY. Without prohibition by law, and therefore there ought to be a law to stop it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is a law. Every provision in the bill now before the House for the protection of the fish is now covered by law, either by specific words of the statute itself or the rules and regulations by the Secretary of Commerce, or the authority to make new rules to cover it. So there is not a thing in the bill from top to bottom that looks to the protection of the fish of Alaska which is not already covered by law. It simply gives title and legalizes the monopoly to three great corporations if you pass this bill. In view of the high cost of living, gentlemen of the House ought to be careful in what they are doing with this bill.

I have here the report of the Department of Labor and the Bureau of Labor Statistics for 1914. On page 137 it gives the increased cost of the canned fish of Alaska. In 1890 the average price per dozen cans was $1.64. In 1900 it had increased to $1.77. In 1908 it had increased to $1.92. In 1914 it had increased to $2.32. It has increased 58 cents per dozen cans from 1890 to 1914. There are four dozen cans in a case, and four times 58 cents is $2.32 that the price of fish has increased per case in that time. It is still going up, and there is nothing in the bill before the House to prevent the monopoly which intends to take over these fisheries as soon as the bill is passed and to increase the price another 100 per cent.

If the House is in favor of giving a monopoly of the great food supply which belongs to the people of the United States to the corporations engaged in monopolizing the fisheries of Alaska—if you are willing to give it to them without any string upon the price they may charge your constituents, go to it and pass this bill. If you want to protect the fisheries of Alaska, if you want to save them from depletion and destruction, then give this matter some consideration. Get away from the sinister influence of the lobby that has surrounded this committee and every other committee having this bill in charge for the last eight years. I know them, because I have seen them here for eight years, and I have pointed them out to this committee, and if there is any doubt about it there is plenty of proof of it. I hope this House will refuse to pass this bill and will refer it back to the committee and let some fair bill for the conservation of the fisheries of Alaska be passed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman started a little while ago to read from the report of the governor of Alaska, but omitted to do so.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I did. I will do it now. On page 14 of the governor's report he takes up the subject of the fisheries of Alaska. He quotes the statement from the Bureau of Fisheries, in which it is stated:

> It is not uncommon to hear it stated by some persons that the fishing resources of Alaska are suffering so severely as a result of ruthless commercial exploitation that the day is close at hand when this valuable natural resource will almost cease to exist. Such opinion very often emanates from the tourist who passes through Alaska and may stop for a few hours at two or three salmon canneries in different regions, and, upon seeing the enormous numbers of fish that are being canned, at once forms the opinion that the waters are being fished to death. He fails to appreciate the tremendous numbers of salmon and other food fish which the waters are capable of yielding without suffering depletion.

The governor in his report then says:

> The sincerity of the bureau's attitude can not be questioned, neither can its scientific knowledge of fisheries, but the depletion of fish is a matter that is not strictly confined to scientific determination or incomplete observation. Certainly the question has a practical side and also an economic one. The statements of fishermen and some cannery operators, whose actual observations of fishery conditions in Alaska extend over a period of many years, as to the depletion of salmon challenge the bureau's point of view, and this view is also strengthened by the results of observation and experience of at least one of the fishery inspectors who has been stationed in Alaska for a number of years, and who has had first-hand opportunity for such observation. The opposite view to that of the Bureau of Fisheries may be summed up, as follows:
> Salmon fisheries in Alaska, especially those of the southeastern section, are being rapidly depleted, and probably a great deal more rapidly than the Bureau of Fisheries realizes. The few statistics available to the bureau can not show this growing scarcity of the salmon, and, in fact, may even be misleading to the extent of giving the impression of an increase. It is true that the statistics of the packs for a number of years past show, as a rule, an increase in the annual production of canned salmon, but as against this condition it must be borne in mind that there has been a substantial increase in the number of canneries, together with longer seasons of constant operation and an increased amount of fishing gear operating. There has also been an enormous increase in the number of traps, both in actual numbers and in varieties of positions, coupled with increased efficiency in traps as developed by years of experience in the observation of the courses of the fish and corresponding correction in positions and shapes of traps. An increased number of seines of large size and efficiency, both of design and skill in handling, is to be noted, as well as an increase in the number of gill nets, a greater variety of places in which they are used, longer hours of use of these nets daily, often 24 hours, with longer seasons in which to use them. There has also been an increase in miscellaneous kinds of gear and methods of obtaining salmon, such as hooking, dipping, fish wheels, etc.

He goes on at length to say there is great depletion of the fish in Alaska, and that unless immediate attention is given to it they will be destroyed beyond any effort of recovery.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the last report of the governor?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; for 1916. The gentleman can get it by applying to the Secretary of the Interior. I want to say to the House that Secretary Lane in his report has substantially quoted verbatim the words of the governor of Alaska upon this particular matter, and gives warning to Congress, as the governor does, that unless something substantial is done for the protection of the fisheries rather than the aggrandizement of the corporations the fisheries will soon be destroyed.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. The gentleman made a statement that the passage of this bill would assist three large fishing companies of Alaska.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain briefly how that will be done?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. I did explain that under this bill any person or corporation may locate trap sites; they may locate as many as they wish. The trap site is assignable or salable, and the monopolizing corporation may purchase from anyone who locates any number of them, and they are actually doing it; and that they now have hundreds of these trap sites already surveyed, the surveys made, many of them filed, and the rest of them ready to file just the minute this bill passes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman a legal question that may be involved here. There is no time limit set for these leases?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And there is no repealing clause, no right to amend, alter, or repeal the provisions in the bill?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; but I intend to offer one.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That will be entirely provided for.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. But it is not provided for in the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But it is in the committee amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the committee has reported a bill which would give these people such a right that if afterwards the Government of the United States should undertake to get control of those leases or that property, it could not do so without compensation in full for them.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I suppose if they mortgaged this property for 50 years, on a bond issue, you could not get rid of that mortgage within the 50 years without condemnation proceedings.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the Constitution of the United States you could not touch it, because it would be subject to the provision that you can not take property without just compensation.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is true.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice that this bill, I suppose after long hearings, was introduced August 18, shortly before we adjourned, and reported August 20, two days later.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; but it had been before the committee substantially before that time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know it had been before the committee for a long time, but it was introduced so late we could not study it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill had been under consideration for months, and I was authorized to introduce the substitute bill and report it back to the committee, and instructed to report it to the House.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. This bill has been under consideration for eight years.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The fact that a bill has been under consideration in a committee room, and is later amended to suit the mind of the committee having it in charge, does not tend to enlighten the entire membership of the House, nor could it until after it is reported.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It was reported on the 20th of August, and the gentleman has had from the 20th of August until now to inform himself.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman has alluded to a monopoly and to its ownership of traps. Are the same people who own the fish traps likewise interested in the canneries?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Generally that is true.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is there anything in the present law or the law now under consideration that prohibits people who catch fish from being at the same time the owners of canneries?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; not at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman says there is about a mile at the mouth of the river in which these fish are mainly caught.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, I do not limit it. They mill up and down in front of the river or the stream until they get used to the fresh water, and then they go up the river and spawn.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the distance between the pound nets?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There are rules and regulations providing that no barricades shall be put up in the streams; that a trap shall not be within 400 yards of the mouth of the stream; and provisions of that kind.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Those provisions, I understand the gentleman to say, are not effective in preventing the destruction of the fish?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; the fish are being destroyed because they are being overfished. There is no question but that the fisheries are being rapidly depleted.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I should say as a nonexpert that to put pound nets within 400 yards of each other will not preserve the fish you have in that country.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think we have some of them closer than that.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion in respect to the perpetuity of these rights?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. The committee has agreed on an amendment which, I think, corrects that objection:

All rights granted by this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or revocation by Congress.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. Now, what does that mean?

Mr. HARDY. Can the gentleman suggest anything that will mean anything more there along that line. If so, the committee will be obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not think anything more can be done along that line; but this bill is a proposition to give the fisheries over to certain great interests, and as long as they can prevent a change of the law they can retain hold of the property. They have prevented any change of the present fishery law for eight years to my certain knowledge, because I have been trying to get a change in the law to protect the fisheries for that length of time, but in vain, owing to their skill in preventing such legislation.

Mr. DILLON. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman a while ago referred to a lobby being interested in this bill. I would like to ask him if he appeared before the committee and presented his objections?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I did, and named the men.

Mr. DILLON. And the gentleman presented his objections to the bill?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I did.

Mr. HARDY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HARDY. I will ask permission that the gentleman will be allowed——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; I do not care to take further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for an hour and fifteen minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], a member of the committee.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I will not take that much time. I want to say in the study and discussion of this bill that I have felt very kindly toward the Delegate from Alaska. I believe, and still believe, that he is thoroughly conscientious in his efforts to present his ideas in opposition to this bill. Personally, as to lobbyists, I and this committee membership, so far as I know, have seen nothing of any lobby except interested persons coming before the committee, as they have a right to do, and stating their views and interests, for all parties have been granted a very full hearing. That they are interested is naturally to be expected of those who take a big interest in appearing before a committee. As I understand the present status there is probably no law—there may be rules of the department—under which there are any of the saving provisions of this law, as, for instance, the requirement that nets should not be placed closer than 600 feet apart at the ends of the net and 2,000 feet laterally. It seems to me that this bill has a great many good provisions, one of them being that nobody shall engage in food fishing without first obtaining a license. That enables the Government to know who it is that is engaged in that business up there. Now, as to the monopoly that may be procured under this law: There is nothing now to prevent any of these big companies from buying out any of the little enterprises. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us. The waters are open to everybody, but the independent man with a little capital finds himself in difficult waters when he is trying to compete with one of the big canneries and one of the big corporations, and there is nothing now, by law at least, to prevent monopolies from being created just as the Delegate fears. Now, as to taxation: The first objection the gentleman from Alaska made, we have put in a provision that nothing in the act shall affect the status or any vested rights of the Territory under any action at law that they have already filed and any pending suits. Then the committee has agreed, furthermore, to an amendment to this bill that has been——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. May I interrupt the gentleman? These suits, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, have been decided by the circuit court of appeals at San Francisco in favor of the Territory and the money is collected.

Mr. HARDY. I am glad to hear that. I believed that would be the case, and the committee was careful not to let this bill interfere with the rights of the Territory in pending litigation. We have tried to be equally careful with reference to the creation of a perpetuity by a committee amendment that is intended to be offered to the effect that nothing in this bill shall prevent the right of Congress at any future time to either repeal, alter, or amend or take away any right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is there any limitation in this bill upon how many pound nets one man can own?

Mr. HARDY. No; there is not; and, to be perfectly frank about it, I do not know just what limitation we would fix if we were trying to fix one. If we said one owner should only own 20 pound nets, I do not know whether it would prevent two owners from cooperating with each other and working together for the same cannery. I do not know how that would prevent, if there were 20 owners, each owning 20 pound nets, from agreeing to carry their output to one cannery and being practically dominated by one cannery. The future will develop the practices in this industry as it may be organized under this law; but this amendment that the committee agrees to incorporate is intended to clothe Congress with the future power to correct any evil practices or forbid or prohibit them. The trouble is it is a condition up there. Nothing now seems to be in the way of preventing an existing corporation from absolutely destroying the total fish supply.

Mr. EMERSON. If the gentleman will yield, how does this bill prevent that? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. HARDY. This bill contains a provision in section 7 intended to permit the escape of a great part of the fish, so that the supply should not be destroyed. It fixes spaces between the pound nets. There is now no law, so far as I know or from what the gentleman from Alaska says, that makes any such provision.

Mr. EMERSON. What I wanted to find out was, how does this bill prevent the Fishing Trust, if such there be in Alaska, from monopolizing things now just as they have in the past?

Mr. HARDY. It does not. It prevents them, however, from destroying the total fish supply by requiring their nets to be stationed far enough apart to leave an opportunity for fish to escape between them and go out to sea or up into the rivers. It also provides for a closed season. The truth was simply this—how to get at the question of big capital being stronger than little capital, and it is a question that we have not solved in any part of our legislative efforts yet. We leave the gate open for future legislation by Congress when it is needed, and so far as the gentleman saying it took eight years to pass this law, the bill the gentleman introduced was referred to another committee. Either committee had the right to report any measure, and the gentleman has not gotten his bill out of committee.

Whenever you get on one of these difficult measures you will find a thousand different viewpoints suggested, and it is difficult to get any measure of national importance brought to a focus and passed by Congress, and it may take time to do it. But if evils arise under this act, and they can be shown to result in the depletion of the fish supply or in monopolizing the market, holding up the prices to the consumer or cutting down the prices to the independent fishermen, I take it that the Congress will have the same opportunity to legislate in the future as it has in the past. And if it be at fault in moving too slowly, that is our fault, and not the fault of this law. We can not afford to say that anybody interested shall be heard. I would not want to say it if I could, because I believe it is the duty of every committee of this Congress and every Congress itself to hear every interested party on any legislation.

Now, there is a very material difference between some of the testimony taken before us and the opinion of the Delegate from Alaska. A great many, from my recollection, stated to us that the waters of Alaska are of immense extent, in which hundreds of spaces may be found not yet touched by any of the great corporations interested in the fisheries there. But this condition would arise, I think, naturally that a cannery being located and not being forbidden itself to be interested in fisheries or pound nets or other nets, that cannery would naturally locate all the pound nets and other nets around this location, and the independent fishermen might have to go farther away in order to establish profitable nets; and they might be inconvenienced as to the distance. They would have to carry their output to the cannery. I do not know any way of obviating it, but I do know that this is the first restrictive legislation, as far as I am aware, that helps to protect and preserve the fishing industry in Alaska. And while it may not be sufficient——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a question right there?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who determines the location of these nets of these particular owners? Who gives the right to select sites nearest to the canneries?

Mr. HARDY. Wherever there is a convenient location that would not yet be occupied anybody would have the right to go there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. On the shore line?

Mr. HARDY. On these fisheries, wherever they may be.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They are contiguous to the land, are they not?

Mr. HARDY. I understand so. Now, the point that is made where there is a difference is that some say there are a thousand miles of that kind of territory along the shore line.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My colleague recognizes the fact that some of those sites are nearer to the cannery and more conveniently located with reference to it than others?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has a great corporation the right to those locations?

Mr. HARDY. They have not the right until they file, and the first man that files has the superior right. There is no allotment, no law except in this bill authorizing the party doing certain things to hold the location.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The remarks of my colleague intimate that there might be a considerable advantage in the location, because he said the small men might have to go farther away from the canning establishment, farther up stream, where it is more difficult to transport.

Mr. HARDY. I apprehend the big fishermen have already located the sites that are close to their canneries. That is the suggestion that occurs to me. I may be wrong about it, but I do not think I am. Now, if the territory suitable for these fisheries is as restricted as the gentleman from Alaska seems to think it is, then monopoly may follow. In fact, it may not follow only, but it already exists; and for that reason, if we find that monopoly is being abused, this law authorizes the Congress later to amend, alter, or repeal it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose we pass this law, will it not give to these people vested rights there, and can we take those rights away from them hereafter, and would it not be better for the Government of the United States to maintain in its own hands the leasing of these fishing rights, so that it can control the right whenever it sees fit?

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman propounds a question which arose in my own mind. If we give a lease, it would have to be for a period of years. It would probably be with a provision for renewal. It could not be defeated until the end of a period of years. This does not give a period of years but gives a right revocable at will, and the difference between this bill and a leasing bill is the difference between a tenant at will and a tenant for a term.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Where is the provision that this is revocable at will?

Mr. HARDY. I have stated it two or three times when the gentleman was not present that the committee has agreed upon an amendment, which I read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY].

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussion, and particularly to that portion of the debate on the part of the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM]. As a member of the committee, I know that the committee in its entirety, and speaking for myself particularly, have in mind the same common result which the gentleman from Alaska has. The sole purpose of this bill is to effect in some systematic way an efficient regulation of the fisheries of Alaska in such a manner as to protect the industry and at the same time preserve it, and protect it not only for the present but for the future.

That is the sole purpose of the bill. That is the sole purpose of the committee. The bill has been criticized in many of its particulars. I realize that a concrete analysis of the bill can be better followed in discussion under the five-minute rule, and I shall not attempt to consider many of its details at this time for that reason, but some of its general features perhaps ought to be discussed now more fully than they have been as yet.

The bill came to the committee, which considered and reported it, as has been stated, I believe, with the indorsement and the recommendation of the Bureau of Fisheries and of the Department of Commerce, of which that bureau is a part. It has been stated that for some eight years past this subject has been under consideration in Congress from session to session, and I may say that during that period the Bureau of Fisheries and the Department of Commerce have been not only administering the fisheries in Alaska, but have been studying the fishing industry, and seeking to determine what would be proper to enact into law for the development of the industry and its preservation.

So they have come to the committee and to Congress with a bill in the light of their observation and study and experience during all these years, and in the light of their study of other bills which have been before other committees, because it is in evidence before our committee that a very exhaustive hearing on this subject was had a number of years ago, I think in 1912, before another committee in another body, and other committees have had these matters under consideration.

In the light of all this investigation, not only in committee but in the field, in the waters of Alaska, the Bureau of Fisheries and the Department of Commerce have indorsed this bill as a bill which would effect the purpose specified in its title. Agents and representatives of the bureau have been in Alaska from time to time for the purpose of inquiring into these matters specifically and accurately, and their representatives have been before the committee and have testified in a specific way in respect to all matters against which criticisms have been lodged. The committee also has had the benefit of the views of all other persons who sought to be heard before it, and it has welcomed the expressions of all who are interested in the matter.

Now, in order to understand what ought to be done for the benefit of the industry, it is perhaps best to touch upon the primary basis upon which the industry rests. I heard a question propounded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] by his colleague from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], but I did not get the colloquy which ensued. The impression that I got from the interrogatory seemed to indicate that it was in the mind of the party asking the question that the fishing was done in the streams. I presume that was explained in the reply, although, as I stated, I did not get it. Now, what is the situation?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman pardon me? I would like him to go into the reply to that question a little more at length. He is better informed on the subject than I.

Mr. HADLEY. The fish called Alaska salmon have peculiar habits. So far as I know all varieties, with one exception, are of the four-year class. They go to sea, remain there for four years, and return again to spawn and die. Where they go no one is able to ascertain. I understand we have no recorded knowledge on the subject, and why they return we do not know, except that, by some provision of nature, they come back to their native habitat to spawn and die and to deposit the eggs and secure the perpetuity of their own species. They seek the specific stream from which they went. Some go to one stream and some go to another. Some return to one part of Alaska and some to another.

There are three great divisions of Alaska as to fishing—southeastern, central, and western Alaska. There is a variety known as the "humpback fish," which returns every two years and spawns. The others return every four years. When they return from the open sea to Alaska——

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman how he knows that the same fish returns?

Mr. HADLEY. I will say to the gentleman that that question has now gone beyond debate. After a thorough investigation by scientists some years ago they have been able to trace the fish by the concentric rings upon the individual scales in such a way, I believe, as to put it beyond dispute.

Mr. DILLON. But would not that same specification apply to all fish of that class?

Mr. HADLEY. The statement is true as to all fish of various classes. I will say to the gentleman I do not think that there is any controversy here about that.

Mr. DILLON. I do not see how you can make the statement that it is the same fish unless you mark that fish.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not follow that discussion, because it is only incidental; it is an academic discussion, and one which would take too long to go into further than as I have stated.

Now, these fish, when they return from the open sea, skirt the shores of Alaska. They not only skirt the shores of Alaska, but they fill the waters for miles in front. I know how it is with respect to the habits of salmon on Puget Sound. The entire body of Puget Sound, during the time the schools of fish are running, is alive with fish—millions and millions of them. They are not merely in front of the river, to which they return, or the stream. They are caught wherever it is permissible by law to plant an appliance, and wherever it is practicable to place an appliance, so that it can be driven to catch them. You can take the fish wherever you can find them, and the waters are full of them during the period of time in which they are running. And so, while the most of these fish are taken immediately along near the shores of Alaska, so far as trap fishing is concerned, nevertheless there are other varieties of appliances which have not been referred to here which have a great deal to do with the merits of this bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Taking into consideration the habits of the saloon, it is possible, therefore, to deplete wholly the fish supply of a river, so far as salmon are concerned.

Mr. HADLEY. It is possible, and it is possible to maintain that supply beyond the possibility of depletion, in my opinion.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The observation of the gentleman is that below Puget Sound, down the coast, the salmon have practically disappeared, or at least below the Columbia River.

Mr. HADLEY. I am not so familiar with that as with the fishing on Puget Sound, but I know they have had difficulty in maintaining the supply.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. So that by establishing these nets at the mouths of well-known streams—that is, streams where the salmon come—it would be possible eventually, of course, to catch the whole fish supply, and that has happened along the Pacific coast.

Mr. HADLEY. If the mouth of the stream were so obstructed, and the want of regulation were such that the salmon had no opportunity to ascend the stream, necessarily it would follow that in due course that particular stream would be absolutely depleted. But that is not the case here, and that is what this bill seeks to avoid.

But I was saying, before coming to that, that there are several forms of appliances that have not been referred to, other than the pound net or fish trap. The fish trap or pound net takes only about 50 per cent of the fish taken in southeastern and central Alaska. The figures are set out in the committee report. In western Alaska the pound net takes only about 7 per cent of the fish which are taken. The balance in the several fishing sections are taken by purse seines, by gill nets, by stake nets, and set nets. There are three varieties or kinds of appliance to which no reference has been made which are taken care of in this bill along with the pound net. The stake net is a gill net placed upon stakes in the water. The set net is a gill net attached to a buoy or anchor, while the purse seine is operated by boats, and those who operate purse seines may take fish without limit wherever they may find them.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Is it not true that this bill provides that upon a trap site the trap-site owner shall have the exclusive right of fishing, and that under the penalty of the law none of these other appliances may come upon those grounds?

Mr. HADLEY. Exactly. The trap-site owner has the exclusive right, so long as his right is maintained. That is subject to certain conditions of maintaining and operating that location. But it is also true that other appliances operated by boat may follow and pursue the schools of fish wherever the operators find them, into the vicinity of the trap location, so that the schools of fish are often broken up and scattered throughout the waters, and driven hither and thither, with the result that the trap is unable to take the fish in any successful quantity. That does not always follow, of course, or the traps would go out of business; but under the development or application of motor power in the last few years the movable appliances for fishing have practically revolutionized the fishing business on Puget Sound and they will do it in Alaska, because whereas nearly all of our fish in Puget Sound were formerly caught under a similar act by fish traps, now the industry has been modified so far by the operation of fishing boats and the taking of fish by other appliances as greatly to reduce the catch of the fixed appliances.

The fixed appliance has the exclusive right in the spot where it is set, but it can only take such fish as come to it. The movable appliances may go wherever they will and secure the fish wherever they may be found; and, so far as purse seines and gill nets are concerned, operated by power, the result is that on Puget Sound it has become a serious question whether trap or pound net fishing, which was formerly so much in favor, will continue to remain in favor in the future. It is a serious question whether under these conditions the method of catching fish by pound nets will not be entirely abrogated in course of time or become so far impracticable as to be superseded entirely by the movable appliance. The experience on Puget Sound, however, has demonstrated that it is very desirable to maintain all forms of fishing appliances which we have, to diversify the forms so that if one fails we will have the benefit of another. Trap fishing is a matter of a good deal of uncertainty. It costs a good deal of money to set a pound net. It costs perhaps from $5,000 to $10,000 in Alaska fishing, according to the condition of the bottom and the state of the tide. There are many times when, after the trap is set and it is just ready with the web for taking fish, the trap is swept out and lost entirely for the season by the action of storms, because the piles must come from Puget Sound or somewhere down in the States, and must be driven. The trap is constructed annually. If the stakes or piles are not drawn at the close of the season, the tide and the action of the water take them out.

While speaking of this method of taking fish I want to allude to the subject of monopoly. I think the conclusion practically follows from what I have said that there is a physical and practical situation, based upon the condition of the waters and the habits of the fish, that effectually, without any legislation, so long as these forms of fishing are pursued, prevents any real monopoly of the fish in the waters; because, as I have said, these other forms of fishing, paralleling the catch of the fish trap, are now catching in western Alaska 93 per cent of the fish in Bristol Bay and the Bering Sea region and some 48 to 52 or 53 per cent of the fish caught in central Alaska and southeastern Alaska.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to have my colleague, if he will, point out in the bill any provision that tends to a monopoly of this fishing industry in Alaska, as claimed by the Delegate from Alaska. I would like to ask him if there is anything in this bill that repeals any part of the antitrust law?

Mr. HADLEY. There is nothing whatever touching the antitrust laws. They remain absolutely intact, as they are. This only deals generally with the fisheries subject, and there is nothing in the bill which amplifies or creates a possible monopoly beyond what exists to-day, and I do not believe that such a monopoly exists now.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is nothing in the bill to prevent one company or corporation from owning all the trap sites, is there?

Mr. HADLEY. Under the present law there is no limitation on what they may do and none under the new law.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. But we have the antitrust law now, and this would legalize the trust, would it not?

Mr. HADLEY. There is no trust, so far as I know, in Alaska. There are many independent concerns, irrespective of those that the gentleman from Alaska has named. Many of them were mentioned in the hearings, and there are many of which I have personal knowledge.

Now, let me say in respect to the limitation of the traps. In Washington, after an experience of many years, limitations which we had heretofore on the number of traps were removed. We abrogated them because the development of the classes of fishing was so prejudicial to the pound-net fishing that the reason for establishing the limitations did not longer exist.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is there any limitation in the bill or under existing law on the number of pound nets that can be set, not by the individual owner, but upon the whole number?

Mr. HADLEY. None at all, except in an indirect way, which I will state. There is a provision that there must be a lateral passageway of 2,400 feet and an end passageway of 600 feet between all the pound nets or traps. There is also a specific provision for the passageway between stake nets and pound nets.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But there is no limitation other than the physical arrangement?

Mr. HADLEY. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will yield to the gentleman from Washington 15 minutes more.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to ask if it would not be wise to lodge the power in some official agency to pass upon the number of pound nets that should be put out?

Mr. HADLEY. The only difficulty about that is that you would be passing upon something in the dark. We are advised at this time that the provisions of the bill will take care of the situation. We propose to limit the law by an amendment suggested by the gentleman. We were of the opinion that it was sufficiently limited before, but to set it absolutely at rest we propose to provide for the repeal of all existing rights.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman will appreciate that when you get the repeal of the law you will then have reached the destruction of the fish, at least I fear that.

Mr. HADLEY. Not necessarily. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss one other phase of the matter.

Mr. EMERSON. Before the gentleman leaves this point I would like to have him yield for a question.

Mr. HADLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EMERSON. I presume the representatives of these fishing interests in the waters of Alaska were before the committee.

Mr. HADLEY. There were some gentlemen representing those interests who appeared before the committee.

Mr. EMERSON. What did they have to say about it?

Mr. HADLEY. They were favorable to the provisions in the bill, although upon the subject of taxation there was a sharp difference as to what ought to be done. Some gentlemen representing the fishing interests in Alaska were not favorable to the scheme that we have adopted, but I have not time to go into the question of taxation.

Mr. EMERSON. What the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] says about the fishing interests in Alaska being for this bill is true, is it not?

Mr. HADLEY. I have no knowledge of any opposition from any source other than that stated by the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. I will.

Mr. KENT. I understand the gentleman to say that in putting restriction upon the nets the committee would be acting in the dark.

Mr. HADLEY. I said upon the question of fixing a specific number in the waters the committee would be acting in the dark.

Mr. KENT. Under the terms of the bill you specifically give vested rights in certain locations, and then the bill provides at the end that the rights may be terminated by the general repeal clause. That is the only thing that sheds any light upon that matter.

Mr. HADLEY. There are several provisions in the bill under which trap sites would be lost; the failure to fish for more than two years constitutes an abandonment, and they are lost. The reason for the limitation of two years is that the humpbacks do not run annually, so it is not required that they shall fish every year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. I will yield to the gentleman, and then I decline to be interrupted further.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has such a comprehensive view of the situation that I would like to ask him why in section 6, where the right to locate these nets is given to any person, who might be a Canadian—in view of the fact that we are in controversy now with Canada over the Alaskan fisheries, why should it not be limited to citizens of the United States?

Mr. HADLEY. My understanding is that it is restricted by another statute. If there is any doubt about it, it can be clarified before the bill is amended and passed. So far as I am concerned I am in accord with the gentleman's idea upon that matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman understands that if the permit were given to the Canadians, and that right passed to their heirs and successors, it would make a serious question in the course of time.

Mr. HADLEY. Quite true; and now, if gentlemen will refrain from interrupting me for the few moments I have left, I shall be glad to answer questions if I have time after I get through.

One word more about the trap sites. These passageways, which the committee in the framing of the law has provided for, are specifically intended to be in the interest of the conservation of the industry and of the perpetuity of the source of supply. With 2,400 feet laterally on either side of the pound-net location the fish have some opportunity for escape, and they do escape if they are not moved about too much by the movable appliances, and, if they are, that is not the fault of the pound net, to which criticism has been directed. Similar lateral and end ways have been provided as to all forms of appliances. I think if the committee will look into the matter under the five-minute rule in an analysis of the language of the bill they will find every substantial provision made for conservation and permitting the fish to get to the rivers. After the fish have passed all of these appliances, and it may be hundreds and hundreds of miles, they reach finally that place where they school around the mouth of rivers, to which reference was made a while ago. Just outside the mouth of the river they are there found in great quantities, and it was the opinion of the bureau and of the committee after consideration of its recommendations that there were not sufficient restrictions and limitations upon fishing in the rivers of Alaska or at the mouths of the rivers. Those limitations have been modified and other new ones have been made. The result is that the statement of the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] that outside of this method of giving a fixed pound net exclusive right for a limited time there is no arrangement looking to the conservation of the industry is an erroneous statement. Not only that, but there is provision in this bill for taking over the private hatcheries of Alaska. There have been five of these operated until recently, and I believe now only four. An arrangement is made for the taking over by the Government upon an appraisement, or, if they can not be purchased, then by condemnation under a system which may be better understood by reading the bill.

The Government itself has two hatcheries at the present time in Alaska. They are not adequate, and the Bureau of Fisheries feels that the administration of all these hatcheries should be under one authority, and that the administration would have better effect and better results would be obtained if these hatcheries were taken over. Under the present system they are maintained by private industry, and 40 cents is allowed for every thousand fry liberated each year, upon proof and certificate issued. When you come to analyze this bill and compare it with the old law in Alaska, you will find many provisions in the new bill looking to the preservation of the industry and to preventing its depletion which were not in the old law, and that is the only reason the bill is here. That is why the department has recommended it, and it has recommended it in the light of its own observation and experience, and it believes this adequately takes care of the situation. If we have not taken care of it, then it is the desire of the committee that the bill should be made such that it will take care of it; but we are of unanimous opinion that, until further developments under the bill, it will establish a system which will preserve the industry as it is and will permit of its growth and evolution and will also preserve and perpetuate it. In the State of Washington I can remember when there were not over 100,000 cases of fish packed on all of Puget Sound. In 1913 in the State of Washington we had an output of $15,000,000 in the fishing industry. We have maintained it unimpaired. I do not want it understood that that is the output for every year. There our chief fish is the sockeye, which runs mainly every four years, and in the intervening years our source of supply embraces smaller runs of sockeyes, and also those of a cheaper grade of fish. But we have maintained unimpaired the run of the fish and the scope of the industry, and we have maintained this identical system which is provided for in this bill for many years; that is, it is identical except so far as the bill has been reapplied or adapted to conditions in Alaska. It is substantially this same kind of a measure, so that we have not only the recommendation of the department here, but we have a bill based upon a successful administration in the State of Washington, and in many particulars in the State of Oregon, for many years.

Up until about 1905, I think it was, in the State of Washington we had what they now have in Alaska. We had an indifferent sort of an arrangement, so that no one felt that he had any security in his rights for any time, limited or unlimited, and there was confusion, there was litigation, and after the passage of various bills we finally evolved a code which provided substantially this method for the location of traps and other nets, and substantially this method of operation; and under that code, for 11 years, I think it is—at least, for a good many years—this industry has been preserved without any impairment whatever, as far as the people have been able to ascertain, because in the recurring years each year the source of supply is up to the standard of the corresponding previous year, whatever the year may be. Under the present situation in Alaska it seems to me that the proper thing for Congress to do is to adopt a measure that has the warrant of experience and the recommendation of scientific men and those familiar with the industry, and then test it upon that basis, and if it is not right make it right in the light of subsequent experience.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. Under the present system the fishing industry has developed in Alaska to such an extent as to make the depletion of the supply a serious question.

Mr. HADLEY. Yes; it is thought that legislation is necessary to prevent depletion.

Mr. REILLY. What more is necessary than to incorporate the provision you have in this bill, as to the location of pound nets?

Mr. HADLEY. The question of taking over the hatcheries, the question of the obstruction of streams, the question of fishways in the streams, which is also new, and no reference was made to that by the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM], and the question of keeping fishing away from the mouths of the streams for 1,500 feet—all these are matters of importance. Formerly the latter provision applied only to the redfish of Alaska, and to no other, and those redfish were mostly all caught in Bristol Bay and Bering Sea.

This bill is full of provisions for the conservation of fish that do not exist under existing law.

Mr. REILLY. If that is true, what occasion is there for giving the people who locate these pound nets the rights you give them under this bill——

Mr. HADLEY. Will the gentleman kindly restate that?

Mr. REILLY. What occasion is there for giving the men who locate these pound nets the rights you give them in this bill, inasmuch as they have located up to date more nets than they should locate in the best interests of the industry—that is, in the perpetuating of the industry?

Mr. HADLEY. In the first place, it is necessary to deal with the question of passageways. Under existing laws we have passageways of only 1,800 feet——

Mr. REILLY. That is true, but——

Mr. HADLEY. I am coming to the question. The man who locates any form of appliance—I do not care whether it is pound, stake, or set net, or any form of appliance—has no assurance for the future. Now, you could locate your pound net to-day. It is a question of possession under the common law—a possessory right. Under this law you are given a method whereby you can reestablish a location another year, or in the midst of a season, if the property shall have gone out under tide or storm, a surveyor may go and relocate it at the proper place. Litigation has been going on for years in Washington until we adopted this system. The courts were full of cases in every county where the fishing industry obtained until we adopted a method such as we have in this bill. In regard to the question of the right being transferable, why should not all property rights, whether unlimited or limited, whether for an unlimited or limited time, be alienable? Why should they not be transferable? We have nothing of that kind provided under the existing law, but why not put the industry simply upon the ordinary basis of ordinary business?

Mr. REILLY. Without that provision, is it not possible to put in all that is necessary, and more than necessary, to protect and perpetuate the industry? That is the principal objection the Delegate from Alaska has to this bill.

Mr. HADLEY. But the difficulty has been that there has not been heretofore sufficient provision made for conserving the sources of supply. Why, on the coast of Alaska—I suppose it must be 1,500 miles from Juneau, out in western Alaska; I do not know the exact distance——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BOWERS]. [Applause.]

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a step in the right direction, for the purpose of the protection, regulation, and conservation of the Alaskan fisheries. For 15 years past the Bureau of Fisheries has endeavored to secure proper legislation for Alaska. Invariably opposition has come from unexpected sources. The charge has been made that when the effort has been made by the Bureau of Fisheries that sinister motives were behind the conclusions of the bureau. I am here, Mr. Chairman, to refute that charge. I believe the men of the Bureau of Fisheries, the governmental officials, are better qualified to pass upon this subject than any other class of people in this country. The question of taxation arises. This is a small tax levied upon the cannery men for that purpose. Two-thirds of this money is expended in Alaska for Alaskan purposes. The other one-third is expended for the benefit of the hatcheries of Alaska. I am one of those who believe that the hatcheries in Alaska have been most beneficial; that they have been the means of conserving the great food supply in Alaska. When we take into consideration that $18,000,000 a year worth of food fishes of Alaska are the property of the United States, not of Alaska, I am not one of those who believe that Alaska should have control of those fisheries. These salmon come from the sea to spawn, and when they spawn they die—the male as well as the female. After a brief period—five or six months—the small salmon go back to sea. After a period of four years they come from the sea to the fresh waters of Alaska. Nature has provided that they should go to the Alaskan waters. The reason why belongs to Nature herself to answer. It is proper that these fish should have proper conservation and proper protection. This bill is right; this bill is not fostered nor brought in in the interest of any monopoly. There are 85 canneries in Alaska. Any man or corporation who sees fit to enter into the canning business in Alaska is given the privilege under this bill. The men who are members of these great corporations are not, as some people would have us believe, taking advantage of every condition. The immense sums of money invested in the fisheries of Alaska have only in recent years given much of a dividend as an output from the investment. The Alaska Packers' Association, which seems to have been the center of controversy here, is composed—I know some of the stockholders—of very good people. They are interested in Alaska; they are interested in the conservation of the fisheries. I do know of my own personal knowledge, in the neighborhood of Loring, a hatchery was built and this packers' association expended $120,000 long before this tax was in effect. Why was that done? To conserve and preserve the supply of salmon. If this bill passes, it places under governmental supervision the control of the fisheries of Alaska where they properly should be. I know of no reason why they should be elsewhere. I see no reason whatever advanced on the floor of this House why this should not be done. I favor this bill. I believe it is right, and I hope, gentlemen, it may be the pleasure of this body, irrespective of party, to pass the measure. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield back to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, there are one or two matters in connection with this bill to which I wish briefly to call the attention of the members of the committee. First, I will answer the question that was asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. He wished to know why we did not limit the authority to fish in the waters off Alaska to American citizens. I will say to the gentleman that we did not put that provision in the present bill for the simple reason that that is already provided for by existing law.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the gentleman answer the question, then, by saying where it can be found?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will give the gentleman the act. It is the act of June 14, 1906, and it reads as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any person not a citizen of the United States—

And so forth—

to catch or kill—

And so forth—

in the waters of Alaska.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I want to ask a question in regard to that. This bill provides that the heirs, lessees, and assigns, and all others who may come into these rights, may exercise them. How about a foreign mortgagor for closing under this provision? Would not he be an innocent third party and have a right?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman restate that?

Mr. KENT. The bill provides that all the rights here obtained either may be assigned, leased, or foreclosed by mortgage. Would not the third party come in there in the event of a foreigner having a mortgage?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Do you mean that he would get some rights by reason of having a mortgage?

Mr. KENT. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is a question of law that I will take up later.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states that there is an existing law?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes. It is the statute of June 14, 1906.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That law having been passed, then I would ask the gentleman whether this act, if enacted into law, would not supersede that act?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then that law would stand?

Mr. SAUNDERS. They are not in conflict. This law would supersede any law with which it was in conflict, but no one would construe the pending measure to give any right to a foreign citizen that was not given him under the act of 1906.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What objection would there be to amending section 6 so that it would read, "That any person being a citizen of the United States"?

Mr. SAUNDERS. So far as I am concerned, I do not know that there would be any objection to that. It would be a superfluity. There is no necessity for the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There happens to be a conflict now between West Rupert and Seattle. It is contended the Canadian fishermen are having undue advantage over American in some respects in regard to ports and the proximity of the fishing grounds. It may be in consequence of that controversy, unless we had existing permanent law, that this paragraph 6 would permit a Canadian, or a person not a citizen of the United States, to obtain the right to locate these nets.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Of course I am not familiar with the controversies to which the gentleman refers, but the act of 1906 is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person not a citizen of the United States, or who has declared the intention to become a citizen of the United States, and is not a bona fide resident therein, or for any company, corporation, or association—

And so forth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it is the opinion of the gentleman that that law would hold, notwithstanding the passage of this act?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I would think so. As I said a moment ago in respect to accepting the amendment, I do not know that there would be any objection to including it in this law. But it strikes me that it will be a superfluous addition.

In respect to the revenue raised by this measure, I desire to say to the committee that the direct needs of the Territory of Alaska are liberally provided for out of the same. This revenue is divided into two parts, of two-thirds and one-third each. Out of the two-thirds every dollar that will be raised under this law in a municipality, will be turned over to the municipality, for city purposes. The balance of the two-thirds will be turned over to the government of the Territory of Alaska. It is provided that the one-third shall be handled and disposed of by the Government for the purpose of maintaining the hatcheries in Alaska, and conserving the fishes in the waters adjacent to the Territory. So that all of this money will be expended for the direct and immediate interests and development of the Territory of Alaska, and upon the waters that are local to that particular Territory. I think no objection can be raised to the manner in which the funds that this bill proposes to raise will be expended and distributed. In respect to the suggestion that has been made that this bill will allow the development of some great corporation able to strangle and destroy the fishing business in Alaska, I wish to say that the gentlemen who raise this objection lose entire sight of the fact that no one can operate canneries in Alaska, or use their outfit for fishing in the waters of Alaska, without first obtaining therefor a license from the Secretary of Commerce. Those licenses expire on the 31st of December of every year.

Now, is it thinkable that any concern that is using its plant to destroy the fishing industry of Alaska, or in any manner prejudicial to the interests of Alaska, will have its license renewed, or if it is a member of an unlawful trust, or combination, will be able to secure an original license? This measure leaves the authority to issue a license in the hands of the Federal Government, and unless you believe that the Government, or that arm of it which will deal with this subject matter, is likely to abuse its discretion, there need be no occasion for apprehension.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Do you find any authority in this bill which would give the Secretary of Commerce the right to refuse a license to any person or corporation who has obtained one of these trap-site locations?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why, certainly.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Upon what authority?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will give you the reference. It is page 4. In the first place, as I said, the leases are annual. They expire on December 31 every year.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is also provided that he may renew that, too.

Mr. SAUNDERS. He may renew them. I admit that the Federal Government, through collusion, could build up a great monopoly that would be destructive of the very interests that we are seeking to conserve. I admit that. But you will find on page 2 that the leases shall not be issued by the Secretary of Commerce to any person not qualified by law.

Now I renew my inquiry, Is it thinkable that an applicant who is a member of some great trust under the ban of the law would be granted a license by the Secretary of Commerce? Or that anyone who has obtained a license, and in his operations under that license has abused the privileges that have been extended to him, and operated to the prejudice of the larger interests of Alaska by his oppressive and injurious methods, would be able to secure a renewal of that license?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is not the question. The question is, Has he any authority to refuse the license?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Of course he has.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Where is the authority?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is found in that language that I read. It says that "any person not disqualified by law." Do you imagine that a person who is a member of a trust forbidden by the laws of the United States would not be held by the Secretary of Commerce to be disqualified by law from receiving a license at the hands of that department?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Is it the gentleman's construction of section 2 that these licenses have to be granted annually?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET. Is not the correct construction of such an act—I am asking a purely legal question—that the license when granted can be thereafter retained indefinitely by the payment of the annual fee?

Mr. SAUNDERS. There must be a formal renewal of the license. I will answer the gentleman's question by asking one. Is it his idea that the renewal of a license would stand on a different footing from the application for the original license? If you think this, and if in the consideration of the act it is ascertained that such might be the case, the situation can be readily corrected by an amendment.

Mr. BENNET. That is what I was going to ask the gentleman. Would it not be safer to carry out the gentleman's idea—and he may be correct—to put in, after the word "issue," upon line 9, page 2, the word "annually," so that it will read, "shall be issued annually"?

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the amendment is necessary then, so far as I am concerned, I am agreeable to it. On page 6 the bill says, "All licenses shall expire on the 31st day of December of the calendar year for which issued," and I imagine that the license would be issued in such form as to conform to that requirement.

Mr. BENNET. I think the intent is clear, but I take it that the amendment I have suggested would make it definite and certain.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do think that the meaning of the bill is clear, definite, and certain.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. KENT. If these licenses are annual and granted from year to year, would there be a right constituted that would be worthy of mortgage and transfer to heirs and assigns. If it is only an annual license, what is to become of the posts and piles?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The bill requires an annual license. On considering this measure, the committee should have in mind an amendment already referred to, and unanimously reported. I imagine from the temper of this House that the Members will unanimously agree that this amendment shall be added to the bill. This amendment is as follows:

All rights granted by this act shall be subject to amendment, or alteration by Congress.

This amendment may be considered as practically already in the bill, as it will undoubtedly be agreed to, when offered.

Mr. KENT. Is it not the same kind of a provision that appears in our laws as to bridges over navigable streams, to the effect that the privilege of constructing and maintaining a bridge can at any time be altered or withdrawn or annulled? What advantage is there to the grantee under a license that would merely give him one year's right, when he has gone to the expense of driving piles and investing in all the expensive machinery necessary to get his fish? If that is but one year, why should he do it?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman from California seems to occupy a different attitude from that of some of the other critics of this bill. Would the gentleman advocate an amendment that would make it impossible for the Government to limit or abrogate these rights?

Mr. KENT. I am trying to stand for a measure that will permit the reasonable use of this property with due protection to the property, and I do not believe that you can get that reasonable use by an annual license for the conduct of an operation which involves expensive machinery for getting the fish. I take it that this is a perpetual right, barring that provision at the end, which is merely perfunctory, and is so generally considered.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will say to the gentleman that we often use this language in the State that I come from, in granting charters. It is anything but perfunctory. It gives to the legislature the absolute right to cancel or annul a charter without creating any claim for compensation.

Mr. KENT. Then, your idea is that every year the Congress or the department can come in and make new terms for a new lease?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly as to Congress. So far as that moral obligation of which you speak, is concerned, nothing that we can do, no language that we can use, can prevent a claim from being urged on that ground. But if the Government of the United States chooses to abrogate a lease under this act at any time, no legal claim can be urged for compensation.

Mr. KENT. If the lease expires, it must be renewed every year?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It will be necessary to renew the license. A firm, or individual, can not operate his fishing apparatus without a license. That license must be renewed every year.

Mr. KENT. It must be a new license every year?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It must be.

Mr. KENT. I would not like to see that in the bill if I am expected to vote for it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. On page 8 of the bill, beginning in line 6, there is a provision which reads as follows:

From and after the filing of the map in the case of a pound net, or from and after the posting of the number of the license as above provided in the case of a stake net or set net, the claimant of the fishing location shown on such map, or marked by such number, his heirs, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns, shall have the exclusive right to hold, occupy, and fish in such location, to renew the license therefor, and to mortgage, sell, lease, or transfer the same during the time that he or they in other respects shall comply with the law pertaining thereto.

Is that an exclusive right, to renew the license therefor every year?

Mr. SAUNDERS. For that particular grant?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I should say so.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Then how can the Secretary of Commerce take it away from him?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That means he shall have the exclusive right to make application.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, that is not what it says.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think that is what it means.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It says "renew."

Mr. SAUNDERS. He has the exclusive right to make a renewal. In other words, one of these locators could not come in and ask to have somebody else's location given to him, if the other party is seeking a renewal. The department can not entertain your application to the exclusion of my prior right to ask for a renewal.

Mr. KENT. Now, we find the gentleman is of the opinion that nobody else but the original locator can make application.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is precisely what I did say. When a man makes a location, he must go back year after year, to get a new license therefor, if he wishes to continue business at that particular place.

If he secures a renewal, why, he will continue to operate. An outsider can not come in, and make a successful application over his head, if the first locator is conforming to law. So far as these locations are concerned, the analogy is that of the mining laws. A man goes out, and locates——

Mr. KENT. But if a man leases a store for a year, and nobody else can lease that store, and he can renew the lease once a year, he has an indefinite license.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not a bit of it, because at the end of that year that same party must return and make application for a renewal. He can renew it so long as he conforms to law. But the Government can abrogate his rights by act at any time, if it deems that the public interests are suffering.

Mr. KENT. What happens next?

Mr. SAUNDERS. He can not get his renewal, that is all. He is wound up. That will be the end of him, and his attempt to establish a monopoly, or do some other thing harmful to the public interests.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from California, that Canada issues such licenses in timber and other matters controlled by the Government, all of which expire each year, the 1st of May. But the applicant has the sole right to have a renewal for another 12 months by complying with the law and by paying the annual tax——

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is this law.

Mr. FORDNEY. And by complying with other conditions. No other person has a right to make application so long as the first applicant fully complies with the law. That would be exactly the case here.

Mr. KENT. That constitutes practically a perpetual lease, on carrying out the conditions of the license.

Mr. FORDNEY. So long as you comply with the law, and make a lawful application.

Mr. KENT. Then there is never any opportunity for new terms.

Mr. FORDNEY. Not so long as the original applicant complies with the law.

Mr. KENT. Then that is a perpetual lease?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it is not a perpetual lease, because it expires every year, but there is a moral obligation——

Mr. SAUNDERS. How can a thing be perpetual, which is required to be renewed every year, and which may be abrogated by the Government at any time?

Mr. FORDNEY. There is a moral obligation to renew it, and nothing else.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, if any portion of the bill has been read, I will make a motion to strike out the last word, or the last two words, or the last three words, so that I may continue my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last three words, and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Responding further to the statement made by the gentleman from California, I will again ask how a thing can be said to have the quality of perpetuity, when by the very law under which a man secures his original license, he must return annually to secure permission for further operations?

Mr. KENT. Exactly the same as the 999-year leases in England, that were dependent on the presentation to the sovereign of two hams annually. The tenant had to go and present those hams to the sovereign at the end of the year, and by doing so he had a perpetual lease, exactly the same as here.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But in this case, in order to secure a permit for further operations, the applicant must conform to law, and that law may be changed at any time. Once the 999-year contract of lease was made, the lessor could not change it.

Mr. KENT. I should like to ask the gentleman one more question, and then I will let him go. Supposing the time should come when the Government believed that these lessees, concessionaires or whatever you call them, were catching too many fish. What is there in the bill that provides that the Government may cut down their catch of fish in the interest of preserving the fish?

Mr. SAUNDERS. There are two answers to that. In the first place the Government could refuse to grant a license and thereby prevent any fishing for the period of a year, thus giving the fish a chance. In the second place, even if it is conceded that the department could not refuse a license, that condition could not endure for more than a year, or the representations of the Department of Commerce could afford the appropriate legislation.

Mr. KENT. Would it not be a great deal better to leave some flexibility of tenure to start with?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why, no. It will be much better to allow Congress to deal with these conditions as they may arise. It is utterly impossible to forecast all the possible circumstances and conditions that may confront us hereafter. It will be much better to give the power to Congress to deal with the situation when the emergency arises than to undertake to anticipate conditions which the wit of man can not possibly forecast. This bill makes ample provision for the preservation of the public rights and interests.

The CHAIRMAN. The formal amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. License fees and taxes: That the licenses required by section 1 shall be issued by the Secretary of Commerce to any person not disqualified by law on application and the payment of the following annual fees:

For each canning, mild-curing, salting, smoking, fish-freezing, whaling, or other wholesale fish-dealing establishment, for each fish fertilizer and fish-oil works, and for each other fishery establishment, except retail markets, not herein specified, $5.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We are considering the bill by sections, and I suggest that the Clerk read the remainder of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

For each pound net, $50; for each fish wheel, $25 (except small wheels in the Yukon and Copper Rivers of the type heretofore used, $2); for each purse seine, $25; for each beam trawl or other trawl net, $10; for each gill net boat and equipment, $2; for each stake net, $2; for each set net, $1; for each drag, haul, or beach seine 500 feet or less in length, $3, and for each additional 500 feet in length or fraction thereof, $5; for any other kind of fishing appliance used in taking food fish or shellfish, each, $1.

Every person engaged in the business of canning salmon or other food fish or shellfish shall, by December 31 of each year, also pay a tax on the output for such year as follows, according to species: King, chinook, or spring salmon, and red, sockeye, or blueback salmon, 6 cents per case; coho, silver, or medium red salmon, and steelhead salmon or steelhead trout, 5 cents per case; chum or keta salmon, and humpback or pink salmon, 4 cents per case; all other food fish or shellfish, 4 cents per case.

Every person engaged in the business of curing or preserving fish, or manufacturing fishery products, except by canning, shall, by December 31 of each year, also pay a tax on the output for such year, as follows: Mild-cured salmon, $1 per tierce; pickled salmon, 20 cents per barrel; salt salmon in bulk, 5 cents per hundred pounds; salmon and trout frozen, iced, or otherwise preserved and not hereinbefore specified, $1 per ton, round weight; whale or fish oil, 10 cents per barrel; fertilizer or meal made from whales, fish, or aquatic products, other than kelp, 50 cents per ton; salt cod, 50 cents per ton; pickled herring, 10 cents per barrel; salt herring in bulk or otherwise, 25 cents per ton; all other prepared products not hereinbefore specified, 25 cents per ton.

The license fees and taxes imposed by this tax on such business, appliances, and output shall be in lieu of all other Federal or Territorial license fees and taxes therefor and thereon.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WICKERSHAM: On page 2, in line 15, strike out "$5" and insert "1 per cent upon the valuation of real and personal property, the assessment and levy to be made by the Territory of Alaska in the same manner as other property is taxed."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I desire to reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Under the provisions of this bill the sum of $5 is all of the real-property tax which is levied against a cold-storage plant or a cannery or whale-fishery plant in the Territory of Alaska. The last provision of this section, on page 4, is that—

The license fees and taxes imposed by this act on such business, appliances, and output shall be in lieu of all other Federal or Territorial license fees and taxes therefor and thereon.

Section 22 of the bill provides that the Territory of Alaska shall not impose any license fees or taxes upon any property, real or personal, used in said business of fishing in the Territory of Alaska. That is in line 20 of that page. So if this bill should pass, leaving only $5 tax against each of these great fishing plants or cold-storage plants in Alaska, our Territory will lose the difference between 1 per cent of the assessed value of the property and the sum of $5. I call attention of the House to the fact that there are $10,000,000 worth of shore property in the Territory of Alaska. The report of the committee shows that there are 148 plants in Alaska, and at $5 a plant they would only pay $740 upon $10,000,000 worth of shore real property. The people of the Territory have to pay 1 per cent, and I do not know of any rule in equity or justice which would justify this House in rebating the taxes of these big fishing plants. It is for the purpose of striking out $5 and having the real estate belonging to the big canneries in Alaska taxed exactly as other residents are taxed on real and personal property that I offer this amendment. The fair thing to do is to tax all alike.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman's amendment include real estate?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It includes all the property. There are $37,000,000 worth of fisheries property, and a 1 per cent tax would make $370,000 a year.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Section 2 of the bill reads as follows:

That the licenses required by section 1 shall be issued by the Secretary of Commerce to any person not disqualified by law on application and the payment of the following annual fees.

I would like to ask the gentleman who, in his opinion, is disqualified by law for a license?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Nobody but aliens. If the gentleman from Virginia is correct in saying that the alien law passed in 1906 applies, that would disqualify the alien, but nobody else is disqualified.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. KENT. Is there anything in the bill which puts it in the power of the Government to say to a concessionaire or a licensee that he shall not catch so many fish?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is not.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the gentleman's amendment proposes to levy a tax not only upon real estate, but the personal property. Do the residents of Alaska pay a tax upon real estate?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Outside of the incorporated towns they pay 1 per cent and within the municipality they may pay 3 per cent—2 per cent to the town and 1 per cent to the Territory.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make it clear that no real estate or personal tax is levied in Alaska now. The law authorizes such a tax to be levied, but the attorney general of Alaska discusses that matter in a letter to Judge HOUSTON, chairman of the Committee on the Territories, which you will find printed in the hearings, and has this to say:

One of the most serious problems confronting the Alaska Legislature was to devise a system of revenue. The organic act empowered both the laying of license taxes and a general property tax, the latter not to exceed 1 per cent upon the valuation. Owing to the vast area of Alaska, its scattered population, and the difficulty and expense of travel, it was decided by the legislature that a general property tax was for the present impracticable, it being estimated that the collection of such a tax would cost 60 per cent of the whole tax levied. We were familiar, however, with the system of license taxes in force under the acts of Congress for the past 17 years. The collection of such a tax, it was estimated, would not exceed 5 per cent of the taxes levied.

Hence, as I have stated, there is no real estate or personal property tax levied now in the Territory of Alaska for the reason stated by the attorney general of Alaska. The committee took that matter into consideration in framing the revenue features of this bill. We increased the tax on the fishery products and provided for a license tax on the appliances used in fishing, which does not exist under the present law. The license tax is small, but in addition we increased the tax on the output on the fish that are canned, so that we have largely increased the revenue of the Territory of Alaska under the revenue features of this bill. We had in mind that under existing conditions it is impracticable to levy a real estate or personal tax in the Territory of Alaska; and to avoid a dual system of taxation and a dual exercise of authority over this great industry in the Territory we retain in the Government the exclusive control over the fisheries of Alaska and to provide for ample revenue for the Territory of Alaska under the revenue features of this bill.

Here is the estimated amount of revenue which will be raised under the provisions of this bill:

License fees on plants: 85 canneries; 15 mild-curing plants; 17 salteries; 6 cold-storage plants; 2 whaling plants, oil, fertilizer; 2 herring plants, oil, fertilizer, fish; 2 by-product plants, oil, fertilizer, fish meal; 19 shore codfish stations; total, 148, at $5		$740
License fees on fishing apparatus:
284	pound nets, driven and floating, at $50	$14,200
281	purse seines, at $25	7,025
2,392	gill nets, at $2	4,784
62	haul seines (average 1,097 feet each), at $8	496
4,420	troll lines for salmon, at $1	4,420
3,613	hand lines for cod, at $1	3,613
1,920	trawl lines for halibut, at $1	1,920
12,972	Total	36,458

NOTE.—It is estimated that about 200 small wheels are used in the Yukon River for catching salmon for local consumption and for dog feed. These have not been included in above.

Tax on canned product:
88,251	cases king or spring salmon, at 6 cents per case	$5,295
1,932,312	cases red or sockeye salmon, at 6 cents per case	115,939
124,268	cases coho or silver salmon, at 5 cents per case	6,213
479,946	cases chum or keta salmon, at 4 cents per case	19,198
1,875,516	cases humpback or pink salmon, at 4 cents per case	75,021
	Total	221,666
Tax on products prepared otherwise than by canning:
2,781	tierces mild-cured salmon, at $1 per tierce	2,781
13,293	barrels pickled salmon, at 20 cents per barrel	2,659
360	tons frozen salmon, at $1 per ton	360
29,645	barrels whale oil, at 10 cents per barrel	2,965
1,495	tons whale fertilizer, at 50 cents per ton	748
8,956	barrels pickled herring, at 10 cents per barrel	896
3,934	barrels herring oil, at 10 cents per barrel	393
619	tons herring fertilizer, at 50 cents per ton	309
1,453	barrels by-products oil, at 10 cents per barrel	145
781	tons fertilizer and fish meal, at 50 cents per ton	390
7,097	tons salted cod, cod tongues, and stock fish, at 50 cents per ton	3,548
5	tons frozen trout, at $1 per ton	5
193	cases canned trout, at 4 cents per case	8
194	barrels pickled black cod, at 10 cents per barrel	19
23	tons frozen black cod, at 25 cents per ton	6
4,873	tons fresh halibut, at 25 cents per ton	1,218
2,794	tons frozen halibut, at 25 cents per ton	698
40	tons fletched halibut, at 25 cents per ton	10
	Total	17,158

RECAPITULATION.

License fees on plants	740
License fees on fishing apparatus	36,458
Tax on canned product	221,666
Tax on products prepared otherwise than by canning	17,158
Total	276,022

The taxes on canned products based on three years' average (1913, 1914, and 1915) are shown by the following table:

56,887	cases king or spring salmon, at 6 cents per case	$3,413
2,033,062	cases red or sockeye salmon, at 6 cents per case	121,983
119,037	cases coho or silver salmon, at 5 cents per case	5,951
478,261	cases chun or keta salmon, at 4 cents per case	19,130
1,411,482	cases humpback or pink salmon, at 4 cents per case	56,459

On this basis the tax on canned products would be $206,936 instead of $221,666, on the basis of the statistics for the calendar year 1915 shown above, hence the total revenue would be $14,730 less.

It is also well to keep in mind the hatchery rebates which are to continue until the Government takes over the privately owned hatcheries. Those rebates have amounted to about $25,000 annually.

Deducting the two items, $14,730 and $25,000, from the total estimated revenue of $276,022 leaves the total revenue under the bill $236,292.

The largest sum received under existing law, as I recall, by the Territory of Alaska was about $129,000. You will note that we divide this total fund into three parts, one-third to go to the Government to conserve the industry and administer the law, two-thirds to the Territory of Alaska, and so much of the two-thirds as originates within the incorporated limits of the towns to go to the towns for school and municipal purposes, the balance to go into the Alaska fund for the general purposes of the Territory of Alaska. For the reasons stated, and having in mind that the Territory does not levy any real estate or personal tax, we undertake in this bill to provide ample revenue from the industry which will be collected and turned over to the Territory of Alaska without cost to the Territory, without any cost to the Territory whatever for the administration of the law. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, under existing law taxes on real and personal property may be levied in Alaska for certain purposes?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Although they are not levied now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is true.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not true that under the provisions of this bill, in the event such taxes were levied, the real estate and personal property of these canning companies would be exempt from such taxation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If this bill becomes a law in its present form, a real or personal tax can not be levied against this industry, but the gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that they are being taxed under the provisions of this bill. They are not escaping taxation. This bill provides a larger tax on the industry than has ever been levied before, a larger tax than is levied under existing law, and because of the difficulty of levying and collecting the real estate and personal tax we took that into consideration and undertook to provide a reasonable tax on this industry.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understand it, these taxes are in effect a consumption tax and will be passed along to the consumer, and would not fall on this industry at all in any proper sense?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I suppose any form of taxation does that.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; there are forms of taxation that are not passed along to the consumer, and we of the Democratic Party have been boasting here somewhat at having made a strike at taxes upon consumption, and it seems to me a rather strange procedure that we should now be proposing a consumption tax in the very face of the position we assumed in passing the Underwood tariff law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the gentleman in favor of relieving this industry from any form of taxation?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I am not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman want to levy a real estate and personal tax?

Mr. BAILEY. I would not levy a personal tax.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Suppose you levied a real-estate tax, when the attorney general of Alaska says it is such a vast territory and the communities are so sparsely settled that it will take 60 per cent to collect it, would that be practicable or wise?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that these industries must occupy territory that has some value, and I would levy a tax upon that value. I certainly would not propose to tax the American people for this food product. We are facing to-day this high cost of living, and I figure it out that the consumer will pay something more than double the amount of the tax that you propose to levy against this industry.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Then it is the gentleman's opinion that if we should levy a real-estate and personal tax on the industry, the canneries of Alaska, in determining the price of their product, would not pass that tax on to the consumer?

Mr. BAILEY. A personal tax would be passed along to the consumer beyond doubt.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Would not the real-estate tax also?

Mr. BAILEY. No; the real-estate tax would not be.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Would they not count that a part of the cost?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, they could not. If it was a building, yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I suppose when they estimate what their product should be sold for to the consumer they take all the costs entering into the cost of production into consideration, whether real-estate taxes, personal taxes, or licenses.

Mr. BAILEY. Suppose it was an income tax?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alaska is not germane to the paragraph of the bill to which it is offered, and beyond that, that it should not be adopted for the reason that it changes the whole theory of the legislation and provides for a form of taxation which the Territorial officers say is not practicable under existing conditions. We reach it in another way. We tax the industry through a form of license and through a tax on the output of the several canneries and other fishery industries in Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; I will withdraw the point of order, and let the committee decide.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There seems to be an idea here that under the law there should be some real estate taxes levied there in connection with these canneries. Unless I am badly mistaken there are no land titles held in Alaska by any of these cannery companies, and there would be no land tax under any consideration, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The gentleman is very greatly mistaken about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield. What per cent of property is in the hands of the canneries?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Wherever a cannery in Alaska or one of these cold-storage plants is located they have obtained title under the soldiers' additional homestead scrip.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Even on land that has never been surveyed?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; upon unsurveyed land. It is a very small proportion of the whole, of course, but it amounts to a good deal, 160 acres around each cannery and cold-storage plant, and that they have obtained under that law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So there would be some real estate tax under this?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A very small per cent.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. A very small per cent, however, in proportion to the general area of Alaska, but very large in value.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alaska what soldiers' additional homestead scrip will take up unsurveyed land?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Any of them.

Mr. FORDNEY. It will not; I beg to differ with the gentleman on that. I have handled all kinds of it for many years, and it will not, my friend. It will not take unsurveyed land. Porterfield scrip and some land scrip will, but not soldiers' additional homestead scrip.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The gentleman has heard of the man who was in jail, I suppose?

Mr. FORDNEY. The Government administers the law, and the jail is in the hands of the Government and has been ever since the scrip was issued.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I know it is; but they make title to soldiers' additional homestead scrip in Alaska and get title.

Mr. FORDNEY. I beg to differ with the gentleman. It will take surveyed land not subject to entry.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alaska.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ALEXANDER) there were—ayes 35, noes 27.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. WICKERSHAM) reported that there were—ayes 47, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 6 to 11, strike out all after the word "year," in line 6, to the end of the sentence in line 11 and in place thereof add "of 10 cents per case for each case of fish so canned."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, under the bill it is provided that Chinook and certain salmon shall pay 6 cents per case; that Silver and other varieties shall pay 5 cents per case; Keta and other varieties, 4 cents per case; and other food fish or shellfish, 4 cents per case. Now, Mr. Chairman, the license charged upon canned salmon by the present law is 4 cents per case. It is proposed now to increase one of those varieties to 6 cents by this bill. The other varieties remain, one at 5 cents and the other two at 4 cents. The fact is that the variety which is increased is one of the varieties which has a lesser output and those which are decreased are those varieties which have the largest output, so that under the present bill, if it is passed as it is now drawn, there will be a lessening of the amount of taxes and not an increase. Now, with respect to this increase to 10 cents per case——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say the present tax was 4 cents per case?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is right, and the statement I made that it would be decreased is incorrect. It would be left just the same with respect to the large output, but in respect to the small output there would be an increase. Now, I propose to increase all of it flatly to 10 cents a case by this amendment. In 1890 the price of canned salmon, the average price per dozen cans, was $1.64. In 1900 it increased to $1.77. In 1908 it was increased to $1.92. In 1914 it was increased to $2.22. In other words, an increase of 58 cents per dozen cans. Now, in a case of salmon there are four dozen, or 48, cans, and since 1900 the price of canned salmon has increased $2.32 per four dozen cans. Now, I propose to increase the tax upon it to 10 cents instead of 4. A case of canned salmon at $2.20 per dozen cans would be $8.80, and 10 cents upon each case would be a little more than 1 per cent——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does the gentleman think there ought to be a flat rate rather than a graded rate according to the character of the fish? As I understand, the salmon that is taxed 6 cents is more valuable than that taxed at 5, and that taxed at 5 is more valuable than that taxed at 4?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It strikes me it ought to be a graded tax according to the value of the fish.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is no substantial difference in the value of the fish. There is in the market price of the fish, and I want to place a higher rate upon all of it, because none of these fish now pay more than one-half of 1 per cent on the actual value.

If it paid 8 cents it would be 1 per cent upon $8, or 8 per cent a salmon case. I believe it ought to be at least 1 per cent, and I therefore move to make it 10 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Alaska a question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. These fish belong, so far as they belong to anybody, to the Government of the United States, do they not? The opportunity of acquiring them belongs to the Government?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Well, I suppose they belong to the Government; yes. It is true the fisheries of every State of the Union belong to the State, but in the Territories they are held by the Government in trust for the future States, and that, of course, is the condition of the fisheries in Alaska.

Mr. MANN. In view of the statement of the gentleman that there has been such a decided increase in the selling price of these fish, does the gentleman think it would be proper for somebody to have some control over that matter?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; I do.

Mr. MANN. And in some way to limit the price at which these fish can be sold when canned?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; I think there ought to be such control.

Mr. MANN. Where we practically give the man the fish, and all he furnishes is the labor and the money, and a monopoly puts up the price of fish, ought we not to have some control over the question as to how much we poor devils will have to pay for them?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. In answer to that I want to say that the price is going up continually. It has gone up almost 25 per cent this year, and the little increase I have proposed in the tax rates still leaves the canners paying a very much less tax in proportion than anybody else in the Territory of Alaska upon the same identical kind of property. If the canned salmon is put in a store in the town of Fairbanks, where I live, and the assessor comes around, it is taxed 2 per cent on its true value, or four times as much as the canners now pay.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman realizes that, after all, an increase in the tax of the fish is paid by the people who consume the fish in the end, and that is us, not the people in Alaska. They do not live on the fish.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The people of Alaska do not pay taxes on the fish, except the canners pay the license tax to the Government.

Mr. MANN. The people of Alaska do not pay much of taxes, anyway. We pay the expenses of the taxes largely out of the Treasury. Now, you increase the tax and give it to the people of Alaska, and we have to pay the tax. What we want to do is to be able to buy our own fish, when they are packed, at a reasonable price.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Well, if the gentleman will suggest any means of securing that result I shall be very glad to give him assistance if I can.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. One way, I suppose, would be to prevent them being caught by a combination.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That is one way, of course, but it is not accomplished by this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Do you think you would reduce the price to the consumer by increasing the tax?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is not that the effect of your amendment to increase the tax on the canned salmon?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; but the Cannery Trust is increasing the price to-day, without any increase in the tax at all.

Mr. BORLAND. Why are they increasing the tax daily?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If I could answer that, Mr. Wilson would ask me to come down to the White House immediately, because the high cost of living is just now engaging his attention.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman believe there is a monopoly of those fisheries in Alaska that fixes the price?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes. I read you the indictment against them.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. What objection is there to an ad valorem rate instead of a specific one? Then, as the price goes up the tax would be larger.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, under the original bill which is printed at the beginning of the hearings we provided a tax of 4 cents a case on one class of salmon, 3 cents on another, and 3 cents on another class of salmon. Under the bill that is pending we have increased these taxes for the reason that I have stated.

Now, under the act passed by the Territorial legislature it is provided:

> In lieu of all other license fees and taxes therefor and thereupon, every person and corporation carrying on the business of canning * * * shall pay a license on the said business and output as follows:
> Canned salmon, 4 cents a case; pickled salmon, 10 cents a barrel; salt salmon, in bulk, 5 cents per 100 pounds—

And so forth. Now, we have increased the tax from 4 cents to 6 cents on the choicest variety, and we have undertaken to regulate the tax according to the quality of the salmon. They are classified and graded just like other commodities, and we placed a higher tax on the more desirable class of salmon, a class of salmon that brings the highest price on the market; and on the whole, I say, have very largely increased the revenue to the Territory of Alaska from this source.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HADLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HADLEY. To move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do this merely for the purpose of making this observation, which I think has not been made in relation to the amendment: The estimate was made and submitted to the committee as to what would be required in order to give back to the Territory of Alaska at least as much money as Alaska was receiving heretofore, and some more, and what was required by the department for the purpose of administration and the handling of the hatcheries and the conduct of the business. Those estimates were submitted to the committee, and on the basis of the estimates, after analyzing the amounts and apportioning them according to the framework of the bill, it was found that the rates provided here, namely, 6 cents, 4 cents, and 5 cents, were adequate for the purpose, and would give Alaska more money than we have heretofore been yielding to her, and still would retain and reserve to the Government a fund equal to one-third of the whole, which heretofore, as I understand, has been appropriated out of the general funds in the United States Treasury.

Under this arrangement the schedule as contained in the bill will pay back to Alaska more money than she has been receiving from the industry, and will make the industry self-sustaining as to itself, the Government heretofore having sustained it; and yet a change is proposed, without argument or reason, so far as I have heard, as to why the rate should be increased above 4, 5, and 6 cents, as provided by the bill. No tangible reason has been given why an additional tax of 4 cents a case should be imposed.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HADLEY. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not always a sound principle to tax cheaper commodities at a lower rate than commodities that sell for a higher value?

Mr. HADLEY. Yes. That arrangement has been made in the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. As I understand, the amendment of the gentleman from Alaska would tax them all at a flat rate of 10 cents a case.

Mr. HADLEY. I so understand.

Mr. BORLAND. And under the general rule, at that rate it would discourage the production of the cheaper grade of foodstuffs and confine it largely to the higher grade that could better afford to pay the higher tax. Is it not the gentleman's idea that the lower rate should be imposed instead of the higher rate for that reason?

Mr. HADLEY. I think it would handicap them less; at least, to that extent.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I am rather surprised at the argument presented here in regard to the cost, and the question has been asked, "Why have they advanced the price of fish?" That is the easiest question to answer I have heard in years.

It is simply because they could get the price, owing to the high cost of food products which are sold in competition with fish. Increasing your tax to 10 cents instead of 6 cents per case will not add one iota to the price charged to the consumer. Those engaged in catching, canning, and marketing fish are going to get all they can for their products no matter what your tax is. They are going to sell their production, and competition in the market regulates the price. The only difference is if the tax is 10 cents it will be 5 cents less profit than if it is only 5 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENT: Page 3, line 25, after the word "ton," insert the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce or Congress may alter the terms of such licenses at the beginning of any annual period."

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, that is where I am taking the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] at his word. I would like to have that put in there in plain language, so that we shall know this is not a perpetual lease, and that the Secretary of Commerce or the Congress may amend or change the terms of annual leases without treading on the toes of any vested interest.

There may be necessity for our legislating as to the control of the price of the fish, or there may be necessity for legislation as to the cutting down of the number of fish caught in these traps. Such changes or restrictions are not provided for in this bill. Under this amendment those necessary requirements can have immediate attention, whereas I fear without such an amendment if Congress should try to pass proper restrictive legislation it would find itself blocked by the argument that it was treading on the toes of vested interests. In any event that power could not be applied by the Secretary of Commerce at a time when it might be urgently needed.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I will merely say, in response to the remarks submitted by the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT], that the main provision of the gentleman's amendment has been provided for. So much of the gentleman's amendment as gives Congress the right to change the terms of a lease, is already covered by the committee amendment heretofore cited.

But the rest of the gentleman's amendment, which proposes to give to the Secretary of Commerce the power indicated, is not, I suggest, good legislation. Does the committee think that it is wise for us, as a legislative body, to give to a single department of Government such a power with respect to these licenses, as the amendment of the gentleman from California proposes to afford, particularly when the Government, the source of authority, has reserved a power of repeal which it can exercise at any time? The attention of the gentleman is called to the fact that Congress sits every year, so that within every 12 months the opportunity will be afforded to rectify any possible mischief, or evil condition that may arise under the operation of this law in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman accept the amendment if the "Secretary of Commerce" is stricken from it?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, for when the Secretary of Commerce is stricken from the amendment, what is left will be in substance a mere repetition of another section of the bill.

Mr. KENT. I want to get recognition of the fact that at the beginning of every annual period this right shall exist.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Here it is——

Mr. KENT. You have got it at the end of the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Our proposed amendment provides as follows:

SEC. 28. Rights subject to revocation: All rights granted by this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or revocation by Congress.

Mr. KENT. I know, but if these privileges run along, and a lot of money is spent under this law, the licensees will come back and say, "You can not revoke our rights"; but if you put definite limitation in the body of the bill so that changes may be made at the beginning of the annual license period you will have something in the bill that will provide necessary power to regulate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Should we embody in this bill the language that I have just read, and I imagine there will hardly be any contention on this point, it is perfectly clear that at no time hereafter will the licensees under this measure enjoy any legal right of recovery against the Government in the event that their licenses are abrogated in the exercise of the manifest authority afforded by this language.

Mr. KENT. Does the gentleman believe that the bridge licenses which we grant, with the repealing clause in them, will ever by abrogated?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not know anything about the bridge licenses, but I am perfectly familiar with the interpretation that has been given to the language of this amendment, in my own State and elsewhere.

Mr. KENT. We reserve the right of amendment and repeal in the bridge bills, but that right is never exercised.

Mr. SAUNDERS. A licensee will not enjoy any right to recover for the abrogation of a license under this law, for the manifest reason that whatever rights he may take under his license will be subject to alteration, amendment, or revocation at the pleasure of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELSTON. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KENT: Page 3, line 25, after the word "ton," insert the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce or Congress may alter the terms of such licenses at the beginning of any annual period."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WICKERSHAM: Page 4, strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, my motion is to strike out the following words:

The license fees and taxes imposed by this act on such business, appliances, and output shall be in lieu of all other Federal or Territorial license fees and taxes therefor and thereon.

I move to strike out those words, because I am in favor of the Territory of Alaska levying a tax upon this property, and the power which she now has is a power which she gets through the act creating her legislature.

I also move to strike this out because it does not seem to be necessary, as it is already covered by section 22. I also move to strike it out because I do not think that any gentleman on the committee can tell exactly what it means, what its limits are, and what it undertakes to cover. I think it is a very dangerous piece of legislation and ought to be stricken out on general principles, because it is not necessary in the bill and adds to its confusion.

Mr. MANN. I do not think I can quite agree with the gentleman from Alaska, but I would like to make an inquiry. It says:

The license fees and taxes imposed by this act on such business, appliances, and output shall be in lieu of all other Federal or territorial license fees and taxes therefor and thereon.

That is, covering the business. Would that cover the corporation tax? Is it the intention to exclude by special legislation the corporation tax? I do not think it is very important, possibly, except as a precedent. It seems to me it is not advisable to commence legislation to exclude certain corporations from the provisions of the corporation tax; and unless that was expressly intended by the committee, it seems to me, we ought to have language which would exclude the corporation tax.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It was not the intention of the committee to exclude any corporation tax or income tax. The purpose was that the licenses and taxes provided for in this bill should be in lieu of other taxes levied under existing law.

Mr. MANN. Ordinary taxes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is what I suppose; but as it is worded I think it would be in lieu of the corporation tax. We passed a provision which we called a corporation tax on all corporations; and if we impose now certain personal taxes or excise taxes upon the property and business of these corporations in lieu of the ordinary taxes, it seems to me, we ought to exclude from the exclusion the corporation tax and to maintain the same practice as to other corporations.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In the light of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, and in view of the fact that section 22 provides—

That from and after the passage of this act the Territory of Alaska shall not pass any law that has the effect of repealing, altering, or amending this act, nor shall the Territory of Alaska impose any license fees or taxes upon the business hereinbefore referred to, nor upon the output thereof, nor upon any property, real or personal, used in said business in said Territory—

It is well enough to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it is now in order, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized on his motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would not this also be in lieu of an income tax?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have stricken it out.

Mr. MANN. There is no income tax on corporations.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But does the gentleman assume that nobody except these three corporations will get a license up there?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is right as to individuals.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The bill on the first page says—

That it shall be unlawful for "any person" to engage in the business—

And so forth.

Apparently the assumption of the gentleman from Illinois is that only corporations will engage in this business, and that would seem to bear out the suggestion of the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] that only these three corporations are going to have a chance. If so, we ought to strike out of the language which I have read the words "any person" and insert the words "any corporation."

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will understand that we accepted the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I should think the gentleman from Missouri would accept it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 10, after the word "to," strike out the words "any person" and insert the words "citizens of the United States only."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I realize that one or two members of the committee have indicated that existing law governs this point, but this bill is a comprehensive measure which undertakes to reorganize the entire Alaska fishery business, and it seems to me it could do no harm at this time to limit the issuance of licenses to citizens of the United States.

One of the difficulties confronting those who try to understand the Alaska fishery problem is the matter of the Canadian fisheries and other rights in contrast to those of the United States, Alaska being nearer to Canada than it is to the United States. There are certain preferences in the matter of ports. Prince Rupert has been mentioned once or twice as being the point in Canada at which a great many fish are received for shipment to the United States.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Has the gentleman made an investigation as to whether his amendment would interfere with the treaty rights between us and other countries?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; but I assume that we have the right to legislate for citizens of the United States, and that no treaty would interfere with that right in this respect.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think the law referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] a while ago, the law of 1906, has a saving clause in it in reference to the rights under treaties.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am frank to say that I have not looked up that law.

Mr. MANN. The law forbids anybody but a citizen of the United States fishing in Alaskan waters, but I think it has a saving clause which says that the act shall not interfere with any treaty rights.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is no reason why this amendment should not be passed. There is a controversy between the Canadian and American fishermen with respect to Alaskan waters, and the port of Prince Rupert enters into it very strongly to the prejudice of American ports south of the Canadian line. My point is that we ought not to throw this business into the hands of Canadians and that we ought to remove from the Secretary of Commerce the temptation to grant a privilege or a license to Canadians as he might do under the terms of this bill, which refers only to "any person" or to any corporation, perhaps, made up of a majority of Canadian stockholders. I am aware that the bill defines a person as "any person, firm, partnership, corporation, association, or society," and that we are covered to that extent in referring to "any person," but I still contend that having left open the question of citizenship, it ought to be covered by the passage of some such amendment as I have offered.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman's amendment proposes to strike out the words in line 10——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It proposes to strike out the words "any person" and insert "citizens of the United States only," not disqualified by law, and so forth.

Mr. SAUNDERS. When this matter was up in an informal way a few minutes ago, I said that I did not think that it was necessary to amend the measure in the manner indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am confirmed in that opinion after further study of the bill, and I will give the gentleman the reason why I hold this view. The gentleman will observe by looking to the bill that it does not undertake to say who shall be qualified to make application for licenses. It simply provides that a license shall be required before business is done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not the purpose of the committee to give authority to the Secretary of Commerce to issue licenses to nobody but citizens of the United States?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Of course. I was pointing out that this act does not undertake to say in its own terms who shall be in a position to apply for a license. It merely says that a license shall be necessary. Then looking to section 2 it will be seen that it provides that licenses shall be issued by the Secretary of Commerce to any person not disqualified by law. Looking to the act which I have cited, we find the people who may be admitted to pursue these fisheries. If anyone is not in the class covered by the act of 1906, it is perfectly clear that he would not be qualified by law to make application for a license.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But there might be other disqualifications not comprehended by that act.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BENNET: Page 2, line 10, after the word "person," insert the words "a citizen of the United States."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from the western part of Virginia may be, and probably is, entirely correct in his construction of the act of 1906 in connection with this act. As I understood him earlier in the afternoon, it was his statement and contention that, taking the two acts together, a person not a citizen of the United States could not get a license. But there is, on page 25 of this bill, a repealing clause, one of those necessary but dangerous repealing clauses, which repeals all acts or parts of acts of Congress or the Territorial Legislature of Alaska inconsistent with the provisions of this act. Nobody can tell here this afternoon but that five or six years from now this matter may be of vital importance and may even raise an international question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I call the gentleman's attention to section 27, which provides that certain provisions of this act shall not apply to Indians, Aleuts, and Eskimos. Possibly there may be some Eskimos who are citizens of the United States, but I doubt it.

Mr. BENNET. They might be British subjects.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This specifically provides that Eskimos may be given licenses, so that the gentleman's amendment is necessary.

Mr. BENNET. That is an additional reason, it seems to me, and I thank the gentleman from Ohio for the suggestion. Let me call this fact to the attention of the chairman and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. Those gentlemen, both able lawyers, take the position which I think the entire House takes, that these very valuable licenses ought not to be given to anyone except citizens of the United States. Why rest upon a construction as to which there may be even a doubt? One of the slogans of the day is "safety first." It does not do a particle of harm to put in the language I have suggested in line 10. No one contends that anything else ought to be done. Why not, as careful legislators, do what we would do if we were lawyers practicing in our offices—as many of us will be after the 4th of March? Why not make this thing certain, so far as anything can be made definitely and humanly certain, and restrict these valuable rights to citizens of the United States? I prefer the form I have offered it in to the form offered by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], as it seems to me to read better, but it is a mere matter of taste. I hope the gentleman's amendment or my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in discussing the amendments in reference to citizenship I want to get a little information about the salmon business in Alaska, if I may. I would like to know from some one how many nets or other appliances there are for catching fish or salmon up there now. Does any one know?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not quite get the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. MANN. How many different traps or nets or seines with which you catch the fish are up there now being operated?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They are in my report upon the bill. There are 284 pound nets, 281 purse seines, 2,392 gill nets, 62 haul seines, 4,420 trawl lines for salmon, 3,613 hand lines for cod, and 1,920 trawl lines for halibut.

Mr. MANN. How many of these are owned by corporations?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I can give the gentleman that information in a minute.

Mr. MANN. Or by individuals. Of course, I do not want to take up too much time of the House, but while my friend is looking that up I would like to know something about the habits of these salmon, from some one who knows. It is said that they all return to the stream from which they came as small fry. I believe that is the accepted view of the scientists. Whether that be so or not I do not know and do not care. Then, when you have fish hatcheries up there, what do you do—distribute the fry in the different streams and have the little ones look around at the other minnows in these different streams to get their bearings and then afterwards come back to that stream, not where they were born but from which they enter the sea? Is that correct?

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HADLEY. I was waiting to defer to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BOWERS], who has been a United States Fish Commissioner.

Mr. MANN. Oh, a United States Fish Commissioner has a thousand things to do besides knowing about the habits of salmon. I think he is the only man in the House who knows anything about this, though I hope not, but I do not think that the rest of us are yet qualified to legislate upon this subject.

Mr. HADLEY. There are two Government fish hatcheries there at present, one in eastern Alaska and one in central Alaska, and there are four private hatcheries, and they are placed according to custom in the streams.

Mr. MANN. What is done with the fry after it is hatched?

Mr. HADLEY. They impound the fry and hold them and bring them up until they reach a point when they are thought to be ready to go to sea and take care of themselves.

Mr. MANN. From where do they go to sea?

Mr. HADLEY. From the streams in which they are hatched—their natural habitat.

Mr. MANN. They have up there only five or six hatcheries, and how many streams are there to which salmon come back?

Mr. HADLEY. There are a great many more streams. I am not able to say how many there are which are susceptible of salmon breeding.

Mr. MANN. Of what value is it under the gentleman's statement for the Government to maintain a fish hatchery on a stream and produce salmon which go out of that stream and which come back to that stream, when you know one person or one corporation controls all of the fish that get back to the stream?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit an interruption at this point, I can give him the information that he asked for a moment ago.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Warren was the witness before the committee and in his statement he said:

> In connection with the monopoly question, I would like to call your attention to the fact that there were in operation in 1915, according to the statistics of the Pacific Fisherman, from which the judge quoted, 86 canneries, of which the Alaska Packers' Association operated 14; the Northwestern Fisheries Co., 11; the Pacific-American Fisheries, 3; the Alaska-Pacific Fisheries Co., 3; North Alaska Salmon Co., 4; Columbia River Packers' Association, 2; Libby, McNeil & Libby, 3; and Deep Sea Salmon Co., 2. All the balance of them are operated by independent concerns. In other words, less than half of the canneries existing in Alaska are operated by concerns owning more than one cannery, and of those owning more than one, the ones which the judge classified as monopolies, the Alaska Packers' Association owns 14; the Northwestern Fisheries Co., 11; and Libby, McNeil & Libby, 3, a total of 28 out of 86 owned by what he terms a monopoly.

Mr. MANN. I suppose all of the canneries are operated by corporations, and that would be natural. What I ask is how many of these different appliances used for catching fish are owned by the corporations? I take it that the man who goes out and catches fish on his own hook—I will not say that, though I started to say line, but I understand they do not catch them on hook or line——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, yes; they do.

Mr. MANN. I take it that he does not can the salmon that he catches, but turns his catch over to a canning company—must necessarily do so. I really want to know something about this thing, for it may come up in the future while I am here. Why should we maintain the fish hatcheries if that is the case, when all of the fish that are hatched in a stream at a fish hatchery go out of that stream and come back to that stream eventually where there is a monopoly of the stream?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, I will give him my observation.

Mr. MANN. I want information, not observation.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Sometimes they are the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield the floor to the gentleman to do just as he likes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time and facilitate business I will accept the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let the substitute be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will again be reported, without objection.

There was no objection.

The substitute was again reported.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take up briefly the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LONGWORTH] that section 27 of the bill, makes it necessary, or at least affords some reason why this amendment should be adopted. The attention of the committee is called to the fact that this section applies only to natives of Alaska, and provides certain exceptions in favor of those natives. There is no possibility that the interpretation suggested by the gentlemen from Ohio could be given to this section. With respect to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] I understand that he wishes to insert the words "citizens of the United States."

Mr. BENNET. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Permit me to again call attention to the fact that the act of June, 1906, expressly says that it shall be unlawful for any person not a citizen of the United States. This is the language that the gentleman desires to insert in our bill.

Mr. BENNET. Because——

Mr. SAUNDERS. But the language that you offered in your substitute is precisely the language of the act of 1906.

Mr. BENNET. Because of the danger involved in the repealing clause.

Mr. MANN. That law, however, provides a saving clause, I think, in reference to treaties. Now if we should say nobody but a citizen of the United States should have the right, and we have a treaty giving rights to other people, it would be a violation of the treaty.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That suggestion affords another and a sufficient reason for the rejection of this amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Of course we have a perfect right to pass a statute——

Mr. SAUNDERS. Of course we have the authority to do so, but the question is whether there is any necessity for a change in the language of the section under consideration.

Mr. BENNET. It seems to me this House ought to limit it to citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ALEXANDER) there were—ayes 33, noes 36.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. BENNET) reported there were—ayes 34, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, page 2, line 9, after the word "issued," the word "annually."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "issued," insert the word "annually."

Mr. ALEXANDER. We will accept that.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I understand the committee has no objection to this amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Why do you not add the word "annually" again? Why not put it in twice? Why not make it twice in two years? Why not make it once in two periods of six months? Here is a bill which provides that nobody can fish without a license. Every license expires December 31 of the calendar year, and yet gentlemen insist that we put in the word "annually," and say "an annual" license is required. I do not think you can settle it by having it in once, you ought to put it in three times.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Why not put it semibiennially?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri in charge of the bill what provision there is in here about the renewal of licenses except on page 8?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I have asked for information. I move to strike out the last word, then. On page 8 I find, beginning with line 6:

From and after the filing of the map in the case of a pound net, or from and after the posting of the number of the license as above provided in the case of a stake net or set net, the claimant of the fishing location shown on such map, or marked by such number, his heirs, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns, shall have the exclusive right to hold, occupy, and fish in such location, to renew the license therefor, and to mortgage, sell, lease, or transfer the same during the time that he or they in other respects shall comply with the law pertaining thereto.

So when the annual term of the first license has expired the only person that can step up to the captain's desk and ask for another license is the corporation itself, its successors or assigns. The only renewal that can be made is by that corporation, its successors or assigns, which strikes me as rather clever on the face of it. I would like to have that interpreted. I want the correct interpretation. Then what becomes of the argument that we have heard here that every year this license expires and there will be a renewal by that person or corporation? Congress can not in a short session, the way business is done here, hope to amend these laws, and can not do it in a long session.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that this relates to a personal piscatorial privilege.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 3, strike out lines 3 to 6, inclusive.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this proposed amendment, of course, is to eliminate the license fees which are mentioned in the proposed lines, and I believe that this tax on canned goods should be eliminated, as it will result in a cheapening of these fish products.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWIFT. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the provision the gentleman seeks to have eliminated virtually a provision for a consumption tax?

Mr. SWIFT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that will be levied directly upon the consumers by adding that much to the retail price of the commodities?

Mr. SWIFT. That is what I am endeavoring to eliminate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not sure that I caught the amendment, but as I understand it it is to strike out all of line 3 down to and including line 25. The effect of the amendment would be, of course, to relieve these industries from all taxes whatever, except the license fees, which amount to about $1,140 a year. In other words, it would deprive the Government of any part of the revenue, and it would deprive the Government of the administration of the law and deprive the Territory of any revenue whatever. While it may be desirable to cheapen the price of food products, it is equally desirable, I think, to provide revenue for revenue purposes in the Territory of Alaska and to conserve the industry.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am in favor of the amendment presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWIFT]. As I understand it, Alaska is practically supported out of the National Treasury. Now, these taxes that are specified from line 3 to 25 are taxes upon the product itself, which eventually are paid by the consumer. Now, the prices for the necessities of life are certainly high enough, but the people that produce these necessary foodstuffs take advantage of every opportunity to increase the price and pass it on to the consumer. I feel that any tax that is levied upon the output of these canneries is finally paid by the people of the United States who consume the products of them. Nothing is gained by it. The people of this country support Alaska, provide for all the funds that are raised up there, and we are simply taxing ourselves by placing it upon the food necessities that we consume every day. I feel that if we intend to hold down the high cost of living, as I think we should, here is an opportunity to strike out any tax that is levied against these food products.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman realize that the highest tax in this bill is 6 cents a case and that there are 48 cans of salmon in a case?

Mr. EMERSON. I know; but what difference does that make? Every cent added in form of taxes is paid by the consumer finally.

Mr. BORLAND. That is all that is added to the price to the consumer.

Mr. EMERSON. We will pay it just the same. It may be small, but it is the principle that is involved that I am concerned about. That is what I object to in the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. EMERSON. Very well.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the grocery man in the gentleman's town pay a personal tax on his stock of goods and a license to do business in the town, and necessarily he adds that to the prices of the goods he sells?

Mr. EMERSON. That is true; but that is no argument against my proposition. The mere fact that an injustice is done in one instance does not justfy it in every instance.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, the bill levying a tax upon salmon at 4 cents a case was passed by Congress in 1899. There has been no increase in that tax from 1899 to this time, a period of almost 18 years. In 1899 the price of salmon per dozen cans was $1.52. It is now $2.22, according to the Government report, so that the price has increased 70 cents per dozen cans, or $2.80 per case since 1900, although there has been no increase in the tax. So that it demonstrates, to my satisfaction at least, that there is no connection between the small amount of tax that we want to put upon this industry and upon their output and the selling price of the product. They will make you pay just as much, whether you make them pay what the other property owners pay in tax or not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there a uniform price up there for the same grade or kind of salmon, regardless of by whom caught?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There is a general uniform price, and it is made by J. K. Armsby Co., of New York, in accordance with the recommendations of the Alaska Packers' Association, according to the testimony that has been had before the Committee on Fisheries in the Senate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So that there is a combination up there to fix the price of the commodity?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; and there always has been, and always will be, unless something is put into this bill to control them.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter in my hand from Mr. J. C. Strong, who lives in Ketchikan, Alaska, and who, I understand, is a very reputable citizen.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Is he not one of the cannery men?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, is he a villain for that reason? Is he not a good man? Is he not a good citizen?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would not like to commit myself on that question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Alaska made a speech in Ketchikan, in which he made this bill an issue in his contest for Congress. He said a vote for him would be a vote against this bill, and a vote against him would be a vote in favor of the bill. The gentleman was defeated, so that apparently this bill was thoroughly thrashed out in Alaska.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Does the gentleman not know that I carried the town of Ketchikan by a very large majority?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I did.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Here is what he says in another place. I do not know who Mr. Strong is.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As to the statement that the gentleman from Alaska made, I do not know whether it is going to go into the RECORD or not, but I wish to say that I know Mr. Strong. He is a reputable gentleman and does not have such interests as the gentleman from Alaska intimated.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In this letter he simply stated that—

From the reports of the United States Bureau of Fisheries and Pacific fisherman I find that in 1911 1-pound tall cans of Alaska reds sold at $6.33 per case, while pink salmon of the same pack sold at $3.94 per case. At no time since 1911 has any variety of Alaska salmon reached the market price of that year.

I have not investigated it thoroughly, but that is the statement made by Mr. Strong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWIFT].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SWIFT. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 34.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, it is now about 5 o'clock. It is evident that the consideration of this bill can not be finished to-day, and, of course, if it can not be finished to-day, the chances are that it can not pass the House during this session of Congress. Under the circumstances I have no disposition to prolong the session, although I regard this legislation as of the utmost importance, and its merits have been totally misrepresented on the floor.

I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17499) for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9856. An act granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association and to the Manufacturers' Railway Co. permission to transfer certain rights of easement for railway purposes heretofore granted by the United States to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, respectively; and

H. R. 10049. An act for the relief of Capt. Harvey H. Young.

UNIFORM SALES.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House. I am about to introduce a uniform sales act, and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in what I have to say the act prepared by the American Bar Association.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 14, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and plan and estimate of cost of improvement of Grays Harbor Bar, Wash. (H. Doc. No. 1729); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Chickasaway River, Miss., from its mouth to Shubuta (H. Doc. No. 1730); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 14, 1916.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, December 13, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McLean	Shields
Beckham	Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Catron	Husting	Norris	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Oliver	Sterling
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Thomas
Clapp	Jones	Page	Thompson
Clark	Kenyon	Penrose	Tillman
Colt	Kern	Phelan	Underwood
Culberson	Kirby	Pittman	Vardaman
Cummins	La Follette	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lane	Robinson	Walsh
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Watson
Fernald	Lodge	Sheppard	Weeks
Gore	McCumber	Sherman	Works

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] on account of illness.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I rise to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] are detained at their homes on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think that the objection which I raised to a portion of section 3 and a portion of section 28 can be met by the adoption of a simple amendment to the last paragraph of section 28, which will be offered by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and which he has submitted to the chairman of the committee, to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and to myself.

Therefore I ask leave to withdraw the amendment which I offered to section 28, on page 57, and which I understand is still pending. I will follow that by a motion to reconsider the two amendments which were adopted to section 3, and then the Senator from Georgia will submit the amendment which he has prepared.

Mr. HARDWICK. As I understand it, the Senator from Wisconsin has withdrawn his motion to strike out the paragraph beginning at line 23, page 57, and ending at line 3, page 58. A motion now to amend the text is, I believe, in order, and in behalf of the committee I offer a proposition to insert after the word "property," in line 25, the words "except in war or revolution."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Senator from Georgia will bear with the Chair. It is not in order until we have reconsidered the vote whereby it was adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. It has not been adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was not adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Wisconsin had moved it. He simply withdraws his motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That amendment was not adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. A motion to perfect the text is first in order, anyway, as a matter of parliamentary law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Have these amendments been agreed to?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Those are not affected by the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, but if the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is adopted, I will move to reconsider the amendments which were agreed to in section 3, because that is taken care of by another part of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the Senator from Georgia going to explain his amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; in just a moment. I have offered an amendment to come in after the word "property," in line 25, page 57, inserting the words "except in war or revolution," so that the paragraph as amended will read:

Any person who knowingly aids or assists any alien who advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property, except in war or revolution, to enter the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We accept that amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is almost self-explanatory. I will say this much in behalf of the committee and of the amendment which we think solves this question, that the committee, on mature reflection, were not willing to be put even in the temporary attitude of assenting to any proposition that might look as if we agreed to the importation into this country of people who advocated the doctrine of the general unlawful destruction of property. On the other hand, we quite understood the objection urged by the Senator from Wisconsin and his motive in urging it. We did not want the language so drawn that the people, for instance, to use the illustration that he aptly gave, who threw the tea into Boston Harbor might be barred out of this country under the language.

So we have offered to insert the words "except in war or revolution," where the destruction of property is not a propaganda but a mere instrument of a fight that is being made in a good cause. I think that meets the situation properly, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest to the Senator to also insert the word "insurrection."

Mr. HARDWICK. I think that does not change what I have in mind, and I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Revolution may not be a comprehensive term. I make that suggestion.

Mr. HARDWICK. As the Senator suggests, I will insert the word "insurrection" before the word "revolution." It is the same basic idea. It will then read "except in war, insurrection, or revolution." In other words, political affairs where the destruction of property is a mere instrument which men must apply to secure what they consider to be their rights and their liberty. That is what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The suggestion comes really from the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would like to hear it read.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, reprint of December 7, line 25, after the word "property," insert a comma and the words "except in war, insurrection, or revolution," so that it will read:

Any person who knowingly aids or assists any alien who advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property, except in war, insurrection, or revolution, to enter the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, of course the purpose of the Senator from Georgia is to solve this difficulty in some way, I suppose, so that the bill may progress. I am not one of those men who believe that revolution or insurrection is necessarily a virtue. I do not believe, either, that it would be wise for such men as Villa, for instance, to prey upon American life and American property three or four years and have the privilege extended to him by virtue of the character of his occupation to come in under legislation that the United States Senate is perfecting with so much care.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to get him over here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We could not do anything except to hold him on the border under a tent guarded by American soldiers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which, on my motion, the following words were stricken out of the bill, on page 5, lines 10 and 11:

Or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property.

And in lines 19 and 20:

Or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property.

I move to reconsider the vote by which those words were stricken out of section 3, on page 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the objections raised to those words are taken care of by the provision upon page 10, lines 6 and 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Out of order I desire to present a petition favorable to the immigration bill signed by Jesse Branch and several hundred other citizens. I ask that the petition, which is very short, may be printed in the RECORD without the names of the persons signing it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

HON. JAMES A. REED,
Senator for Missouri, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: As citizens of the United States, as well as of Missouri, we most earnestly appeal to you to support the immigration bill containing the "illiteracy test" and assist in having an early vote on same by the Senate. We are confident you have read the report and final recommendations of the Immigration Commission, especially that part in which they say, "We are receiving too many undesirables," and "that the 'illiteracy test' is the most feasible single method of stopping them." Surely you realize the need of this legislation.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate agreed to the committee amendment on page 49, line 16, with a view of afterwards moving to restore the language of the House bill. Permit me to state that the language in section 22 as passed by the other House is as follows:

That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him—

They shall be permitted to land, provided that they are not afflicted with contagious sickness. The Senate committee has recommended that the words "taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen" be stricken out, and that there be substituted instead the words "resided in the United States for seven consecutive years."

Section 37 of the present immigration act, now existing, gives the right to an alien resident of this country who shall have taken up his permanent residence here and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen. The language of the present law and the language adopted by the House has been stricken out by the Senate on the recommendation of the committee, and it now allows any alien resident of the United States for seven years to send for his wife and children. As the law now stands, and as the House recommended in this bill, I contend aliens from the Orient may not bring their wives to the mainland of the United States, and, as I yesterday pointed out, there has been a great abuse. Alien residents of the western coast have been importing women known as "picture brides," and though there is suspicion that in some cases these women are brought for immoral purposes, the department, however, states that they are mostly brought for the purpose of contracting marriage. The marriage that is contracted on the other side—the parties are separated by an ocean and merely exchange photographs—is no marriage at all. The marriage after they arrive here looks very much as though it were a subterfuge to avoid the law which now protects this country against oriental immigration and the increase here of oriental peoples.

We who are familiar with this subject believe that it is none the less an evil affecting the character of our population to bring these people here as to provide for or facilitate the birth of these people here. Indeed, when they are born upon the soil they do not lose their identity as orientals, and on maturity, whether they be men or women, in California and in Oregon and Washington they have the right to vote. So a very grave question affecting the interest not only of our race but of our institutions and of our democratic form of government is involved in the settlement of this question. Therefore I move the reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to, in order that the language of the bill as it came from the House may be restored, which is substantially the language of the present law.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the point to which the Senator from California directs the attention of the Senate was carefully gone into by the committee. The language which he cites provides:

That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen—

We have struck out those words for the reason that we did not care to encourage these birds of passage immediately upon landing to declare their intention to become citizens, when they were at perfect liberty immediately to go backward and forward as they saw fit; but we incorporated the words "resided in the United States for seven consecutive years." When one has resided here for that length of time, it is nearly conclusive proof that he intends to remain. The Senate committee, after due consideration, knowing that the House text absolutely meant nothing and did not aid us in the object that we sought to attain, but was rather a bar to it, recommended the amendment, and therefore reported to strike out the words "permanent residence," and to insert in lieu therefor the words "resided in the United States for seven consecutive years".

There is a large class that come and go. We were attempting to include those who really intended to stay in this country, and we wanted to put a reasonable limit upon residence here which would justify us in the belief that they intended to remain. Hence we fixed the term of residence at seven years.

I sincerely hope that the Senate will not reconsider the vote by which this amendment was agreed to, and open up and make easy the abuse of the privilege of aliens declaring their intention to become citizens of the United States, and immediately, on the making of that declaration, grant them all the privileges of this paragraph.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, has the Senator from South Carolina or has the committee any record that will show that the men to whom the Senator refers do apply for citizenship? From my observation I will state that I do not think the language as it has been written by the Senate committee will affect those people at all. I do not believe that the committee has any record to show that these so-called birds of passage do apply for citizenship while they are in this country or during the short time they stay here; and I agree perfectly with the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] that the language reported by the Senate committee should be stricken out and that the language of the House bill should be restored.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will permit me, the following is the text of the bill as it came from the House:

And thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, and said wife or any of said minor children shall be found to be infected with any contagious disorder—

And so forth.

If the language of the bill as it came from the House is restored, then any man coming here and declaring his intention to become a citizen, whether he does so actually intend or not, can bring his family here, whereas, under the terms of the bill as now framed, he must give some evidence of his intention to become a citizen before he shall be granted that privilege.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me again, the trouble with the argument of the Senator from South Carolina is that he bases it on a false foundation. The Senate committee is not in a position to show that among the so-called known birds of passage a single person, such as the Senator from South Carolina refers to, has ever applied for citizenship.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if a man of family comes here from abroad and, after a brief residence here, does qualify to remain, that naturalizes his family whether they are here or abroad?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; if he becomes a citizen.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But his wife becomes an American citizen ipso facto after he becomes one?

Mr. LODGE. This only covers the declaration of intention to become a citizen.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is correct, of course. After five years the alien becomes a citizen of the United States, but his wife ipso facto becomes a citizen also.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Suppose, however, he does not become naturalized but has stayed here seven years, then this privilege is proposed to be extended to him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If he is in suspense, then, of course, we should extend him this privilege.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Exactly; and that is the object of the amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, of course this is a general bill. What I said related more to the orientals, but it is of far greater importance to people who are not orientals and who are desirable citizens. The language inserted in the Senate bill by the committee requires residence in the United States for seven consecutive years before a desirable white immigrant can send for his wife and child. I can not conceive of a greater hardship imposed upon a man who legitimately comes here to reside. I am not speaking of "birds of passage," to use the language of the Senator from South Carolina. There is nothing that indicates we are dealing with birds of passage. The language of the House bill reads:

That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country—

His permanent residence in this country—and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen—

Then he may send for his wife and minor children. That is the language of the House bill which we desire to restore—taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen.

The Senate committee seeks to strike that out and to say that he must reside in the United States for seven years. Imagine the hardship on a man coming in good faith, a desirable immigrant—and we must welcome desirable immigrants—denied the privilege of sending for his wife and children for seven years. To what end and for what purpose? I will tell you. If this provision were written by an oriental attorney it could not have been written more dexterously to meet the oriental conditions, because it enables the oriental to send for his alleged wife—his "picture bride"—and it keeps out the family of the desirable immigrant for seven years. That is the only purpose of it. Under the House provision the oriental can not send for his "picture bride," because he is incapable of filing his declaration of intention to become a citizen, being barred by our naturalization laws—as to which there is no question or any disposition to change them.

So, if we restore the language of the House bill, we give to the legitimate immigrant coming in good faith to take up his permanent residence in this country the right to send for his wife after making a declaration of intention to become a citizen, but at the same time we bar the "picture brides."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, not especially addressing myself to the amendment now before the Senate, I want to express my gratification over the changes that have been made in the bill concerning matters which were in controversy last evening and in which I took a somewhat prominent part. I am glad that the committee has since then given very careful attention to the question of admitting into this country men who advocate lawlessness, including the destruction of property, and who have little regard for the laws of the United States. To my mind, if there is one peril that confronts this country greater than any other at the present time it is the lawlessness that abounds in certain sections, the disregard of our laws, the claimed right to destroy property if certain men see fit to do so, and to establish in our land a condition of anarchy that strikes at the very foundation of our institutions.

The chairman of the committee very kindly submitted to me a memorandum this morning which, upon examination, I think covers the contention that I made last evening and which makes the bill as it now stands adequate to protect the people of this country and the Government from those lawless men, some of them members of powerful organizations, who have little regard for the rights, the property, and the lives of our citizens if it suits their purpose to destroy either property or lives. We can not be too careful in our legislation on that point, as constitutional government and anarchy are utterly incompatible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment on page 49 was adopted.

Mr. PHELAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. He is not in the Chamber, and for that reason I withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote if he were present.

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I will withhold my vote. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when Mr. SHAFROTH's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] is detained by illness, and is therefore unable to appear in the Senate. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] by reason of illness, and to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair just announced to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay." While I am upon my feet I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are absent on account of illness.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with that Senator; but as he would vote the same way that I do, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I will ask whether the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. PENROSE. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CATRON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. As he seems to be absent, and I do not know how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Borah	Gore	Norris	Sterling
Brady	Gronna	Oliver	Townsend
Brandegee	Jones	Phelan	Wadsworth

So Mr. PHELAN's motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, on page 65, line 17, I offer an amendment which is only designed to effect the purpose of the section by correcting a date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "July 1, 1916," and insert "May 1, 1917."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, on page 49, line 17, after the word "wife," I move that the following words be inserted:

Provided the marriage with said wife was contracted before departure from the country from which said person emigrated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 17, after the word "wife," it is proposed to insert:

Provided the marriage with said wife was contracted before departure from the country from which said person emigrated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LODGE and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the former ballot, I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote. If he were present and I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], but I am released from its obligations respecting this question. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. He is absent from the Chamber. If the Senator from New York were present, he would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea." I regret that I can not get a transfer of my pair.

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. LEWIS's name was called). The senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], but as I am informed that he would vote the same way that I intend to vote I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote in favor of the measure, and I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when Mr. SHAFROTH's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). I wish to announce the absence from the city on business of my colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. If present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but has requested that Senator to vote on this question.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CATRON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. He being absent, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. POINDEXTER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], but I am informed that if present he would vote "yea." I have already voted "yea." Consequently, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on account of illness, and also the absence of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness. If the Senator from Montana were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I understood from him this morning that if he were present he would vote "nay." I will therefore allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 7, as follows:

YEAS—64.

Ashurst	Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Newlands	Smoot

Goff	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to explain my vote. I consider the bill so defective in its present form that I could not consistently vote for it, but I expect to vote for it when it comes out of the conference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House:

H. R. 9856. An act granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, and to the Manufacturers' Railway Co., permission to transfer certain rights of easement for railway purposes heretofore granted by the United States to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co., and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, respectively; and

H. R. 10049. An act for the relief of Capt. Harvey H. Young.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of Local Union No. 64, International Weavers' Union of America, of Kapowsin, Wash., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products and also for the enactment of legislation to protect the farmer by making it a felony to deal in futures in food products, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Presbytery, of Bellingham, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Seattle, Wash., praying for an investigation into the labor troubles at Everett, Wash., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of Capital City Branch, No. 86, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Hartford, Conn., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 7333) granting an increase of pension to William R. Stephens; and

A bill (S. 7334) granting an increase of pension to August Dippel (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANE:

A bill (S. 7335) granting an increase of pension to Melisa Hogan (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7336) granting an increase of pension to John Stone (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 7349) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 7350) to grant certain lands to the city of Pocatello, State of Idaho, for a municipal park and for the protection of its water supply; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) proposing an amendment to section 7, Article I of the Constitution of the United States, relative to the Executive veto of bills passed by Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for continuing the construction and enlargement of the irrigation and drainage system to make possible the utilization of the water supply for 40 acres of each Indian allotment on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., from $200,000 to $400,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 18543), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15096) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That to fill existing vacancies on the committees hereinafter named:

Senator HARDWICK, of Georgia, be appointed a member of the Committee on the Census;

Senator CHILTON, of West Virginia, be appointed a member of the Committee on Territories, and also a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce; and Senator KIRBY, of Arkansas, be appointed a member of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and also a member of the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.

THOMAS M. JONES.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 1788, the last bill on the calendar. It is a private bill which proposes to give justice to an old soldier, and I hope the Senate will allow it to be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws and laws governing entrance to soldiers' homes Thomas M. Jones shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the United States service as a drummer in Independent Company C, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, on September 8, 1862, and to have been honorably discharged on April 23, 1863, and that no bounty, pay, or other allowance shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the following amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, of the reprint strike out the word "shall" after the word "Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also add the word "shall" before the words "in the District of Columbia," line 7, on the same page, so as to read:

Officers, clerks, or servants, directly or indirectly shall in the District of Columbia manufacture, sell, offer for sale, keep for sale—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, page 1 of the reprint, after the word "manufacture," insert the following words:

For sale or gift, import for sale, import for use or gift, except as hereinafter provided, store, keep, deposit, or give away, except as hereinafter provided.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this is quite an important measure, and it is very evident a number of Senators interested in both sides of the discussion are not present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Oliver	Smoot
Borah	Hollis	Overman	Sterling
Brady	Husting	Owen	Sutherland
Brandegee	James	Page	Thomas
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Thompson
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Tillman
Clapp	Jones	Pittman	Townsend
Colt	Kenyon	Poindexter	Underwood
Culberson	Kern	Pomerene	Vardaman
Curtis	La Follette	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Walsh
du Pont	Lodge	Sherman	Watson
Fernald	McCumber	Shields	Weeks
Gallinger	McLean	Simmons	Works
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Mich.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the election of a President pro tempore.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KERN. I nominate for the position of President pro tempore of the Senate the Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY, a Senator from Delaware.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move to substitute the name of Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a roll call upon this vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes the question is who shall be the President pro tempore of the Senate, Senator SAULSBURY or Senator GALLINGER. The Chair assumes that the Senate has a right to order a roll call and that Senators will vote their preference. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BRYAN. I understood that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts was in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. LODGE. It was to substitute the name of Senator GALLINGER for that of Senator SAULSBURY.

Mr. BRYAN. The question comes first on the substitute, it occurs to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is right. The question will then be on substituting the name of Senator GALLINGER for that of Senator SAULSBURY. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST responded in the negative.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I nominate for the office of President pro tempore of the Senate the junior Senator from Minnesota, Senator MOSES E. CLAPP.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call has started and there has been a response.

Mr. PENROSE. On what motion are we voting?

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are voting on the substitution of Senator GALLINGER for Senator SAULSBURY.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call has begun and it will proceed. Some one will be elected after a while.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote. Otherwise I would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. For that reason I withhold my vote, but if not paired, I would withhold my vote, as I am supposed to have an interest in the vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when his name was called). For MOSES E. CLAPP.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I am unable to vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is absent, and I withhold my vote. Were I permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. THOMAS (when Mr. SHAFROTH's name was called). If my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] were able to be present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair that I did on the former ballot and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas, 26, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Borah	Fernald	Oliver	Sutherland
Brady	Gronna	Page	Townsend
Brandegee	Harding	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Colt	Jones	Sherman	Watson
Cummins	Lippitt	Smith, Mich.	Weeks
Curtis	McCumber	Smoot
du Pont	Nelson	Sterling

NAYS—39.

Ashurst	Hollis	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.

Fall	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Williams
Fletcher	Lewis	Robinson	Works
Gallinger	Lodge	Saulsbury

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute is lost.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking out the name of the Senator from Delaware, Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY, and inserting the name of the junior Senator from Minnesota, Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP, and upon that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that when more than two nominations are made, a motion to elect any one is not in order, but that the Senate must proceed in some orderly way by voting upon the candidates proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order would have been sustained had it been made at the proper time, but this is the condition of the record exactly: A motion was made to elect Senator SAULSBURY as President pro tempore. Thereupon a motion was made to substitute the name of Senator GALLINGER. The yeas and nays were ordered. Then a nomination was made of Senator CLAPP after the yeas and nays had been ordered. So the Chair was of the opinion that the vote must proceed after it had once started. Now, there are only two names pending before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not so understand it. The name of Senator SAULSBURY has certainly been proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. Although it took the form of a motion, I understood that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] had proposed to the Senate the name of Senator GALLINGER as a candidate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To substitute his name for that of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that it took that form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, he is one man that is beaten now, if the Chair knows anything about it.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. President, I do not take that view of it at all. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts was to amend the motion made by the Senator from Indiana by substituting the name of the Senator from New Hampshire. That has been defeated; but it does not seem to me that that disposes of the matter by any means, because upon a ballot, if we are permitted to ballot upon the candidate, it is of course conceivable that some one may change his mind concerning the Senator from New Hampshire.

I have always felt that a motion to proceed to the election of any man for an office when there were more than two candidates proposed for the place was not a proper parliamentary procedure. I might add, Mr. President, that while I recognize that a point of order ordinarily must be made in season, or it is deemed to be waived, it occurs to me that this is so fundamental in character as that the right of any Senator to demand a ballot under circumstances such as these can not be waived. So, Mr. President, although the roll is being called, I sought to get recognition of the Chair to make that suggestion to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in entire accord with the Senator from Montana upon the question of the right of balloting for a President pro tempore, but one ballot has taken place. The Chair believes that that eliminates the Senator from New Hampshire. Now, there is another motion to substitute.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to the point of order which I am going to state. In order that we may proceed in a regular and constitutional way, I will state the Senate has no authority at this time to elect a President pro tempore of the Senate either under the Constitution or under the rules of the Senate. The Constitution reads:

> The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice President.

Senate Rule I provides:

> In the absence of the Vice President, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.

I think, Mr. President, that we ought to elect a President pro tempore, but I think we ought to do it in the constitutional way. I raise the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Indiana is not in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it seems to me obvious, from what the Chair has stated and from what we are now going through, that the Senate has proceeded irregularly in this matter; and to give every Senator an opportunity to be recorded I would suggest to the majority leader to move, if he chooses to do so—or I will make the motion, anyway—that the Senate proceed to the election of a President pro tempore of the Senate; that nominations shall be in order; that the roll shall then be called; and that Senators shall vote for the nominee of their choice.

Mr. BRYAN. I raise the same point of order on that motion as that which I have already stated.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not catch the Senator's point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. It is that there is no occasion to elect a President pro tempore.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Florida what he considers "absence of the Vice President"? How far must the Vice President go before he shall be considered absent?

Mr. BRYAN. I certainly do not consider the presence of the Vice President as his absence. The way it has usually been done, I think, Mr. President, is for the Vice President to temporarily step out of the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair requests the Senator from Florida to take the chair.

Mr. BRYAN thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, may I make a motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that the vote which has just been taken be rescinded. If there is no objection to that, then I shall renew the motion which I have already made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JAMES. I object to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. President. I think we had better vote on the nomination which has been made of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that there is no motion now before the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. I merely desire to harmonize the situation. I do not care anything about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that there is no question now before the Senate and that there can not be until a President pro tempore of the Senate is elected. That is the only question that can now be presented in the absence of the Vice President.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the election of a President pro tempore of the Senate, and that nominations be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the election of a President pro tempore, and that nominations be in order.

Mr. HARDWICK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The records of the Senate will show that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] made a motion which is pending and undisposed of before the Senate. What has become of that motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the Vice President ruled that motion out of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. If that is the ruling of the Chair, then that clears the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Was there any announcement of the result of the roll call?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; there was.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. How many times are we required to elect a President pro tempore on a certain day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to. Nominations for the office of President pro tempore are now in order.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I nominate for the office of President pro tempore of the Senate Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY, of Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has been unexpectedly called from the Chamber, and in his behalf, I nominate for the office of President pro tempore of the Senate the Senator from New Hampshire, Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I nominate for President pro tempore of the Senate the junior Senator from Minnesota, Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the question will be put in this way: Those Senators favoring the election of the Senator from Delaware will vote by name "Saulsbury"; those favoring the Senator from New Hampshire will vote "Gallinger"; and those favoring the Senator from Minnesota will vote "Clapp." The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as I did on the last ballot and vote for Senator SAULSBURY.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. As he is absent from the Chamber, I will withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote for Senator GALLINGER.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] on all questions, and I withhold my vote for that reason.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. Therefore I suppose I am not at liberty to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote for Senator GALLINGER.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Announcing again my general pair and its transfer, I vote for Mr. SAULSBURY.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote for Senator SAULSBURY.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. While I question whether the obligation of a pair applies to an election, yet, nevertheless, out of courtesy to that Senator, who is absent, I will refrain from voting. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote for Senator GALLINGER.

Mr. POINDEXTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote for Senator GALLINGER.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. HARDWICK (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Geoorgia] is absent from the city, and therefore, of course, unable to vote. If he were present, he would vote for the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. This announcement as to the absence of my colleague may stand for the day.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote for Mr. SAULSBURY.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is absent from the Chamber and from the city. I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote for Senator GALLINGER.

Mr. BECKHAM. I inquire if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that Senator announced his pair and refrained from voting.

Mr. BECKHAM. Then I will withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote for Mr. SAULSBURY.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to change the transfer of my pair from the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and let my vote stand.

The result of the ballot was as follows:

MR. SAULSBURY—41.

Ashurst	Husting	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	James	Owen	Swanson

MR. CLAPP—5.

Borah	Kenyon	La Follette	Norris
Cummins

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the ballot just taken the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has received 41 votes; the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has received 22 votes; and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has received 5 votes. The Senate having elected the Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY President pro tempore of the Senate, that Senator will present himself at the Vice President's desk, and the Chair will administer the oath of office to him.

Mr. SAULSBURY was escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. KERN, and, the oath of office having been administered to him by the Presiding Officer, he took the chair as President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, no one could appreciate more than I the distinction you have conferred upon me by electing me to this high office. The intimate associations one has in this body, even during the short service which I have had, make one soon understand the kindliness and the good will of his associates. I attribute my election to the kindness and partiality of my friends rather than to any inherent merit I possess; and I earnestly ask of all of you friendly and kindly consideration as to the best of my ability I try to assist in conducting the proceedings of this body in accordance with the high traditions and ideals of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been a member of this body for more than a quarter of a century. During that time I have never asked any Senator to vote for me for any position whatever, and if I should remain here another quarter of a century I never should make a request of that kind. While warmly thanking the Senators who voted for me, I beg to say that it is a gratification to me that in the election of the Senator who now graces the chair as President pro tempore of this body a man has been chosen by the Democratic Senators who is a man deservedly having the esteem, so far as I know, of every Senator on this side of the Chamber. I extend to that Senator my kindly wishes for his future happiness and welfare, and assure him that, so far as I am concerned, every aid that I can give him in the discharge of his duties will be freely granted.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 288), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected WILLARD SAULSBURY, a Senator from the State of Delaware, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from time to time during the pleasure of the Senate in accordance with the terms of its resolution passed March 12, 1890.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 289), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected WILLARD SAULSBURY, a Senator from the State of Delaware, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from time to time during the pleasure of the Senate in accordance with the terms of its resolution passed March 12, 1890.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] offers the following amendment: In line 7, on page 1, of the reprint, after the word "manufacture," add the following:

For sale or gift, import for sale, import for use or gift, except as hereinafter provided, store, keep, deposit, or give away, except as hereinafter provided.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas some questions concerning the amendments which he now proposes.

On Friday, when he was interrogated by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Texas indicated that it was not the purpose of this bill to prohibit the importation of liquor into the District by individuals for their own use. I see now, under the amendments which the Senator brings in to-day, that he does propose to limit and sharply restrict the importation into this District by individuals of liquor for their own use; that he proposes to limit the amount of liquor that any person can have in his house at any time; that he proposes to limit the frequency with which an individual can purchase and import liquor for use in his own house. In other words, he is converting this bill from an antisaloon measure into a piece of sumptuary legislation in which he proposes to dictate to the people of the District and to those resident in the District what they shall use and how much they shall use in their own households.

Have I correctly interpreted the purpose of these amendments which the Senator proposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall not accept the construction the Senator puts on my intention. The Senator states the facts correctly; but I have simply embodied here the provisions that are usual in most of the States that have prohibition laws.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me call the Senator's attention to what he stated here on Friday. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] inquired:

Is the importation of liquor into the District of Columbia prohibited?

Senator SHEPPARD. The importation of liquor into the District of Columbia for the purposes prohibited in this bill is prohibited; that is, for purposes of sale for beverage purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it is not prohibited for consumption purposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not for personal consumption?

Now, after giving that assurance to the Senate, the Senator from Texas brings in these amendments which do propose to dictate to every resident and citizen in this community how much he shall import, when he shall import it, how much he shall have in his house, and how many members of his family shall have liquor. Is not that a correct statement of the situation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not exactly. The Senator wanders from his first point. He said that I stated on Friday that this bill did not prohibit the importation of liquor for personal use. It does not prohibit the importation of liquor for personal use. I have simply restricted importation in this amendment. This is done in order to throw safeguards around the law, to prevent its indiscriminate violation. We do not attempt to prohibit the importation into the District for personal use. It has been found advisable, however, by those who have studied the question and who have had long experience in such matters to establish restrictions of this kind in order to make the law effective.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator practically admits my statement. He first brings in here a bill which on its face is an antisaloon bill. It is a bill to prohibit the manufacture of liquor in the District, and a bill to prohibit the sale of liquor in the District, and a bill to prohibit the importation or sale in the District; and he assures Senators upon the floor of the Senate that that is the purpose of the bill. Now he brings in these amendments, which are to a large extent in direct contravention of the assurance which he has given. He changes the bill from a police regulation to a sumptuary regulation to control individuals in their private households. I can place no other interpretation upon the present attitude of the Senator with relation to these amendments.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator is satisfied with his own construction, I have no complaint. Let him characterize the amendment in his own manner, if it pleases him. It is in truth, however, an administrative amendment which goes more to the proper enforcement of the law than it does to the merits of the question—the question of admitting liquors for personal use or gift.

I shall say to the Senator that I proposed this amendment after consultation with Senators on both sides and with experts in prohibition legislation who thought it would be advisable to insert such a restriction. It appears in the prohibition laws of many States. When the Senator uses the term "sumptuary legislation," and attempts to use language that might be prejudicial to the bill, he is simply repeating the time-worn arguments of those who are opposed to the principle of prohibition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know how it may be in all States. I know that the amendment just adopted in Nebraska, and the amendments which have been adopted in most States, prohibit the importation for sale, prohibit the sale, and prohibit the manufacture, but do not undertake to prohibit the private consumption, do not undertake sumptuary regulation, do not undertake to dictate to the individual what he shall drink nor when he shall drink, provided he does it in his own household and imports liquor for his own use. On the other hand, I find upon page 4 of this proposed amendment of the Senator the following:

No person shall, nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house, have in his possession, receive, or accept delivery oftener than once a month from any railroad, steamboat, express company, or transportation company of any kind, or from any person whomsoever, any intoxicating liquors in excess of 1 quart of distilled liquor in a single container, or 1 gallon of beer, or 1 gallon of wine, except as herein otherwise provided. Every container in which such distilled liquor, wine, or beer is carried or transported, shall have on it a card not less than 12 inches long by 6 inches wide, upon which shall be stated in letters not less than 1 inch high the kind and quantity of its contents.

That is an attempt by legislation to provide the amount of liquor which families shall consume. It is an attempt by the Senator from Texas to dictate to everyone else in this District how much he shall drink.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is the old argument.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a sumptuary regulation, and it is not the regulation commonly proposed in the prohibition laws of the various States. It evidently was not the intention of the Senator when he introduced his bill, when he asked the Senate to take it up, when he practically got the unanimous consent of the Senate to take it up. That certainly was not the purpose of the bill at that time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I still insist that it is a matter of administration. This amendment is intended to secure the law against violations. If the Senator thinks that we have not permitted a sufficient amount of liquor, perhaps the amount might be increased. The argument of "dictation" and "sumptuary legislation" is one that we have heard often. In many of the prohibition States amendments of this kind have been found necessary by experience. They have been passed on by the courts, and have been held to be permissible administrative regulations, and not interferences with any principle of personal use, or right to import for personal use.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill with the greatest care or to compare the amendments which are now suggested by the Senator from Texas with the original text; but do I understand that this sumptuary regulation and limitation of the amount of wine which a person may have in his possession in the District of Columbia will apply to the ambassadors from foreign countries?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It does not apply to them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there a provision in the bill specifically eliminating them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is a provision eliminating them from this particular restriction. However, the amount which they are permitted to have is a little larger—5 gallons.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether the Senator considers their capacity greater than the American capacity?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Possibly so. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I dispute the fact.

Mr. PENROSE. I can not hear fully the character of the colloquy on the other side of the Chamber. I wish the Senators would speak up, so that the Senate can hear what is being said.

I have been profoundly impressed, Mr. President, with this difference in the capacity for absorption of alcoholic stimulants between the foreign born coming here in an official capacity and the native or naturalized element, and I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Texas as to the reason for this discrimination. Why does he think that an alien, even in an official capacity, requires a larger amount of alcohol than a native or a naturalized citizen?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is well known, Mr. President, that in many foreign countries the people are more accustomed to the use of liquor on their tables and in their homes than are we.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator consider foreign nations more intemperate than the United States of America?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Some of them, I certainly do. Some of the most intemperate nations in the world are foreign nations. But that is aside from the point.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. As I undertand, the object of this bill is to save the Nation—to save humanity. I want to ask the Senator, in all reason, why should he leave out the legations? They are humanity. They are God's kind and your kindred and your brothers. Why not extend your guardianship and influence and authority over all—Germans, French, Italians, Dutch, and the like?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Our jurisdiction has not been extended that far yet, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I trust it never will be extended as far as the Senator desires with the American race.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We will leave that to the Senate and the American people.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from Texas bases this discrimination largely on the ground that the foreigner is accustomed to the daily use of stimulants. Has he not a fellow feeling for the native American who may be accustomed to a similar habit, in New Jersey or elsewhere?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have complete jurisdiction over our own citizens.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. It seems to me that this is a delicate question which might give rise to serious complications. If it is going to be discussed at length, I think the Senate should go into executive session. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes the motion is not seconded, if it is intended as a motion.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not I am correctly informed that it is one of the doctrines of the Mohammedan faith that total abstinence is the rule?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall state to the Senator that I am not familiar with the Mohammedan faith.

Mr. PENROSE. I believe that is the case; and it is a question in my mind whether there should not be an exemption in the case of citizens of Turkey, who are not supposed at home to absorb this very liberal allowance of stimulants.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator does great honor to the Turkish people.

Mr. PENROSE. I can not hear the Senator, but I have no doubt it is a very lucid statement.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Texas, I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it is hardly necessary to go as far as to a Mohammedan country to find whether or not prohibition has done any good or whether it has been sustained in the countries where it is in effect. I wish to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I come from a State that has had prohibition for more than 25 years. The State of North Dakota, which I in part represent, has never had within its border since it became a State a licensed saloon. I do not think that the Senator from Pennsylvania, with his great ability—which we all recognize—with his splendid genius, should try to minimize legislation of this kind.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not intend to minimize this legislation. I was, however, somewhat struck with what seemed to me to be an incongruity. I am glad the Senator from North Dakota has explained the condition in the Scandinavian countries, or, rather, in the State from which he comes. I think it applies to the country from which he originally came, that it is a very temperate country and the people are temperate. I do not intend to pursue the discussion any further. I want to assure the Senator that I realize fully the important character of the legislation.

Mr. GRONNA. While I do not have the floor and do not care to go into a lengthy discussion of this question, I wish to say to the Senate that I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania is in a state of confusion. I have not yet referred to the Scandinavian countries, although I am proud to say my people came from one of those countries some years ago. I am also proud to say, since the Senator has referred to it, that in that country they have practical prohibition now. In the State which I in part represent we have people who have come from the State of Pennsylvania, and I am only sorry we do not have more of them; we have people from every State in the Union; we have people from nearly every country of Europe; but they saw fit nearly 30 years ago to place in the constitution of our State the twentieth article, which provides that there shall not be manufactured or sold any intoxicating liquors. I want to say, not only to the Senator from Pennsylvania but to the Senate, that it has been one of the most beneficial laws upon our statute books; that it has done more to make North Dakota what it is to-day, one of the most prosperous States of the Union, than any other law on our statute books.

I hope that this important measure will be treated in the same manner, and that the Senators who have this important legislation in charge will be treated with the same courtesy that is due any other Senator who may have some other legislation in charge.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; with the permission of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair inquire if the Senator from Texas still has the floor. Having taken the chair during the discussion, the Chair is unable to determine.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas yields.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether or not the State which he represents has a provision in its statute or in its constitution similar to the amendment which is now offered by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GRONNA. No; Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator say that the people of North Dakota desire any such limitation upon the possession of liquor in their homes or if a limitation of this sort is necessary for the proper enforcement of the prohibition law of North Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. With the permission of the Senator from Texas——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to answer the Senator from New York that the prohibition clause in our constitution is very brief, and with his permission I shall read it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall be glad to have the Senator read it.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from New York that no lawyer has been able during the 30 years this law has been in force to take from or to add a single thing to the law, and it has stood the test in all the courts of our State. Our constitution provides that—

No person, association, or corporation shall within the State manufacture for sale or gift any intoxicating liquors, and no person, association, or corporation shall import or ship into the State any intoxicating liquors for sale or gift, or keep or sell or offer the same for sale or gift, barter, or trade as a beverage.

That, Mr. President, does not permit any citizen of our State, or if he is a citizen of some other State, either to manufacture, sell, or give away any intoxicating liquor. I admit that it has been held by the courts and by the supreme court of our State that a person has the right to import liquors for his own use, but not for disposition in any other way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not desire to interfere with the efforts of the Senator from Texas to perfect amendments to this much-amended bill, but I do desire to get information with reference to the amendment. The Senator from Texas informed me several days ago that in the bill introduced by him there was nothing to prevent the importation of liquor into the District of Columbia for consumption. Now, he has offered an amendment limiting the importation of liquor into the District for consumption. On line 7, page 1, of the bill, he adds the following:

For sale or gift, import for sale, import for use or gift, except as hereinafter provided, store, keep, deposit, or give away, except as hereinafter provided.

The hereinafter provided is this:

No person shall, nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house, have in his possession——

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator will permit me, some words were omitted that should be inserted there when the amendment was printed—the words "for personal use or gift" after the word "possession."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, for personal use or gift——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I wish the Senator from Texas would repeat his remark. We were unable to catch it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have not yet reached the amendment which the Senator from Alabama is reading now, and I had intended to call attention to the omission when we reached it in due order. After the word "possession," in line 6, page 4, of the amendment which I presented yesterday, and which is on the desk of each Senator to-day, the words "for personal use or gift," in line 6, page 4, after the word "possession," should be inserted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the amendment the Senator proposes to supplement the one that is now pending, the paragraph will read:

No person shall, nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house, have in his possession, for personal use or gift, receive, or accept delivery oftener than once a month from any railroad, steamboat, express company, or transportation company of any kind, or from any person whomsoever, any intoxicating liquors in excess of 1 quart of distilled liquor in a single container, or 1 gallon of beer, or 1 gallon of wine, except as herein otherwise provided. Every container in which such distilled liquor, wine, or beer is carried or transported, shall have on it a card not less than 12 inches long by 6 inches wide, upon which shall be stated in letters not less than 1 inch high the kind and quantity of its contents; but a container in which a quart or less is carried may have on it a card 6 inches long by 4 inches wide, upon which shall be stated in letters not less than 1 inch high the kind and quantity of its contents, and the consignee shall, before receiving the distilled liquor, wine, or beer, sign a record as herein provided, and shall make an affidavit that the said distilled liquor, wine, or beer will not be used in violation of the provision of this act.

Now, Mr. President, take that provision of the Senator's bill in connection with the provision in section 1 of the bill which fixes the penalties for a violation of this provision. On page 2, line 14 of the bill, we find the following penalty clause:

That any person, or persons, or any house, company, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, who shall directly or indirectly violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $300 nor more than $1,000, and shall be imprisoned in the District jail or workhouse for a period of not less than 30 days nor more than 1 year for each offense.

Mr. President, I have heard it said many times on the floor of the House of Representatives and in the Senate of the United States that the gentlemen who propose these prohibition measures did not propose to deprive the individual of his opportunity to take a drink of liquor, but that they were fighting the saloon; that they were fighting the manufacture of the beverage. Now, I think we should be honest. I think we should be truthful to the country. I do not think legislation ought to be passed through this body without the people of the United States understanding what it means. So far as I am concerned, I would far rather have a provision put in this bill prohibiting absolutely the importation of all liquor into this District than the trick and subterfuge that is now being inserted in the bill.

If you are opposed to men drinking liquor and you think it wrong, have the courage to stand up here and say they can not drink it. Have the honesty of purpose not to deceive a public into voting for a measure that will trick them into the penitentiary of the United States. If you are fighting the saloon, if you are fighting the manufacture of liquor, and you propose to allow the individual to have his drink if he wants it, then occupy your position, take it, and say that there you stand; but if you say, as some men do, it is morally wrong to take a drink of liquor it certainly is just as morally wrong to take one drink as it is to take two, just as morally wrong to have one quart of liquor in the house as it is a gallon. Why do you stop? Why do you not either be fish, flesh, or fowl? Why do you draw the line?

Now, here is what you are going to do. If you pass this bill and it becomes a law you are going to endanger the happiness and the liberties of citizens of the United States by the way the bill is constructed. You are going to endanger the happiness of the homes of this District, because just as sure as you pass this bill and put it on the statute books, inviting the citizens of the District of Columbia to import liquor from outside the District into this District for the purpose of consumption and then limit its use in the way that you have limited it in this bill, and then say that there is no discretion in the court, you leave no discretion in the honest judgment of those who preside over the District of Columbia to determine whether a man is attempting to run a blind tiger with malice aforethought to violate the law or whether it is accidentally violated. Under this bill a man may violate the law, without any intention to do what is wrong, it may be without realizing it, although I recognize that every citizen must know the law, and when he stands before the court he stands committed to a knowledge of the law, whether he knows it or not. But you know and I know many of the people of this District will not know this law.

Now, what is the trap you invite them into? The trap in the bill is this: You say that any one citizen of the District of Columbia can import for the purpose of drinking it a quart of liquor in his own house in a month, and no more. If two members of that household import a quart of liquor each into that house under the terms of the bill then they are guilty under the bill, and it is not discretionary with the court to say how far they are guilty. The only discretion in the court is to determine whether you will lock them up in jail for a month or a year. If a resident of this District under your law imports into his house a quart of liquor for personal consumption and does not tell his son about it, and then the son in the same house imports a quart of liquor into that house and does not tell the father about it, under the terms of this law as you propose to put it on the statute books both of them are guilty of a crime and both of them are subject to be sent to jail for not less than a month and possibly for a year.

I say to the Senator from Texas, if you propose to set a trap of that kind for the people of the District, you had far better face the proposition that you really believe in. This is merely thrown to the winds to catch votes.

I know what the Senator from Texas believes in; I believe I do. He can correct me if I misstate him. He does not believe there should be a drop of liquor drank in the District of Columbia. Now, that is what he believes. I say, be honest with the people of the District of Columbia and do not set a trap for them. Put it in the bill and let us vote on it, if that is what you mean. If, on the other hand, you mean that what you pretend in this bill you are doing, that you are going to allow people to import liquor for beverage purposes, then do not set a trap that may send a whole family to jail.

I am not here to interfere, as I said the other day, with the management by the Senator from Texas of this bill. The position that I stand for is that the people of the District of Columbia should pass on this legislation before it is put into effect. But I do not propose to let this time pass without putting into the RECORD exactly what you are doing in reference to this measure. You can strike it all out, if you want to, and say that no liquor shall come in here. Then let the Senate, if they determine—let the Congress, if they determine—say whether it will walk up and pass a law of that kind. That is what you mean and that is what you want. That is what you are driving at. If that is so, have the courage to stand up for your convictions; have the courage to fight for what you really mean. If you do not, do not try to put a substitute in here that is going to fool these people and possibly punish innocent men hereafter and destroy happy homes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the liquor traffic never had an abler or truer defender in the Senate than the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He is exercised about this amendment of mine because it robs him of one of the chief arguments that could have been leveled against the bill. He talks about interfering with the liberty of the citizen. If we had brought a provision in here preventing a citizen from importing any liquor whatever, the argument would have been made that he would be deprived of one of his constitutional rights, and the bill itself might have been declared unconstitutional.

Of course, the Senator wants to have this amendment stricken from the bill. This amendment was inserted by me after consultation with men who have put a lifetime into the development of laws of this kind, and who advised me that a law like this was essential to the vitality and the integrity of a prohibitive measure. So I have no apologies to offer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the Senator to take his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, because I stand for liberty of conscience and freedom of action it has not been an unusual thing for some people to apply the remarks that the Senator from Texas has just stated, that there was no truer defender of the liquor interests. I heard that ring through a whole campaign, and I heard the people of a great State repudiate it at the polls.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They did not repudiate it, if I understand the matter correctly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; they did.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They elected the Senator on account of his great record and great services along other lines, did they not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will address the Chair and get permission to interrupt the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They repudiated what they knew was false, just as the Senator knows it is false.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall state that I do not know that is false.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I challenge the Senator to put in the RECORD or make a statement that can sustain the statement he has just made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Your attitude and arguments here sustain my statement. I do not need to put any additional proof in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will address the Chair.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I beg pardon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to have the Chair preserve proper order, but I have no objection to the Senator interrupting me, because it comes right down to the fact. He speaks of the argument I have made. What is the argument I have made? I have challenged the Senator from Texas to stand on one side of this question or the other. I have challenged him to say there shall be no liquor drunk in this District, or if you are going to allow people to drink liquor to make a reasonable bill that has not got a trap in it. That is all the argument I have made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator if he believes a provision prohibiting the importation of any liquor into the District of Columbia for personal use or prohibiting a citizen of this District from ordering it for personal use would be constitutional?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see why.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask you, do you believe so?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe myself in allowing each local community to decide this question for itself, but I know of no reason outside of what is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States why it would not be constitutional.

The Senator says I am a defender of the liquor interests. It was only a few years ago the very people whom you represent were appealing to me when I occupied a position of some influence at the other end of the Capitol to give them an opportunity to pass what is known as the Webb-Kenyon bill. I did it and I voted for it myself, because it was consistent with my principles. I said if a local community or a State desire absolutely to prohibit the importation of liquor into their State or community they ought to have a right to do it, and I believe it now. If the Webb-Kenyon bill is constitutional, then it would be constitutional to put a provision in here absolutely prohibiting the importation of liquor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I make a suggestion here?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is the Senator opposed to allowing the States to say under the method prescribed by the States themselves in the constitution whether the liquor traffic shall be prohibited throughout the Union?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That statement is not worthy of the able intellect of the Senator from Texas. The Senator from Texas knows that there is a very great distinction between the question of submitting a bill involving the sale of liquor to a local community and the proposition of amending the fundamental principle, the Constitution of the United States. It is not a question of whether the people shall vote on it, and the Senator from Texas knows that. I have served for many years in the Congress of the United States with the Senator; I know he has an acute and able intellect, and, although he may make a statement of that kind to catch popular acclaim, the Senator knows as well as I do that the question involves a principle of representative government, the principle of not forcing on people sumptuary laws that do not meet with their approval; secondly, the proposition of not putting laws in force in a community that will not be carried out by the local government.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Alabama has heretofore announced himself as being opposed to the principle of the initiative and referendum?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; and I am surprised that the Senator from Texas should put that statement as in opposition to the position I now take. The Senator from Texas undoubtedly understands the distinction between the proposition of an initiative and referendum and a referendum. The distinction is fundamental.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me to explain the distinction, it is fundamental; it is governmental. The referendum, as in this case, is the exercise of the legislative function of government by a representative body, leaving it to the happening of a condition as to whether or not it shall go into effect, and every local-option law is passed on that basis. The people do not legislate; this is not a pure democracy; but it is a representative democracy. That is the fundamental principle.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not finished, but I will yield as soon as I make my explanation.

The legislative body, representing the people, create the legislation, and then they submit it to local communities to determine whether or not they desire to have it put into effect. It is not the creation of legislation by a local community; it is the mere happening of an event. For instance, if you were to declare that the President of the United States could order out the Army of the United States to take charge of all the railroads of this country if there were war declared, that would not justify him in ordering out the troops and taking charge of them until war was declared. That is the happening of an event to put your legislation into effect.

This referendum will ripen the legislation you are writing. To submit it to a referendum after you have perfected your legislation is merely the bringing about of the happening of an event as to whether the legislation shall go into effect, to wit, whether a majority of the people in the District of Columbia are in favor of it; but, on the other hand, when you come to the initiative and referendum, that does not contemplate the sifting through a legislative body; it does not contemplate making laws by the representatives of the people, by the men who are supposed to have the wisdom for enacting law; not at all.

The initiative contemplates that a certain number of people shall petition for a law, and that then it shall be submitted to the entire electorate to vote whether or not it shall be a law. What is the difference? When you have the initiative you have a small coterie sitting in a back office, probably a private room, locked in their own consciousness, to write the proposal of the law without joint debate, without discussion, without opportunity of amendment, without the wisdom of many gathered, without the representative voices coming from distant parts of the community to be reflected in that legislation; but a small coterie preparing a proposal, then the carrying about of a petition to start the machinery to work, and then its ratification at the polls.

One is the reflected sentiment of the chosen men of the people, merely allowing the happening of an event to put it into effect; the other is the creation of legislation, possibly in a back room, by a band of tricksters sometimes, with no opportunity to amend, merely submitting an undigested question by petition to the masses of the people.

When you come down to petitions, what you do by petition always reminds me of something that happened to me 20 years ago, which shows the value of petition. When I came to Congress Mr. Cleveland was President of the United States, and I, belonging to his party, was the referee named to suggest the postmasters in my district. I did not look very much like a Representative; I suppose I had more the appearance of a beardless boy. I rode into a community one day where I happened to know a few friends. Whilst waiting for a train there a gentleman came to the crowd in which I was standing. He said he did not like to interrupt us, but he was in a hurry, and he would like for us to look at a petition he had. He said the postmaster at the town just above had died the day before; that there were two applicants for the position; that one was a man who was able to take care of himself and the other was a young lady who had to take care of her mother. He wanted to get a petition for the young lady signed; he passed it around the crowd and asked them to sign it. Some of them said they would sign it, and others said they would sign the other petition. Finally he got around to me. He had been introduced to me, but he evidently had not placed who I was. He asked me if I would not sign the petition. I said, "My friend, let me see it." He handed the petition to me. It was addressed to "The Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, Member of Congress from the ninth Alabama district," and it stated: "We, the undersigned petitioners, patrons of the post office"—at the town he came from—"respectfully request you to use your efforts to have"—the young lady named—"appointed postmistress." "Well," I said, "my friend, I can not sign this petition. I live in Birmingham; I am not a patron of your post office, and so I can not sign it." "Oh," he said, "that does not make any difference. Sign it. I am getting everybody to sign this petition, niggers and all. That blamed Congressman will not know who signed it when he gets it." [Laughter.]

That is in keeping with the Senator's proposal about an initiative. There may be some petitions signed with intelligence and an intelligent understanding of what they contain; but the vast number of petitions, you know and I know, are signed to get rid of the man who presents them. I am not in favor of making laws along that line; but I do say that it is perfectly legitimate for a legislative body to use the power of the referendum. That power is contemplated in the Constitution itself. There is a referendum under every amendment that the Congress of the United States offers to the Constitution of the United States. There are many other instances in the National Government and in the State governments where a proper referendum can be exercised. That is what I stand for, and not for an indiscriminate initiative.

So my position in not favoring an initiative and referendum is in nowise in conflict with my desire that the people of the District of Columbia may have an opportunity to pass on a bill which the Senator from Texas himself has amended in vital ways every time that it has come before the Senate for consideration, and his mind does not seem to be yet fixed on what he ought to do for the people of the District of Columbia on this subject.

I did not rise to make this long speech on this subject; but I am perfectly willing for the Senator from Texas to reflect on me, if he wants to, when I stand for what I believe is the principle of liberty, of free government, and to say that I am doing it for an ulterior purpose and in the interest of persons with whom I have never had any connection, either directly or indirectly, in my life.

More than that, so far as I am personally concerned, I do not care whether you pour every drop of liquor you have got in this District into the gutter; it is no concern of mine; but if the Senator from Texas thinks he makes headway whenever anybody opposes his propaganda, or the propaganda of those he follows, by attempting to reflect on their private character or their personal motives I give him free liberty to exercise that right, so far as I am concerned, during the balance of this debate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I intend no personal reflection on the Senator from Alabama. I say that the effect of his course and attitude here is to make him one of the most powerful champions of the liquor traffic in the United States. I say that is the logical effect of the attitude he assumes here and has assumed elsewhere.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I ask the Senator from Texas to make his bill clear, and either say that these people shall drink or that they shall not drink, so that it shall not set a trap for them. Is that in the interest of the liquor traffic?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is the Senator from Alabama who is attempting to set the trap.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Where is the trap? Is it not clear that you are advocating a bill here under which thousands of people may be entrapped and punished?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No. The trap of the Senator from Alabama is, if possible, to have a law passed here that may be declared unconstitutional.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is not anything of appeal in that. The Senator from Texas is captious in that statement. The real issue as to whether or not a bill of that kind would be constitutional is before the Supreme Court of the United States to-day.

I voted for the Webb-Kenyon bill to prevent the shipment of liquor into "dry" territory. Of course, at that time I was not "making the ablest arguments for the liquor interests," but, according to the Senator from Texas, I was merely exercising my individual right.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one word, if the Senator please. But if that bill should be declared constitutional—the whole question is involved there—then you could say that not one drop of liquor shall cross the State line.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There will be time enough to amend the bill then.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But if it is declared unconstitutional, then the legislation which the Senator is proposing to-day is of no avail, and liquor can flow across in rivers full. The Senator knows that as well as I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the Senator's argument and am in entire sympathy with his proposition to submit this important question to the people of the District, if it can be done. From the attitude which the Senator occupies he believes that it is within our power to do so; but that is a question which is and has been troubling me very seriously since I listened to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] last March, who then delivered an address upon the subject and sustained his assertion that Congress was without power to submit a referendum of this kind to the people of the District of Columbia by a system of reasoning and authorities which to my mind was convincing. If I can learn of, or if my attention can be brought to, any decisions or to any line of reasoning which will upset the force and effect upon my mind, and consequently upon my judgment, of that argument, I should be more than glad to have it. I have no doubt that the Senator from Alabama has given much thought to the subject, because he is the author of the proposed amendment to this bill by which a referendum is sought to be secured.

My understanding of the law upon this subject, as a general proposition, is that the power to legislate can not be delegated either for purposes of initiation or reference as to general legislation in the absence of some constitutional provision permitting it or some provision which reserves that right to the people. I am aware also of the fact that legislation can be made dependent upon the happening of some future event, some contingency; but the authorities with which the Senator from Washington fortified his argument comprise a large number of decisions from the courts of last resort, which declare, I think without exception, that the contingency can not be one—of course, in the absence of constitutional provision—created by the legislature itself; and, of course, the submission of a law to the vote of the people would be a contingency created by the act of the legislature.

One of the leading cases upon the subject—and I am reading from page 4387 of the RECORD of the last session of Congress—as quoted in the argument of the Senator from Washington, is from the State of Iowa, from which I read this extract:

> We will first consider the question relating to the submission of an act to a vote of the people; and on this subject we entertain no doubts. The general assembly can not legally submit to the people the proposition whether an act should become a law or not, and the people have no power, in their primary or individual capacity, to make laws. They do this by representatives. There is no doubt of the authority of the legislature to pass an act to take effect upon a contingency. But what is a contingency in this sense and connection? It is some event independent of the will of the law-making power, as exercised in making the law, or some event over which the legislature has not control.

For instance, the embargo laws and their cessation were made to depend upon the action of foreign powers in relation to certain decrees. The will of the lawmaker is not a contingency in relation to himself. It may be such in relation to another and external power, but to call it so in relation to himself is an abuse of language. Now, if the people are to say whether or not an act shall become a law, they become, or are put in the place of, the lawmaker. And here is the constitutional objection. Their will is not a contingency upon which certain things are or are not to be done under the law, but it becomes the determining power whether such shall be the law or not.

Since listening to the Senator's argument I had occasion to examine the question myself, my object being to discover exceptions to the broad principle laid down by the Supreme Court of Iowa and sustained by a number of decisions of the courts elsewhere. I have been unable to find them, and am therefore constrained to believe that they do not exist, always bearing in mind the fundamental distinction between legislation local in character and legislation of a general nature.

If to that be added the reflection that the Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress the exclusive legislative power—and I think perhaps that imposes the broadest authority and jurisdiction over legislative matters which can be found in any of our constitutions—I am unable to accept the view that Congress has power to submit this question or any other legislative question to a vote of the people of the District of Columbia for their determination.

I regret that the Senator from Alabama has retired from the Chamber, because my purpose in rising was not to address the Senate upon the bill, but to ask the Senator whether he could furnish any authority or supply any line of reasoning to overcome what seems to me the general trend of American constitutional law upon this very important subject. If he can, I should be very greatly pleased to receive it and will gladly act in accordance with its conclusions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I am practically through, Mr. President.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me just to say a word, I was called out of the Chamber for a moment during the Senator's argument and did not hear all he had to say.

Mr. THOMAS. It was not an argument, but merely a statement that I wished to call to the Senator's attention in the hope that he might give me some further enlightenment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I think I can. I have some authorities on the question which I expect to present to the Senate when I offer my substitute, but I have not them in hand right now, and do not care to go into a part of the argument without going into it all.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, any time before the final vote is taken will be ample for my purposes. I very gladly yield the floor to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. The Senator has been discussing a phase of this matter that has given me a great deal of trouble.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not discussed it; I have merely called the attention of the Senator from Alabama to it and to my opinion concerning the power of Congress to submit the question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has indicated the difficulty with the matter that is in my own mind, namely, as to whether or not this constitutes a delegation of the lawmaking power, and, second, whether or not in this particular instance it is within the competency of Congress to do that.

The question I wanted to ask the Senator was this: Whether or not he thinks that Congress in governing the District of Columbia is exercising its legislative power or whether it is proceeding under a general power to govern the District, which power is without limitation, substantially as in the case of the Territories. For example, when Colorado was a Territory and when my own State was a Territory, the Senator knows that local legislative bodies were created with the full power to pass laws. If that constituted a delegation of the lawmaking power and Congress was forbidden to do it, I can not see upon what theory that action could be upheld at that time. The language of the Constitution with reference to the District of Columbia is:

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States.

That seems to confer very broadly on Congress the power to govern the District. We know that in doing so it is not bound in many particulars by the general provisions of the Constitution. For example, with reference to the judiciary, Congress can provide, undoubtedly, for the District of Columbia that judges shall be appointed to hold office for a limited period of time—for four years, for instance—as was done in the case of the Territories; and yet the general provision of the Constitution is that judges must hold their offices during good behavior. In the case of the Territories, however, that did not apply, and it does not apply, I take it, in the case of the District of Columbia. I do not know whether I make the point very clear to the Senator——

Mr. THOMAS. I think I understand the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But I should like to hear the Senator's view about that distinction.

Mr. THOMAS. The question is a very interesting one. To answer it offhand is perhaps a little hazardous; but I can perceive a distinction between that power which the Constitution confers upon Congress with regard to the District of Columbia and that power which it exercises over the national territory or domain when it creates temporary governments which we call Territories, and clothes them with certain legislative, executive, and judicial authority. The District of Columbia is in one sense a Territory, but in one sense only; that is to say that it is not a part of any State. It has a government to itself, and its citizens are not citizens of the United States in the sense that they can sue or be sued in the courts of the United States or exercise the elective franchise in a general election. I think that the provision of the Constitution which confers upon Congress exclusive legislative authority over the District includes the power to govern that District, and until I am further enlightened I shall be constrained to the view that the exclusive legislation to which the Constitution refers is the source of the authority under which we are now acting. Our general power to govern the District to which the Senator refers does not, in my judgment, authorize the exercise of any authority over the District which must be expressed in legislation.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the debate has wandered off from the real question that is before the Senate, namely, the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. The amendment offered by the Senator, and others of a like kind, are attempts to modify the terms of this bill in a way which, to my sense, is a compromise with evil. I am one who believes in absolute prohibition. I believe that if it is wrong for a man to sell intoxicating liquors to another upon which he may get drunk, it is equally wrong for the man to get drunk on that liquor. I think it is entirely out of place to undertake to punish the man who sells the liquor and to allow the man who uses it to go unpunished; and I think the Senator from Alabama is perfectly right when he says we ought to be honest and sincere, not only with the people of the District of Columbia but with the people of this country, when we come to deal with this question.

It is for that reason that I have been disappointed in the terms of the bill that is now before the Senate. There seems to be a disposition on the part of some Senators to preserve the right on the part of a citizen to give away liquors in his own home—not only to use them himself but to give them to others. But it has been my misfortune to be present at a good many banquets, public and private, where I have seen a good many men get drunk on liquors given to them by their hosts. Why should a man be preserved and protected in that right any more than the man who sells the liquor over the counter in a saloon?

I should have been glad to see a bill presented here forbidding absolutely the sale, giving away, manufacture, or use of intoxicating liquors, without exception. That would have been in accordance with my convictions on the subject. Of course, I would vote for a bill going part way, because I believe it is in the right direction; but I should regret that it does not go further.

Why do we forbid the manufacture of intoxicating liquor? Is it only to prevent somebody from selling or giving it away, or is it to prevent somebody from using it? The only evil of the manufacture of intoxicating liquors is not that they are sold or given away by somebody, but that somebody else uses them and becomes addicted to the habit of drink, which destroys the lives of thousands of the people of this country. To my mind it is perfectly inconsistent that we should legislate here simply for the purpose of preventing the selling or giving away of intoxicating liquor and not extend that legislation in such way as to prevent the use of it.

Mr. President, the question of submitting this matter to a vote of the people has been discussed here. It is not now directly before the Senate. I presume it will be, and I am not going to say very much about it at this time, although I may say more about it later on; but I want to suggest this one thing: Independently of the question as to whether Congress has any right under the Constitution to refer this matter of legislation to the people of the District of Columbia, I insist that the people of the District of Columbia have no right to settle that question for the United States. This Capital does not belong to the people living in the District of Columbia. The people in my State have an interest in their Capital. They are just as much interested in seeing it clean and decent and moral as are the people who live here in the District of Columbia, except that the people here are brought into closer contact with the evil; and if there should be a reference of this matter it should not be alone to the people of the District of Columbia, but to the whole people of the United States, as this is the National Capital.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether Congress in governing the District has not already, as a general principle, recognized residence in the District in numerous instances, and particularly in reference to the executive body which actually carries on the affairs of the District, namely, the District Commissioners, and required that they should be bona fide residents of the District for a certain fixed period?

Mr. WORKS. The people of the District of Columbia are recognized principally for the purpose of collecting taxes from them to carry on the affairs of the District of Columbia. They have no right to vote. They have no control over affairs in the District. They are not recognized in any sense as being a part of the government of the District. The provision that the commissioners shall be selected from persons living within the District is simply a regulation provided by Congress. It does not affect the question, so far as I can see.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up further time in discussing the question which is now before the Senate. I only desired to express my own views about it, which may be regarded by a good many people as being radical; but they are my earnest convictions, radical or not.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the pending amendment is one of a series of amendments which are proposed to be offered by the Senator from Texas in perfecting the bill which is now before the Senate.

In the State of Maryland for many years—I might say for a generation or so—we have had under discussion the question of local votes on legislation limiting the use of alcoholic liquors, and we have developed a settled policy or habit in that State of permitting a local vote on that subject whenever demanded by the representatives of a locality in the legislature. This is a liberal policy, and whenever it has been departed from it has caused friction, to say the least. There has been discussion as to what the size of the unit should be in which this vote should take place in our State, but the final adjustment of that question seems to be that it should be a unit which might be called a police unit, in which there is a police power which would regulate or enforce the provisions of the bill if it goes into operation.

Mr. President, in respect to this law, with all due respect to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I think the legislation, the writing of the law, is going on right here. That is the meaning of the word "legislate"—to write the law. This body has a perfect right, as I see the constitutional situation, to postpone the operation of the law it writes until some definite time or event in the future, the event being, say, the determination whether public sentiment in the community to be affected favors or is opposed to the execution of such a statute, it being well understood as a matter of common sense and sound democratic doctrine that, generally speaking, there is no wisdom in imposing upon any community the execution of a statute where a majority of the people of that community are opposed to the statute. So the ascertaining of the state of mind of the community to be affected is an essential feature of the operative character of the statute under consideration.

This law is being written here to-day; and I differ with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in respect to his attitude toward the amendments of the Senator from Texas, because in writing such a law under the usage in the State of Maryland we would accord to the proponents the largest degree of latitude in perfecting the measure that they propose to submit to a community for an expression of public approval or disapproval.

Mr. President, I expect, following the habit of my State and until some better way is suggested, to vote for a referendum on this measure to ascertain the state of public sentiment in the community that it is to affect, the District of Columbia, and to postpone its operation until the state of mind of that community is ascertained to be favorable to the law. I concede that it is a part of that doctrine or principle as far as possible to leave to the proponents of the law the details of perfecting the law, reserving, of course, the right to object to anything unconstitutional, inconsistent, or manifestly wrong. But, generally speaking, the proponents of such a statute as this, where it is proposed at the same time to require a favorable vote in the future before the law can go into operation, should be allowed the broadest latitude in perfecting the details of the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the question of prohibition is an old issue with me. It has been an issue in the State of Mississippi for a number of years. The first ballot I ever cast was in favor of prohibition. In those days to be a prohibitionist meant a fight for every inch of ground the prohibitionist stood upon. We undertook first to solve this problem by local option. The liquor traffic had a great hold upon the people. The foolish argument that it was sumptuary legislation and the beginning of a régime which would ultimately lead to unbearable proscriptions had a powerful influence upon the thoughtless, democratic mind. We made headway slowly, but by persistent efforts—appealing to the good judgment and common sense of the most—we finally succeeded in driving whisky out of every county in the State except about seven. In those days I believed myself that the matter ought to be determined by the voters of the counties where the liquor was sold. I held the erroneous view that if a man wanted to go to perdition and carry his family with him he should not be molested or restrained in his folly. Yes; I believed in local option; but the sentiment grew, and my mind and soul expanded with it, and when I became convinced of the far-reaching deleterious effects, morally, physically, and politically, which emanated from the open saloon, I changed my conduct. Those seven counties that persisted in the nefarious business of selling liquor became festering set-fasts upon the body politic. They were veritable running sores. Their poisonous influences were felt beyond the county lines, like "the foul breath of the upas tree"—everything that came within the purview of its pernicious influence was injured. So in order to rid the State of the plague the legislature passed a State-wide prohibition law, and the saloons in those unfortunate counties were closed, I hope, forever. That was about eight years ago. Mr. President, I do not exaggerate when I say that in those counties that had prohibition forced upon them not 15 per cent of the white voters, if the question were again submitted, would vote for the return of the saloon. As long as the whisky interests control the community there will be advocates of the saloon in that community. The presence of the saloon seems to be able to stifle the nobler qualities of the mind and paralyze the better aspirations of the soul.

Much as I dislike to differ from the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I can not agree that the people of the District of Columbia have any right to vote on this question at all, or any other question touching the government of the District of Columbia. As has been so well said by the able Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], this District belongs to the American people, and the Congress should enact law for its government. Suppose, for instance, the people of Washington should desire to make it a gay place, a kind of Monte Carlo, open up gambling hells and dens of vice and iniquity in order to attract the meretricious multitude that infest such places. Does the able Senator believe that the American people would tolerate such a condition of things at the Capital of this Nation? Or would he be willing to submit the question of permitting them to do that to voters of the District? No; he would not. The citizens of this city came here with the understanding that this territory was under the control of the Federal Government, set apart for the National Capital, and it is the duty of the Congress to govern the city of Washington as the Capital of the Nation. I think Washington ought to be made the model city of America. I want it clean morally as well as physically. I want it to be a city set upon the hill, leading all of America by the excellency of its splendid example. I am willing for it to grow commercially, but as to that feature I am not much interested. I desire its parks and its statuary, its architecture, beautiful drives, and clear lakes to be the finest in all the world. I should like to have it the most beautiful city in all the hemisphere. I would have everything here calculated to develop the ethical nature and satisfy the tastes of our people. I want its moral and intellectual atmosphere so clean and pure that none can come from the country around about without feeling its stimulating effect. In a word, Mr. President, I want to see it a city suited in all respects for the Capital of the greatest Nation and the most enlightened Government beneath the stars to-day. But it can never reach that eminence—it can not accomplish that which I would have it accomplish as long as these places of infamy are kept open and recognized as legitimate. Washington ought to reflect everything that is good in this Republic. It should body forth in its art the aspirations of our people. Its government should exemplify the moral progress of our people in governmental matters, and its intellectual and moral atmosphere should be the essence of the ethical and intellectual attributes of the entire people. The greater part of the area of this country is saloonless to-day. A majority of our population live in dry territory. The consensus of opinion of the civilized world is that whisky is a curse—the most insidious enemy to the human race of which we have any knowledge. I repeat, Mr. President, that it is not becoming the Capital of this Nation for the open saloon to exist here, for this acknowledged enemy to society to exist with the consent of the Congress, notwithstanding the fact that a large majority of the people residing here favor it.

A great many people come to Washington to live for the purpose of having a good time and to spend money made by somebody else's toil. And, unfortunately, a great many of them can not have a good time unless they have something to drink. The social lies that warp us from the living truth is doubtless responsible for this vitiated taste and distorted view of life. There is no place in this city for the saloon. A decent regard for the national sentiment demands that the saloon be closed. The amount of liquor for the consumer ought to be limited, not to hurt the business of the seller but to save the body and soul of the buyer. In my State when we first adopted State-wide prohibition the amount of liquor the consumer might buy was not limited. A man could send off and get as many gallons of whisky for his own consumption as he desired. But, as I stated before, when the people are rid of the pernicious influence of the drink habit, sentiment in favor of more prohibition grows. The soberer the community is the more drastic the prohibition laws. The last Legislature of Mississippi passed a bill limiting the amount of whisky that could be shipped to one person in one month to 2 quarts. It may interest Senators, and I will read the Mississippi statute. I read:

QUANTITY OF LIQUORS THAT MAY BE POSSESSED AT ONE TIME.

SEC. 9. (a) That it shall be unlawful for any person to receive, accept delivery of, possess, or have in his possession at one time, or within any period of 15 consecutive days, whether in one or more places, or whether in original packages or otherwise, (1) more than one-half gallon of vinous liquors, or (2) more than 3 gallons (24 pints) of malted liquors or fermented liquors, such as beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other similar fermented liquors, either in bottles or other receptacles, or (3) more than 1 quart of spirituous or other intoxicating liquors beyond those named in subdivisions 1 and 2 above, or (4) more than one kind of the three kinds of liquors, as hereinbefore classified, either at one time or within said period of 15 days, and whether in original packages or otherwise.

Mr. President, I shall have more to say on this question when the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is up for discussion. I will say, in conclusion, however, that I think it eminently unfortunate that this grave question affecting so vitally the good name of the Nation's Capital, the moral, mental, and physical well-being of the people of Washington, and I might say all the entire Nation, should be submitted to the people of Washington for settlement among a hundred thousand negroes, whose well-known leaning to the saloons and the purchasable quality of the voter, are to cast the deciding vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was very much gratified to have the Senator quote the law of the State of Mississippi limiting the amount of liquor which may be imported by individuals at different times. I wish that all the Senators could have heard the Mississippi law read, and I am glad the Senator read it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The supreme court of my State, I think, has recently held this law constitutional and valid.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall ask the Senator if similar laws have not been enacted in various other States?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think so. My understanding is a law similar in character has been enacted in Alabama, the home of the distinguished author of the proposed referendum amendment. I know such a law was proposed there and, I think, enacted. It is a very fine law, and in Mississippi has worked like a charm in destroying the blind tiger. The whisky advocates outside the State of Mississippi undertook to destroy this law by kiting it onto an unpopular measure and referring it to the people at the November election under a provision of our constitution recently inserted. I was called from the national campaign to Mississippi to discuss this question before the people of my State. I traveled over a great deal of the State, and I do not hesitate to say that I have never known the white people so aroused, so indignant at the impudence and effrontery of the men who were trying to defeat this righteous law. The matter never came to a vote, I am sorry to say, because the supreme court in a decision held that the act was not reviewable by a referendum clause in the constitution because it was enacted by the State legislature before the referendum was inserted in the constitution. But I believe, Mr. President, if the question had gone to a vote, that the law would have been approved and upheld by a majority of more than 16 to 1.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply want to call attention to the provisions of the prohibitory law of the State of Washington as bearing upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] expressed my personal views with reference to this matter, and I am not going to repeat them. I should like to see all intoxicants prohibited from the District; but I recognize that these great reforms come a step at a time, and that we have to make concessions in order to secure progress.

The provisions of the bill before the amendment proposed by the Senator allowed the bringing into the District of unlimited quantities of liquor by individuals for their personal use. The amendment that is proposed by the Senator from Texas simply limits the amount that may be brought in for that purpose. It does not prevent a person from bringing in liquor for his personal use, but simply limits the amount that can be brought in, and imposes certain restrictions, as I understand it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A great many States have adopted amendments limiting the amount of liquor that can be shipped into the State to one individual, but I do not know of any proposal which has ever been made before by any law on the statute books to limit the amount that can be shipped into one house. I am not trying to interfere with the gentlemen who are preparing this bill. What I propose to do is to try and submit it to the people; but it seems to me the absolute injustice and danger of the Senator's amendment as it stands is that you do not say to the individual, "You are limited to the use of 1 quart of liquor a month," but you say, "That is the only quart of liquor that can come into your household," and if the master of the household brings in a quart without informing the servant and the servant without informing the master brings a quart into that household you make it a crime, and you leave no discretion to the court in a case of that kind. You make it a crime, and both of them must go to jail for 30 days.

It seems to me that is a very dangerous law to put on the statute books and a very unjust law. It would be protecting the people of this District far better, if you think they should not drink liquor, to say that no man shall drink, than to set what I call a trap—and I say that without intending to reflect on the men that propose this. It will work as a trap when you say that only 1 quart of liquor shall go into one house, and you do not even say that they shall not be guilty if they do not have knowledge of the other quart going in there. You make a man commit a crime when he does not know that he is committing a crime, and when you have invited him to commit a crime.

I say that that is a very dangerous amendment, even for men who think as the Senator from Washington thinks, to foist on any community.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I recognize the force of the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama. I have not had an opportunity to examine carefully the terms of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas, and I was not intending to direct my remarks to the particular terms of the amendment. It may be that it ought to be changed. It may be that it ought to be modified. What I intended to call attention to was the fact that in many of the prohibition States they have imposed a limitation upon the amount that can be brought in. As to the terms of that limitation, the method by which it is brought about, of course, it ought to be just as plain as possible, and it ought to be framed in such a way as not to make likely the conditions or circumstances that the Senator from Alabama has pointed out.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was just going to suggest, to meet the objection of the Senator from Alabama, that we do not want any trap; we want this open and above board; we want it so that when a man violates the law he knows it. I am going to ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to amend his bill and have the limit on the amount brought in apply to the individual rather than to the house, and then probably the Senator from Alabama will support the bill. It would be fine if we could have the great weight of his moral influence for the measure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I have not occupied the position of resisting the efforts of the Senator to perfect his amendment or to write the bill in the way he thinks is proper. The only thing I am contending for here is that the people of the District of Columbia should have a voice in the matter. I merely thought, and believe now, that the language which the Senator from Texas is proposing is a very dangerous proposition for innocent people—I mean, people to whom it is held out that they can buy a quart of liquor—and then, because it is limited to the household, if two of them buy it they might be prosecuted and sent to jail.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think, if the Senator from Washington will permit me, that the Senator from Alabama is playing in a very exalted rôle just now. His conduct in this matter reminds me of the wise man who said:

It is a kindness to lead the sober; a duty to lead the drunk.

I think the Senator from Alabama is engaged in a pretty good business in protecting the man who wants liquor from getting in a trap, and therefore I am going to insist that the Senator from Texas amend the bill so as to remove that trap.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In view of the remarkable solicitude of the Senator from Alabama for a proper bill I shall be glad to withdraw that clause or to move that it be stricken out when we reach the amendment. I am endeavoring to secure a workable amendment and to meet every legitimate objection if possible.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think I appreciate the position of the Senator from Alabama. I know the principal issue to his mind is the question of referring the matter to the people of the District. I think it is well enough that dangers or ambiguities connected with any amendment that is offered shall be pointed out and I am very glad to have him point them out so far as I am concerned.

The Washington law, section 6262–4 of the Remington 1915 Codes and Statutes, reads as follows:

Manufacture, sale, or gift prohibited. It shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture, sell, barter, exchange, give away, furnish, or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquor, or to keep any intoxicating liquor, with intent to sell, barter, exchange, give away, furnish, or otherwise dispose of the same, except as in this act provided: Provided, however, That it shall not be unlawful for a person to give away intoxicating liquor, to be drunk on the premises, to a guest in his private dwelling or apartment, which is not a place of public resort.

That is the general prohibition section. Section 6262–15 reads as follows:

Permits for shipment of liquors.

This section covers the proposition, as I understand it, that is intended to be covered by the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Texas. I simply read it so that Senators may be advised as to the provisions of the law in our State:

SEC. 6262–15. Permits for shipment of liquors. The county auditor of each county within this State shall procure and keep, as a part of the records of his office, a well-bound book of blank applications for permits to ship or transport intoxicating liquor. Any person desiring to ship or transport any intoxicating liquor shall personally appear before the county auditor and shall furnish him the necessary information to fill in a blank application, which application shall contain the name of the applicant, the statement that he is over 21 years of age, the person, firm, or corporation from whom said shipment is to be made, the place from which said shipment is to be made, and to what point the same is to be made, a statement that the applicant is not the holder of any internal-revenue special-tax stamp or receipt from the United States Government, authorizing him to sell or to deal in intoxicating liquor, and a statement that he has not theretofore been convicted of any violation of the laws of the State relating to intoxicating liquor. Such facts shall be incorporated by the county auditor in one of said blank applications, and said application shall be signed by the applicant and sworn to by him before the county auditor or his deputy. Upon the applicant signing said application and taking the necessary oath thereto, the auditor shall issue a permit for the shipment or transportation of intoxicating liquor. Such permit shall be printed upon some shade of red paper, and shall be substantially in the following form.

I ask to have that printed without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. JONES. I think I will read it because it sets out the amount that can be brought in:

STATE OF WASHINGTON, County of ———, ss:

———, residing at ———, is hereby permitted to ship or transport from ———, in the State of ———, to ———, in the county of ———, State of Washington, intoxicating liquor to wit: ——— (insert kind and quantity, not exceeding in quantity one-half gallon of intoxicating liquor other than beer, or 12 quarts of beer or 24 pints of beer). This permit can only be used for one shipment and will be void after 30 days from the date of issue.

Dated this ——— day of ——— 19—.

——— ———,
County Auditor.

I heard some one suggest that the requirement of this amendment in reference to having printed upon the shipment that comes in here certain things, in letters of a certain size, was hardly proper, and yet here is what our law requires in regard to the bringing in of liquor from outside:

This permit—

Which has just been described, that must be printed on some form of red paper—

This permit shall be attached to and plainly affixed in a conspicuous place to any package or parcel containing intoxicating liquor, transported or shipped within the State of Washington, and when so affixed shall authorize any railroad company, express company, transportation company, common carrier, or any person, firm, or corporation operating any boat, launch, or vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise within the State of Washington, to transport, ship, or carry not to exceed one-half gallon of intoxicating liquor other than beer or 12 quarts or 24 pints of beer. Any person so transporting such intoxicating liquor shall, before the delivery of such package or parcel of intoxicating liquor, cancel said permit and so deface the same that it can not be used again. It shall be unlawful for any person to ship, carry, or transport any intoxicating liquor within the State without having attached thereto or to the package or parcel containing the same such permit, or to transport or ship under said permit an amount in excess of the amount or quantity hereinbefore limited. Any applicant desiring to have a permit issued to him under the terms hereof shall pay to the county auditor issuing the same the sum of 25 cents, which sum shall be accounted for by such auditor as other fees of his office. This section shall not apply to registered druggists or pharmacists actually engaged in business within the State.

SEC. 6262–16. One permit in 20 days: It shall be unlawful for any person to take out or have issued to him more than one permit, as provided for in the preceding section, in any 20-day period. This section shall not apply to registered druggists or pharmacists actually in business within the State.

Mr. President, it seems to me if we are going to have a regulation with reference to the amount which may be brought in for personal use, the provision in our State is a very good provision. Possibly it might be well, in view of suggestions made, that there should be some modification along the line suggested by the Senator from Mississippi in the amendment proposed, although I have not had time to examine the amendment carefully enough to see whether even that modification ought to be made. I simply read it to show what the proceeding is in our State, where we have passed a prohibitory measure, to allow liquor to be brought into the State for personal consumption.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when the statement of the Senator from Alabama was first made I was impressed with the force of his argument. I had not at that time carefully read the amendment. Since reading the amendment I do not think that the charge of a trap is a just charge as against this amendment. I do not believe that there is any reasonable ground for assuming that an innocent person would be punished under the amendment. If this kind of a limitation is to be had at all, I would have some difficulty myself in knowing how to draw an amendment which would more accurately express what the mover undoubtedly intends or which would more thoroughly protect anyone who desires to act in good faith under the law.

Let us see, Mr. President, for a moment, because I am not going to discuss it at length.

No person shall, nor shall more than one member of a family—

I presume that means a member of the family and not a servant or employee—

No person shall, nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house, have in his possession, receive, or accept delivery oftener than once a month from any railroad, steamboat, express company, or transportation company of any kind, or from any person whomsoever, any intoxicating liquors in excess of one quart of distilled liquor in a single container.

Then it goes on to describe the amount of liquor which he may have and the designation which must be placed upon the vessel or bottle containing it. Then it says:

And the consignee shall, before receiving the distilled liquor, wine, or beer sign a record as herein provided, and shall make an affidavit that the said distilled liquor, wine, or beer will not be used in violation of the provision of this act. A certified copy of such record shall be filed with the District Commissioners not later than the fifth day of each month for the calendar month preceding. Such commissioner shall keep a public record of such data as herein provided.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that a public record must be made by the member of the family who gets it, and in view of the fact that it is continually of public record and kept for consultation, and is limited to receiving it but once a month, and is open to inspection by anybody who wishes to know they are trespassing upon the law, I do not understand how you can more thoroughly meet a situation than that, if you are going to limit it at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say to the Senator that to understand the amendment thoroughly you have to read it in connection with the first section of the bill as now amended, which provides against the importation of it or even the giving of it away, except as provided in this proposed amendment. I am not sure the Senator is right in saying that a servant would not be held by the court to be a member of the family because under the common law he was recognized as a member of the family. I do not know how it would be in the District of Columbia. I am not prepared to pass an offhand judgment upon it. I think the probabilities are that servants would be treated by the court as members of the family if living under the same roof.

But there might be brothers living in the same family and house. Of course it might put the burden on a boy who wanted to buy a quart of liquor to find a certain public record to see whether the father had bought any that month; yet the probability is that neither of them would do it; that they would understand under the law that they had been invited by this law to provide a quart of liquor once a month if they wanted to do so. Then, when they had each bought it and brought it under the same rooftree and the court found them guilty of a violation of the terms of this law, the court would have no discretion to say: "Well, this was not done with malice; we will fine you a dollar"; the court must send each one to jail for not less than 30 days.

That is a very drastic proposition to put on the backs of any people. I do not know what the Senator wants to do in the District of Columbia, but if he was making a law for the people of Idaho I doubt very much whether he would make it so drastic.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have in our State a law which in my judgment is quite as drastic as the one which is now proposed for the District of Columbia. I should not knowingly undertake to put upon the people of the District of Columbia a law I would not be willing to vote upon the people of my own State. But we are dealing with a subject here which is of tremendous moment in the estimation of some people, and it obligates the citizen to take some care and caution with reference to the enforcement of the law as well as the public official.

It is not quite right to assume that the citizens are not going to use ordinary diligence and ordinary caution to ascertain whether they are violating the particular provisions of this law. One thing is absolutely certain, it seems to me, and the Senator will concede it, that if a man really desired to know whether he was trespassing upon the terms of the law there would be no difficulty about the place where he could find the fact, and there would be no question about the fact conveying to him the correct information when he got it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I recognize that this law does not require the officials to keep an alphabetical list; it does not require them to put the record where the public would come in contact with it. The record may go into the back file of a back office, not to be called on unless there is personal service.

Of course I realize thoroughly the purpose of the proponents of this measure. They want to make it as difficult as possible for a man to get a bottle of liquor; in other words, they are limiting his supply. Now, I say if they are going to do that, if the Webb-Kenyon bill is constitutional, and that is to be passed upon soon, then it is constitutional to say that no liquor shall be brought into this District; and if the Webb-Kenyon law is not constitutional, then the provisions will not stand the test in court.

From that standpoint I say it is very much fairer to the public to give them notice that they can not bring it in at all. Do not give a boy in this District a chance to fall into the penitentiary by something that may be the law, but is not brought to his face, where he can see it. If you are going to let these people have a quart of liquor, put the responsibility on the individual. That is the only fair way to do it.

Mr. BORAH. The responsibility is on the individual.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And do not put it on other people.

Mr. BORAH. The responsibility is here, in my judgment, upon the individual.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a responsibility he possibly can not obtain and will not obtain.

Mr. BORAH. That is the point exactly. When the Senator says he will not obtain it, that is precisely what we are trying to prevent. We are trying to prevent any man from bringing it in who will not obtain the information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator this: I do not know of any man I serve with who has more legislative courage than the Senator I am addressing now, but I say if he stands for a provision of this kind, to keep a man from drinking liquor, he has the courage to say he must not drink it. Do not leave the bill with this trap in it, where some boy of good character and high standing may think he is invited by the bill to go and buy his quart of liquor and then trip him into the penitentiary.

Mr. BORAH. If the proposition were being submitted by the Senator from Idaho, he might submit it differently. The law which we have upon the statute books of our State, which I advocated, prohibits the possession of liquor upon the part of the individual.

But the only thing I rose to say was that it seems to me if there is going to be any limitation at all—and those who have charge of the measure think that that is essential to the first step in the progress of this legislation—I do not believe that the Senator, upon reflection, will conclude that there is very much danger of a man, who really wants to know the law, violating it, because there is the public record, and besides he does not have to look over a very large list.

Take a family of four or five, or five or six people, any member of the family who wants to know whether another member of the family has purchased it may find it in two minutes. He may call up over the telephone and get the information from the gentleman who holds the register. I greatly doubt, Mr. President, if very much liquor would ever come into the family at all without the knowledge of the other members of the family under this law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not sure about that proposition, but I am sure a great many of the younger members of the community and a great many others do not understand it; they do not read the law and know what is in the law; they do not know the terms of the law. Although the law itself charges them with the knowledge of it and finds them guilty if they do not know it, they do not investigate it. I may say that your son and my son might not take care to investigate what the law is. A great many people do not have the opportunity, they do not have the knowledge, to understand the law. You invite them; you tell them they are entitled to buy a quart of liquor, and it will leave a trap open there; somebody else in the family may have done the same thing; and if he has done it you send him to the penitentiary. That is not fair. It is not a fair proposition to put in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think there is a very fulsome invitation in this bill to buy liquor on the part of anybody.

No person shall, nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house, have in his possession, receive, or accept delivery oftener than once a month.

It then throws around it certain precautions and restrictions which are rather an invitation to let it alone than to buy it. I can not believe that anyone would be seriously misled who desired really to know the fact upon which he was proceeding.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas regarding section 6, which refers specifically to ambassadors and ministers of foreign countries living here. I should like to ask the Senator where that proposition came from? Such a provision has never been inserted in our laws before. Have we been memorialized by any nation? Are they expected to surrender the right they have always exercised under international law and the custom of nations? Will they be amenable to this law? If not, we had better not attempt to deal with a situation which we may not be able to control.

Mr. SHEPPARD. An exception is made as to ambassadors and ministers, and also as to ministers of the gospel.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The exception is made, and you require the ambassador or minister to go to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and get affirmative authority before he can take liquor into his embassy or legation. Is the Senator sure we can enforce this regulation?

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contend that we have not authority to require the ambassadors of foreign countries to comply with the general law with reference to the importation of liquor into the entire District of Columbia?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I seriously doubt whether if he comes into the possession of liquor lawfully under our laws we can take it away from him.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but this all relates to the question of importing a certain quantity of liquor into the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I seriously doubt whether we can hold them responsible in our courts for any infraction of the law. Suppose this is for personal use?

Mr. BORAH. Suppose it is for his personal use.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not saying that to give emphasis to the suggestion that ambassadors and ministers need this privilege. For my own part, I think the reference is more of a criticism than a compliment.

Mr. BORAH. I do not really think that there is any reason to accentuate this matter. I do not think its enforcement would result seriously.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think not, and I simply raise the question whether it should be in the bill at all. Has it been petitioned for?

Mr. BORAH. No; but perhaps the courtesy could be extended without a petition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It could be; but the question is whether it would be acceptable. They have certain rights, certain privileges, which follow them as ambassadors of sovereign and independent States. They come here clothed with extraordinary authority, and I am not quite sure that, when they come into possession of liquor lawfully and it is a part of their household effects in the District of Columbia, we have any power whatever to regulate its use.

Mr. BORAH. One thing seems reasonably clear, and that is that we have power to legislate generally for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; undoubtedly that is very clear; but does the Senator from Idaho think we could reach the personal property of ambassadors?

Mr. BORAH. No; neither are we undertaking to do it. We are passing a general law in reference to the importation of liquor into the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. An offender against that law is to be apprehended by the authorities.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose we would have it settled by correspondence.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We might write a letter and the liquor would all disappear long before the answer came.

I am just wondering where this proposition came from. I am not the spokesman of the ambassadorial corps, and I do not arrogate to myself any intimate knowledge of their intention or desire, but I seriously question whether we have not affronted them by singling them out for a special reference in this bill. I wonder whether the act would not fail and become absolutely impotent as to them, if this property which is sought to be branded with disfavor by our laws is held under their own flag.

Mr. BORAH. Let us suppose that the Senator is correct in his proposition that if an ambassador had more liquor than was allowed him——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Inside or out?

Mr. BORAH. Inside or out—and as to that portion of the law it would fail; that would not affect the balance of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not think it would affect the statute as a whole, but it would be an attempt to do something which really we ought not to attempt to do unless we have the power to enforce obedience.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt that if the Senator from Michigan has an amendment in preference which would more thoroughly protect ambassadors it will be acceptable.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My suggestion would be to strike out all reference to the representatives of foreign nations in section 6.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator wants to move that amendment we will take a vote on it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask the Senator from Texas to consider this suggestion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Chair will pardon me just one moment before I yield, I really think, so far as practical results are concerned, we are undertaking to do something which we may not be competent to do and that we may find ourselves in a situation where the law we are making, in so far as it applies to an accredited representative of a foreign State in this Capital, has no effect whatever; and if that is so, I would rather not see it in the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I wish to state to the Senator that this exception was proposed by the committee. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was intended as a courtesy, probably.

Mr. JONES. It was not intended exactly as a courtesy, but it was put in in recognition of the possible foreign territorial rights of these ambassadors within their residence here. It was put in, it seems to me, to meet the very suggestion the Senator presents. As I understand the Senator, he doubts if we could make the terms of this law apply to ambassadors.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do.

Mr. JONES. That is exactly the objection we desire to avoid. We do not include them under the term "any person," as they would be included if we left out this reference and just left the general language of the amendment stand that any person in the District of Columbia who desires liquor shall do so-and-so and that no person can bring in more than so much at a certain time. If we use that general language, it would cover ambassadors and everybody in the District of Columbia. So the committee, in order to meet some possible objection of this kind, that we were trying to make the law apply to these people, put in this exception, although we do require them to apply to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If I understand the Senator——

Mr. JONES. If there is any serious objection, of course, to referring to these people I do not think there will be any trouble about cutting out that language.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did I understand the Senator to say that it was the desire of the committee that a way should be pointed out whereby special favor should be shown ambassadors and ministers?

Mr. JONES. No; that is not correct. We were not trying to point out anything to the ambassadors.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me state it the other way, then. It was the desire of the committee that this class of citizens, temporarily resident here and performing official duties for their country, should not be included in the limitations of the bill?

Mr. JONES. Well, the committee——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The point I make is this, and I think I am right about it. I do not want to assert it too strongly, but I think I am right in saying that an attempt to pass a law affecting the liberty of an ambassador accredited to this Capital would fail of its accomplishment. While he is accredited to our country he lives under his own flag and is responsible to his own Government.

Mr. BORAH. To a limited extent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; probably. I am not saying that he could violate with impunity the criminal laws of the country, but I do say that if you undertake to hold him responsible under our laws you have to be very sure that you do not encounter the well-recognized principle of international law that he is living on his own soil, and is therefore amenable only to his own country.

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. President, it was that very idea that led the committee to insert this amendment. We had not fully examined the authorities with reference to the obligations or the liabilities of foreign ministers, and we thought there possibly might be the very situation which the Senator suggests. This provision, I repeat, was inserted to meet that very proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The amendment now pending does not involve the question which we are at present discussing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the Secretary may again state the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, after the word "manufacture," it is proposed to insert the following:

> For sale or gift, import for sale, import for use or gift, except as hereinafter provided, store, keep, deposit, or give away, except as hereinafter provided.

Mr. SHEPPARD. These are merely verbal amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the amendment is voted on I desire to ask the Senator from Texas—I asked him some questions the other day about the exporting of alcohol from the District—what change has his amendment had on that situation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have put the word "export" in section 1, so as affirmatively to permit exports out of the District of Columbia or shipments from the District of Columbia. I have another amendment providing that a record be kept by the transportation companies and by the manufacturers in order that the authorities of the District of Columbia may keep in constant touch with all liquor that is so exported.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator proposes to allow liquor to be exported?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do so propose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For what purpose?

Mr. SHEPPARD. For purposes other than those prohibited in the bill; that is, for scientific, medicinal, pharmaceutical, mechanical, sacramental, or other nonbeverage purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You propose to limit the exportation of liquor from the District to those purposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. To purposes other than beverage purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it is exported for beverage purposes——

Mr. SHEPPARD. It would be a violation of the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In what way does the Senator's amendment protect that clause?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have not yet reached that part of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before voting on this amendment, I desired to get the information; that was all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The amendment we are now considering merely inserts the word "export," in section 1, so as to permit exportation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Alabama asked the Senator from Texas what amendment had been made to section 1 of the bill which prohibits the exportation of alcohol, and I suggested that it ought to be read, if the Senator from Alabama so desires.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have the information before we pass upon this amendment, because this relates to the subject matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Shall I read the amendment which I intend to offer later in this connection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The proposed amendment is to add a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 5a. That every licensed manufacturer of alcoholic liquor not herein prohibited shall keep a permanent record of all sales and shipments of alcoholic liquor. Such record shall set forth the following information: The name of the consignee or purchaser, the quantity of liquor, the express company or other carrier by which such liquor was shipped, the date of sale or shipment, and the purpose of the purchase as set forth in the affidavit accompanying the order. Each common or special carrier of alcoholic liquors within the District shall keep a record as above provided, and a certified copy of such record with a copy of the affidavits shall be filed with the District Commissioners not later than the 5th day of each month for the calendar month preceding. No shipment of alcoholic liquors shall be made until the purchaser signs an affidavit that such alcoholic liquors are not purchased for nor will such liquors be used or sold by the consignee for beverage purposes. The District Commissioners shall keep a public record of such sales, shipments, and affidavits, alphabetically arranged. Copies of the affidavit shall be attached permanently at the end of the record of each shipment or sale, and to each package containing liquor until delivered to the consignee. Any violation of this section shall be deemed a misdemeanor and be subject to the same penalties as provided in section 1 of this act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is that affidavit to be made by the man who orders and receives the liquor or by the man who ships it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The purchaser is required to file an affidavit with the manufacturer here in the District.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if I understand the matter, if the amendment of the Senator from Texas, which is now pending, is adopted, it will inject into the bill a provision that no person shall import for use or gift into the District of Columbia any liquor except as provided in an amendment which the Senator proposes later on to offer?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And that that amendment will restrict any person from importing or keeping in his house or from purchasing more than the quantity of liquor which the Senator from Texas thinks he should use in the course of a month?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Well, the law prescribes what he shall use and what I think the limit should be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas how he has qualified as an expert?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Solely from observation. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by Mr. SHEPPARD was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "manufacture," to strike out the words "store, or deposit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by Mr. SHEPPARD was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "barter," to insert "export, ship out of the District of Columbia," so that it will read:

Sell, offer for sale, keep for sale, traffic in, barter, export, ship out of the District of Columbia, or exchange for goods or merchandise, or solicit or receive orders for the purchase of any alcoholic liquors.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I can not understand what animus the Senator from Texas has in trying to place an embargo upon the export of liquor. What I thought the Senator desired was to get rid of the liquor. Now, in God's name, let them export it, if that is what the Senator wants.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We permit its exportation for other than beverage purposes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Why should the Senator presume to regulate conditions in Maryland or in Virginia or in New Jersey or anywhere else?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Regulations like these are good for the people everywhere.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from Texas, I will say, Mr. President, is not big enough to be the guardian of the whole universe.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am making an honest effort to help my part of the universe, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And I trust the Senator will fail in that effort.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to dissent most emphatically from the suggestion that this bill is simply the will or caprice of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] or of any other Senator. It is proposed to be the legislative judgment or will of the Congress of the United States enacted in the interest of humanity, for the purpose of restricting the most damnable evil with which the human race is afflicted to-day. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Texas is not playing the rôle of guardian for the American people any more than any legislator in any State of the Republic who voted for a prohibition law is the censor of the morals of the people of that State.

I shall vote for the bill because I believe that traffic in whisky is contrary to the best interests of the American people. I believe the use of intoxicating liquors is deleterious to the human body. It lowers the morals, it destroys the physical strength, it has made more lunatics and idiots, it has filled the jails with more criminals, and it has caused more poverty and distress than has any other evil with which the human race has to contend. My judgment about that is the sober judgment of the American people. You can not answer the argument for prohibition with a sneer, nor can you defend the saloon with a bald and unsupported assertion.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi presumes to stand as the guardian of humanity. I desire to say that he has no more humanitarianism in his sentiments and in his heart than have I, and I deny the Senator the right to declare what is best for humanity from his standpoint, any more than I can from mine.

I say that the evil of this so-called prohibition legislation is that it tends to make men hypocrites and infinite liars. That has proved to be the case in every community where it exists. It has made liars by the millions in Mississippi, in Texas, and in every one of the prohibition States. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, I am not trying to act as guardian for my friend, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. I would not do that for all the money in the world. Really I would not deny him a single drink for any consideration if he were thirsty. I am not trying to act the guardian for anybody. I am simply trying to do my duty as a legislator. As to whether or not prohibition makes liars I will not dispute with my friend, for I do not know. I have no information on that subject.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, now; that is a very unfortunate and very ridiculous reference. I am not ashamed of my habits; I have never been ashamed of them in my life. I will place myself on a parallel with the Senator from Mississippi on every question, whatever it may be—social, moral, political, or otherwise. I say the Senator is utterly out of order in making such a reference, and it would be within my right, I think, to call him to order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from New Jersey is unnecessarily excited.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not at all excited, but I mean to maintain my rights, and I do not mean that special personal reference shall be made to me any more than I might make such references to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from New Jersey has charged me with trying to regulate the morals of the country. He acts and speaks as though I was trying, or desired, to prescribe his private personal conduct.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. You said that you were regulating humanity.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I did not. I deny saying anything of the kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will address the Chair before interrupting.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I deny saying anything of the kind. I said I was not; but I resented the statement that this bill was the imperious will of the distinguished Senator from Texas. Why, I do not believe that there is a man in this Chamber who is as utterly devoid of malice and meanness and those things that make men unlovely as is the Senator from New Jersey. I think he is the loveliest, dearest old soul in all Israel.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is very kind of the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senator misunderstands me altogether. He has gotten excited here about nothing.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, no; hold yourself; I am not excited.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am as cool as a cucumber. I never get excited; there is nothing about this bill to excite me. I have not the slightest apprehension regarding it. It is not going to deny me anything that I want. I am not at all uneasy about it. I simply am hoping that I may do something for my fellow man in the enactment of legislation which the judgment of the world has pronounced wise and beneficent.

Why, the peoples of Europe have seen the wisdom of this step. Russia has gone under a prohibitory law. The great Kaiser of Germany said in the beginning of this war that in the wars to be fought in the future victory would be on the side of the people who drank the least alcoholic liquor. One of the leading English statesmen has stated that the greatest enemy that England had to fight in this war was intoxicating liquor. Oh, no; I am not excited; I am simply advocating here, with love for all my fellow men and malice toward none, and especially my good friend from New Jersey, for, God bless his soul, I would not say anything to offend him for anything in the world; I would not do anything to offend him, and I did not take offense when he said that I was playing the rôle of censor and regulator of the morals of the country. I am not doing that; I am simply voting my own individual judgment about a question that has received the most patriotic, intelligent, searching scrutiny and investigation of the great minds of the world. All the great doctors say that the liquor traffic is an injury to the human race; all the great scientists agree that it is an insidious, deadly poison and ought to be fought; and we know that in communities where whisky is not sold there is the least amount of crime, there are fewer broken hearts and blighted lives than in any other parts of the country. Oh, no; I am not trying to restrict or abridge anybody's rights at all, except the man who would coin human souls into dollars for his selfish private gain, and especially do I want my friend from New Jersey to understand that in that I am in no way trying to regulate him, but I am trying to regulate the whisky traffic in the interests of the American people.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator is not trying to regulate me, Mr. President, but he is trying to regulate the rest of the world.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I merely rise to say that I am in sympathy with this bill and shall support it. I should be glad to see it passed and be glad to see it the law of the District of Columbia. I should be glad to see its beneficent provisions extended to the United States and to the world.

The evidence with regard to the evil of this traffic is so notorious and so well established that it is unnecessary now to debate it. One State of the Union after another has declared in favor of prohibition, and even those States which have it not have by counties innumerable declared in favor of it after they have had opportunity to pass judgment on this traffic. The States which have declared for it are chiefly injured and affected by the States which have not, those States being centers from which this traffic extends itself into States where the people have voted against it.

The experience of every man in his own life is practically the same. I have myself seen men whom I loved ruined by this traffic; I have seen families in which I was deeply interested ruined by it. I received a letter yesterday morning from a mother appealing to me in behalf of her son whose life was being jeoparded by this evil. I am glad to see this bill before the Senate. I hope it is the judgment of the Senate that it shall pass.

I am not in favor of a referendum to the people of the District on this question. The Senate of the United States and the Congress of the United States represent the mature judgment of the people of the United States. If, however, a referendum is taken upon this subject at all, then it ought to be taken by the people of the District of Columbia, not by the men alone, but by the women as well, because a woman has a right to defend her own life, her own son, her own brother, her own husband, against this evil traffic. She has a right to life, to liberty, and to the pursuit of happiness. So, if a referendum is taken, I favor the proposed amendment of the Senator from Indiana, that women shall have a right to vote upon this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not like this part of the bill to pass without a further understanding as to the exportation of liquor from the District. It may not relate directly to this portion of the bill where the amendment comes in. As I understand, the amendment now being considered is in line 8, page 1, of the bill. Am I correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "barter" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "export, ship out of the District of Columbia."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to certain situations in reference to the export of liquor from the District. Possibly the Senator from Texas has fully met the situation, but I am not sure that he has done so. I think that if this bill passes it ought to pass so that we can have absolute equality under its terms.

I noticed when this bill was submitted last year a statement in the Washington Times, which I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Times of Jan. 30, 1916.]

FOES OF LIQUOR MAY EXEMPT CORBY PLANT—ANTISALOON LEAGUE OFFICIALS TO CONSIDER EFFECT OF "DRY" BILL ON FACTORY—AGAINST ONLY BEVERAGES—WILL INVESTIGATE MANUFACTURE OF GRAIN ALCOHOL IN THE INDUSTRY.

The effect of Senator SHEPPARD'S bill providing for prohibition in the District upon the Corby Co.'s yeast factory at Langdon, a $2,000,000 industry, will be looked into at once by Andrew Wilson, president of the Antisaloon League of the District, and Albert E. Shoemaker, the league's attorney.

They will consider, after conference with prohibition leaders, the advisability of backing an amendment permitting the manufacture of grain alcohol here for mechanical and scientific purposes.

RECOGNIZED IN BILL.

This announcement was made this afternoon following the announcement by the Times that the Sheppard bill would result in closing up the Corby plant, which sells alcohol, produced as a by-product, under the restriction that it be not used for beverage purposes.

Entire ignorance of the fact that grain alcohol was manufactured as a by-product of yeast making at the Langdon factory was professed both by Mr. Wilson and by Mr. Shoemaker. They said the need for alcohol for mechanical, scientific, and, in wines, for sacramental purposes was recognized in the bill, which permits its importation for those purposes. But they admitted entire ignorance that the Corby Co. sold alcohol, as well as fusel oil, vinegar, and other by-products derived from the making of yeast.

"While I would not favor excepting one plant from the provisions of the bill," said Mr. Shoemaker, "I believe we should look into the advisability of permitting the making of alcohol here for purposes other than beverages. The intent of the bill, as indicated by its making exceptions in the case of wood alcohol and denatured alcohol and in the importation of alcohol for mechanical and scientific purposes and wine for sacramental use, was simply to prohibit the use of alcohol for beverages.

NO MEDICINAL VALUE.

"How widespread is the manufacture of grain alcohol here I do not know. We did know that there are no distilleries here, and I had no idea that grain alcohol was manufactured by the Corby Co., or by anyone else."

Mr. Wilson said he had not known of the production of alcohol by the Corby Co. So far as the sale of alcohol for medicinal purposes is concerned, Mr. Wilson said, the league is opposed to any exceptions on that ground.

"It has been shown conclusively," Mr. Wilson said, "by a long series of experiments by a noted expert that alcohol can have no medicinal value. To permit its manufacture or its importation on that pretext would be to nullify any prohibition measure."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have another article from the same paper on a subsequent day in relation to this matter, which I also ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Times of Feb. 2, 1916.]

EXEMPT CORBY PLANT FROM DRY-BILL SCOPE—OFFICIALS OF ANTISALOON LEAGUE DECIDE BAN WOULD BE UNFAIR TO MANUFACTURERS.

The Sheppard District prohibition bill will be amended so as to exempt the manufacture of pure grain alcohol by the Corby Co. at its yeast plant in Langdon, D. C.

Announcement of this fact was made to-day by Albert E. Shoemaker, attorney for the Antisaloon League.

"At a meeting of the advisory or legislative committee of the Antisaloon League yesterday this decision was reached," said Mr. Shoemaker. "We feel that justice and fair play dictate such an amendment, and it will be made. The amendment will be entirely agreeable to our committee and members who are aware of the facts, and it will also be agreeable to Senator SHEPPARD, patron of the bill, and other Senators and Congressmen pledged to support the bill."

DETAILS ARE UNDECIDED.

Section 1 of the Sheppard bill classes pure grain alcohol as an alcoholic beverage, the manufacture and sale of which is prohibited, while section 2 prohibits the manufacture of pure grain alcohol by not exempting it.

Although the amendments have not yet been made, it is understood the words "pure grain alcohol" will be stricken out of section 1, and the words "ethyl alcohol," another name for pure grain alcohol, will be inserted in section 2.

Attorney Shoemaker's statement, issued for the Antisaloon League, and setting forth the reasons for making the changes in the bill, follows:

"The Antisaloon League has given consideration to the protest of the Corby Co. against a provision in the Sheppard-Barkley bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which, it seems, if enacted into law, would seriously injure its business of marketing grain alcohol, a by-product of its yeast manufactory.

"The company has satisfied the league that its alcohol products are sold exclusively for mechanical and scientific purposes, and that approximately 90 per cent of the output is disposed of outside the District.

HOPES FOR SUPPRESSION.

"In supporting the Sheppard-Barkley bill the league hopes to suppress, so far as possible, the beverage liquor traffic in the District. It recognizes the fact that there is a legitimate and unobjectionable use for alcohol for mechanical and scientific purposes. The bill as introduced in Congress and as reported to the Senate recognized the fact, for provision is therein made for the importation and sale of grain alcohol. But the league also recognized the fact that ethyl alcohol is the basis of all alcoholic liquors used for beverage purposes, and so, in order to secure a measure that will prove effective in suppressing the beverage liquor traffic and reducing to a minimum the consumption of alcoholic liquors, favored the provision in section 2 of the bill, which provides for the importation and sale of grain alcohol, but provides against the manufacture of it in the District.

"However, when it has been made clear that the Corby Co. manufactures alcohol for the purposes above stated only, the league is of the opinion that an unnecessary injustice would be done the company if the bill should become a law without an amendment which will permit it to continue the manufacture of alcohol for the purposes specified. It is believed that such an amendment will be acceptable to the friends of the bill in Congress and to the friends and supporters of prohibition everywhere, and will in no wise weaken the bill.

"Neither the league nor the sponsors for the bill in Congress were aware that the Corby Co. was making alcohol until after it was reported to the Senate, and, of course, no injustice was intended. The sole purpose of the league in connection with the pending legislation is to secure an effective, workable law prohibiting the beverage liquor traffic in the District, believing that such a law will be approved by a large majority of the citizens."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think the responsibility of drafting this law rests in effect on the proponents of it; but I believe in fair play. When this bill in its original form was brought before the Congress last summer it prohibited the exportation of alcohol from the District of Columbia. The Corby Co. is a legitimate company, making yeast. It manufactures alcohol as a by-product. It manufactures alcohol that is perfectly good alcohol, drinkable alcohol, and a very high-grade alcohol, that can be used for cordials or making whisky or any other purpose. If the bill had passed as it was originally introduced here and proposed by the District Committee, it would have put the Corby Co. out of the business of making alcohol in the District; and I am told by Mr. Corby himself—because I want to state this proposition perfectly fairly—that it might have put him entirely out of business. It seems from his statement that he has but one main competitor, and that is the Fleischmann Yeast Co. Out of their by-product they make alcohol. Out of his by-product he makes alcohol. I judge from his statement to me that if you take away from him the right to make alcohol it may seriously affect his ability to compete. Therefore he appealed to the Antisaloon League of the District of Columbia to exempt him from the terms of the Sheppard bill, and they agreed to exempt him from the terms of the Sheppard bill, and it was that exemption which I called to the attention of the Senator from Texas the other day—the fact that he was exempted.

There is a brewery in this town. This bill proposes to confiscate the property of that brewery without payment. It takes away the property. No more beer can be manufactured, no more can be exported, because it is not alcohol and does not come within the terms of the amended bill. Of course, there are many hotels in this town that are equipped with barrooms that probably cost them thousands of dollars. If this bill passes, their property will be confiscated without payment by the District of Columbia. But under the terms of this amendment the Antisaloon League, in proposing the amendment the other day, exempted the Corby Co. entirely from the terms of this bill and allowed it to go on and attend to its business, making alcohol and selling it.

I have in my hand some letters that I desire to call to the attention of the Senate before this amendment of the Senator from Texas is passed on. The one I have here has a picture of the Corby Yeast Co. in the corner. The title head is "The Corby Co., manufacturers of U. S. P. grain alcohol, cologne spirits, denatured alcohol, fusel oil. Station K, Washington, D. C., July 8, 1915."

The letter is directed to the Wilson Distilling Co., Baltimore, Md., and reads:

GENTLEMEN: We very much appreciate your postal in answer to our letter in reference to alcohol, and thank you for same.

We will mail you quotations on alcohol, to reach you not later than Monday, July 26, for delivery after August 1. Please bear in mind that the goods which we shall offer you will be of the highest grades obtainable. Full satisfaction guaranteed. Orders that you send us will have our prompt and personal attention.

Yours, very truly,

THE CORBY CO.,
By W. S. CORBY, President.

Let me say that Mr. Corby has informed me that that is not his signature, but it was signed by his sales agent with his authority, so that it was sent by the authority of the Corby Co. to the Wilson Distilling Co.

The Wilson Distilling Co. on July 2 answered that letter, as follows:

The CORBY Co.,
Station K, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Replying to your favor of the 1st, please take this matter up with us about the end of this month.

Yours, very truly,

THE WILSON DISTILLING CO.

Signed by the assistant secretary and treasurer.

Then, I also have a letter on the letterhead of the Corby Co., dated July 1, 1915, to the Wilson Distilling Co., Baltimore, Md. It is as follows:

GENTLEMEN: For five years we have sold our production of alcohol to A. L. Webb & Sons, Baltimore.

We are going to market the same direct to the trade. If you have purchased alcohol from the above-named firm you have no doubt used alcohol of our manufacture. Our alcohol is made from grain of the highest grade, and our distilling apparatus is so scientifically designed that the separation of the fusel oils and aldehyde is positively fixed, regardless of the judgment of the operator, thereby giving a uniform distillate of 99.997 pure ethyl alcohol—

A very high grade.

We are not connected with any combinations or agreements on prices, hence we are in a position to name an attractive price. We will make deliveries on and after August 1. If you will advise us in what quantity you purchase, or if you contract for your requirements for a certain period, we will appreciate the privilege of quoting you. We shall try in every honorable way to warrant at least a part of your requirements, which will have our personal attention. Our representative will call on you in the near future, and we will greatly appreciate any consideration that you may show him.

Very truly, yours,

THE CORBY CO.,
By W. S. CORBY, President.

They stated:

For five years we have sold our production of alcohol to A. L. Webb & Sons, Baltimore.

I have here the letterhead of A. L. Webb & Sons, and it says:

A. L. Webb & Sons (Inc.). Alcohol, Cologne and Velvet Spirits, Wood and Denatured Alcohol. 115 and 117 East Lombard St., Baltimore, Md.

According to their statement they had been selling to A. L. Webb & Sons, who were sellers of alcohol. They offered to sell to the Wilson Distilling Co.

I hold in my hand another letter, dated July 2, directed to C. H. Ross & Co., Baltimore, Md., and this reads:

GENTLEMEN: For five years we have sold our production of alcohol to A. L. Webb & Sons, Baltimore.

We are going to market same direct to the trade. If you have purchased alcohol from the above-named firm, you have no doubt used alcohol of our manufacture. Our alcohol is made from grain of the highest grade, and our distilling apparatus is so scientifically designed that the separation of the fusel oils and aldehyde is positively fixed, regardless of the judgment of the operator, thereby giving a uniform distillate of 99.997 pure ethyl alcohol.

We are not connected with any combinations or agreements on prices, hence believe we are in a position to name an attractive price. We will make deliveries on and after August 1. If you will advise us in what quantity you purchase, or if you contract for your requirements for a certain period, we will appreciate the privilege of quoting you.

We shall try in every honorable way to warrant at least a part of your requirements, which will have our personal attention. Our representative will call on you in the near future, and we will greatly appreciate any consideration that you may show him.

Very truly, yours,

THE CORBY CO.,

I have investigated in Dun's Directory, and I find that C. H. Ross & Co. are liquor dealers and rectifiers in Baltimore.

After I quizzed the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] on last Friday in reference to the question as to why he proposed to penalize other men engaged in the liquor business in Washington and proposed to exempt certain persons making alcohol for the export trade, Mr. Corby, the president of this company, having read it in the paper, came to see me personally. He stated that these letters were by his firm, signed in his name, though not by himself personally, but by his agent, who was authorized to sign them. He stated that he was a prohibitionist, that he did not believe in selling alcohol for beverage purposes, that he did not propose to do so, and had been opposed to doing it in the past. He stated to me that he had not made a sale to these men to whom he had offered his goods for sale. I do not mean to A. L. Webb & Sons, because he admitted that he had sold for a number of years to A. L. Webb & Sons, but I mean to the Ross Co. and the Wilson Distilling Co. He asked me not to use these letters. I refused to comply with his request, because I thought the Senate ought to be advised on this question, but I said I would try to treat him fairly if I did use them. At a subsequent date he brought me an affidavit from the man who actually signed the letter. I thought I had it in my hand, but I see I have not, and I shall have to look for it among these papers, if the Senate will pardon me for a moment. [A pause.] Mr. President, I thought when I rose from my seat that I had that affidavit in my hand with these other papers. I certainly did not take it out of this pile of papers, and I can not find it here now.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I was furnished with a copy of the affidavit, and I shall be glad to hand it to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall be very glad if the Senator will send it to the desk and let it be read, because I want to make a full statement of the facts.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I send the affidavit to the desk, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the affidavit.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, ss:

Howard E. Griffith, having been first duly sworn, upon oath deposes and says that he is employed by the Corby Co. at Langdon, D. C.; that the said Corby Co. is engaged in the manufacture of yeast, which is sold and used throughout the United States.

Affiant further says that he has been for 22 years engaged in the business of selling alcohol to the trade; that on the 1st day of July, 1915, he became employed by the Corby Co. as a salesman of alcohol, which is a by-product, produced by said company from the manufacture of yeast; that at the time affiant became employed with the said Corby Co. he compiled a list of names of persons and corporations of whom he knew from past experience in this territory were purchasers of alcohol; that he suggested to and receive the consent of Mr. W. S. Corby, president of the Corby Co., to make an announcement of the fact that said company proposed thereafter to solicit and market their product direct to the trade, which affiant did on July 2, 1915, to approximately 500 establishments, whose names appeared upon said list; that possibly 400 replies were received thereto requesting quotation; that owing to the number of such inquiries a second letter was prepared and mailed on July 9, 1915, stating that quotations would be made not later than July 26, 1915; that in pursuance thereof a third circular letter was mailed on July 24, 1915; that while this action was done with the consent and approval of the said W. S. Corby, the said Corby did not examine the said list, but relied entirely upon affiant, who knew that the said company restricted the sale of its alcohol for nonbeverage purposes, but he assumed that there was no objection to solicit the parties whose names appeared thereon, provided that it was not for use as a beverage; affiant knew that the concerns on said list purchased alcohol for sale and use for other than beverages; that as to the name of the Wilson Distilling Co., which appeared upon said list and who received the said circular announcement and, having replied thereto, received the two circular follow-up letters, affiant states that he did not then believe, nor does he now believe, that they use alcohol in the manufacture of liquors disposed of by them as a beverage, nor does he believe that they will or can honestly admit that they use it for such purposes.

Affiant further says that he personally knows that the said W. S. Corby and the Corby Co. are absolutely opposed to the sale of alcohol to any person or corporation where the same is to be used in any alcoholic beverages. Affiant further says that the sales of alcohol by the Corby Co. have been restricted absolutely for use in hospitals and in the manufacture of medicines, tinctures, extracts, and in the arts and sciences, and for any other use than as a beverage.

Affiant states most emphatically that, acting under the direction of said company, he has absolutely refused to sell alcohol where he thought that it was proposed to use the same as a beverage; and affiant further states that he is the sole agent of that commodity for the company, and that to the best of his ability he has endeavored to carry out the instructions of his employer in that regard.

HOWARD E. GRIFFITH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 11th day of December, A. D. 1916.

[SEAL.] LLOYD A. DOUGLASS,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I find that Bradstreet's Commercial Directory of Bankers, Merchants, and Manufacturers for September, 1915, shows the following:

At Baltimore, Md., C. H. Ross & Co. are listed as wholesale liquor dealers.

At Baltimore, Md., the Wilson Distilling Co. are listed as wholesale dealers.

Bradstreet's Directory is the usual source from which business men obtain their information as to the financial standing and business in which other men are engaged.

But I am not here to criticize the Antisaloon League for attempting to exempt the Corby Manufacturing Co. from the terms of this bill. I am not here to criticize Mr. Corby for attempting to sell the product of his factory as long as it was lawful for him to do so. I think, though, that this demonstrates conclusively that if Mr. Corby did not sell to the liquor trade it is possible for an alcohol-making establishment in the District of Columbia to sell to the liquor trade, which was exempted under the terms of this bill until I called attention to the fact.

I am not sure that the amendment of the Senator from Texas remedies this matter. He proposes an amendment saying that no alcohol shall be exported from the District of Columbia except within the terms of this bill. Those terms say that it shall be exported only for mechanical, medicinal, scientific, and other nonbeverage purposes. Of course, that covers everything except a man drinking it. He provides that the man who orders alcohol must make an affidavit that he is not going to use it for beverage purposes, or, in other words, that he is going to use it for these nonbeverage purposes. So good. He may buy it. The Wilson Distilling Co. may buy it if they make that affidavit, and they may sell this same alcohol to me to wash surgical instruments in a hospital, and then, when I have bought it for that purpose from the fellow that made the affidavit he is in no danger of the law. I can sell it to John Smith, Jim Jones, or anybody I please, to drink it.

I am not saying that Congress should forfeit Mr. Corby's property under this bill without paying for it. That is where I fall out with you gentlemen. I do not believe you are doing the fair thing. Instead of opening this door as you are attempting to do under the law to save Mr. Corby's establishment, if you really mean what you say, and mean that the sale of alcohol is an injury to the American people, that it is something that this country has to be protected against, then have the courage of your convictions and do what every other civilized Government in this world has done under these circumstances—go pay Corby for his plant, instead of permitting him to sell the product of that plant throughout the United States to other people. Go put a provision in your bill that if it goes into effect you will buy his plant and pay for it.

Why, every other great Government except that of the United States has done that. When the French people prohibited the manufacture and sale of absinthe in France, did they penalize the man that had been making it before that time, a business that they had invited men into by taxing them and making it legitimate? Did they penalize them? No. They appointed a commission and paid them for the property which they took away from them. You are recognizing that principle in this bill. You are recognizing here, or attempting to recognize, the principle—the Antisaloon League is, because this originated with them, if the newspaper clippings that I have had read at the desk are true, and I understand they are. You are recognizing the principle by saying to Mr. Corby, "We will give you a door to sell your products. We are not going to take your plant." But there are other plants in the District of Columbia to which you are not saying that. You are not saying that to this brewer down here. You propose to confiscate their property, to take it away from them, to destroy it absolutely, and the property of everybody else that is engaged in this District in this business, which you have recognized as legitimate. For 50 years you have had the arm of the Federal Government in their treasury, taking the income on which your Government lived, and now you have not the courage to go to the American people and say, "If we do this, we are willing to pay the price."

Other great Governments have done it. In Switzerland, when they wiped out absinthe and said their people should not manufacture it or use it, they paid for it. You are not proposing to pay the price here. You are proposing to confiscate the property of certain people because you condemn them, although you recognized them as within the law before you passed this bill; but when you find your favorite you give him the door out to protect his property.

If you want to go to the American people with this bill in that shape, it is your responsibility. You take it and go. So far as I am concerned, I say your proposition is not a square deal all around.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the merits of either the bill or any pending amendment. It so happens that I have an unavoidable engagement which takes me from the Senate Chamber to-morrow and possibly the day following, and I should dislike to have anybody believe that I am doing what is popularly known as "ducking" on an important question of this character. For that reason I am availing myself of the privilege of putting into the RECORD my position on the pending measure, and the explanation of that position.

During the campaign in Ohio in 1914, when I received my commission to come to the Senate, there was pending in that State the question of constitutional prohibition. A good many of the electors were not content to accept some of us candidates on the record we had made in legislation in the General Assembly of Ohio, and I was repeatedly asked on the stump what my attitude would be on the question of prohibition in the National Congress. I objected then, as I should object again, to being measured in my fitness for a place in the Senate by the single yardstick of prohibition; but having the question to meet, I met it in accordance with the platform of the party which honored me with nomination, wherein we promised in that campaign that the nominees of our party would carry out, to the best of their ability, the expressed wish of the people of Ohio in the pending nonpartisan constitutional election. When I was asked for my specific position I stated repeatedly and openly so that all could understand that, so far as I was concerned, when the question of prohibition arose in the United States Senate I should be guided by the express wish of the majority of the people of the State of Ohio. Everyone so understood me. In that election a considerable majority of the people of my State voted against prohibition. So, in accordance with the pledge I publicly made and with the result which was recorded in that election, I am here opposed to the pending measure. I have no freedom of action in the matter. It has ceased to be a question of moral judgment with me. I have a pledge to keep with my constituency, and in accordance with that pledge when the final vote comes I shall vote against this bill.

I have concluded that the consistent course for me to pursue, having voted as I did for many referendums of the question in Ohio, if the amendment of the Senator from Alabama should be presented in this body and I were present, would be to vote for a referendum to the people of the District of Columbia.

So it is, Mr. President, I want the RECORD to contain the fact that I am favorable to a referendum and I am forced in accordance with my pledge to vote against prohibition in the District of Columbia.

I trust these remarks will leave no doubt as to my attitude, and that those who care to know will understand that my necessary absence to-morrow and possibly the next day will not in any way indicate that I am hesitant to meet the question raised by the pending amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask if the amendment to section 6, page 13, with reference to ambassadors and ministers of foreign countries has been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). It has been adopted.

Mr. KENYON. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered on the adoption of the amendment on page 13, section 6, in reference to ambassadors. First, I ask, What is the parliamentary status at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending which is before the Senate at this time.

Mr. KENYON. Then I will withhold my request, and I give notice that I shall ask to-morrow for a reconsideration of the vote by which that amendment was adopted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to say, briefly, in reply to the Senator from Alabama that there has been no attempt on my part to accord any especial exemption to the Corby Co. or any other institution in the District of Columbia. The law is framed in general terms and authorizes the manufacture of alcohol for industrial, scientific, and medicinal purposes. If the Corby Co. manufactures alcohol for such purposes, it will be permitted to continue to do so under the terms of the bill, and so will any other company or any individual in the District of Columbia, or any brewery, which may go into such business. Certainly there has been no effort on the part of the framers of this bill to afford any special exemption to anybody.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I have an amendment to propose to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, which I ask may be read and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. An amendment proposed by Mr. KERN to section 2 of the amendment proposed by Mr. UNDERWOOD to Senate bill 1082: Strike out the word "male," in line 8, page 2, and add the word "without regard to sex" after the word "Columbia," in line 9, on the same page, so that the section will read:

SEC. 2. That all resident citizens of the District of Columbia without regard to sex, who are over the age of 21 years, of sound mind, and have not been convicted of an offense involving moral turpitude, and who have been residents of the District of Columbia and the voting precinct in which they reside for more than one year prior to the date of the holding of said election shall constitute the qualified voters at said election. The managers of the said election shall be the sole judges of the qualifications of the voters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that it is my intention to press this bill as speedily as possible. For the present I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) Thursday, December 14, 1916, the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 15, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 14, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, Author of the universe and Father of all souls, for the inestimable gifts, temporal and spiritual, which Thou hast bestowed upon us. Grant us, we beseech Thee, wisdom, power, and courage, that we may use them in accordance with our highest conceptions of right and truth and justice, and prove ourselves worthy of the trust reposed in us; that as faithful servants we may fulfill our destiny to the glory and honor of Thy holy name, in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MARKETING AND FARM CREDITS.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the resolutions adopted by the National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits held at Chicago December 4 to 9, 1916. They contain recommendations in the line of congressional action on certain vital subjects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing certain resolutions about the marketing of foodstuffs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF MILK AND MILK PRODUCTS.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from the American Federation of Labor inclosing resolutions in favor of House resolution 137 relating to dairy products in the country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from the American Federation of Labor. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill (H. R. 18542).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HARRISON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the President: Secretary, $7,500; executive clerk, $5,000; chief clerk, $4,000; appointment clerk, $3,500; record clerk, $2,500; 2 expert stenographers, at $2,500 each; accountant and disbursing clerk, $2,500; 2 correspondents, at $2,500 each; clerks—2 at $2,500 each, 4 at $2,000 each, 5 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 4 of class 2, 3 of class 1; messengers—3 at $900 each, 3 at $840 each; 3 laborers at $720 each; in all, $76,780: Provided, That employees of the executive departments and other establishments of the executive branch of the Government may be detailed from time to time to the office of the President of the United States for such temporary assistance as may be necessary.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 9, after the word "at," strike out "$720" and insert "$840"; strike out "$76,780" and insert "$77,140."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, this item refers to the laborers who are in reality janitors at the White House. During the hearings on the Nolan bill last spring one of them testified as to the conditions under which the laborers work and the salaries they receive. I do not believe these conditions ought to go unnoticed.

Charles Williams is one of those laborers, and in his testimony before the Nolan committee which I have here he said:

I am night fireman up there at the White House. I put in three years and five months under Col. Roosevelt, I put in four years under ex-President Taft, and I have put in three years and one month under President Wilson. I have been increased in pay in a little over 10 years 25 cents a day. I got that when I first went there. I have got five boilers to look after; I have got the kitchen range to look after; I have got the coal to wheel in on my shift, which would be the 4-o'clock shift, but when the man comes on the 12-o'clock shift he can not wheel the coal, because it makes too much noise. On the 4-o'clock shift a man has to get all the wood and coal into the kitchen for the use of the family that night, and even the fireplace wood. All they psy is $1.75 a day. I have no Sundays off; I have no holidays off. During the summer months in the half holidays I have got to work eight straight hours through, and if I lose an hour or two or a day I get docked for it. Really, I work about six days overtime for the Government and do not get a cent for it.

And then, after questions by the committee, he said further as to how he was able to live on that salary:

The only way I do is to get out and hustle around and see what I can do and oftentimes I can get a lot of pipe work, pipe covering to do. Now, at this time of the year there is nothing doing. Last summer I had five launches to look after, and that helped along. My wife kept a boarding house and broke her health, and now she is losing her eyesight and she had to give it up, and that is a great deal of expense.

Later on he says that he goes to the New Willard and the Raleigh and makes an extra dollar doing asbestos work. He gets the smallest wage paid at the White House, and it is practically impossible to make a living. I do not believe when men are in a trusted and confidential position, as they necessarily are in the position of janitors and laborers at the White House, that they ought to be paid such low wages that it is necessary to go to the New Willard or the Raleigh to make a living. With all this talk about better pay for employees, it seems to me a man or a laborer at the White House should be given a living wage. Anybody knows, if he knows anything at all about the high cost of living to-day, that it is absolutely impossible for a man to live and keep a family, especially with a sick wife losing her eyesight, on such a low scale of wages. The gentleman from Tennessee should not insist on his point of order, because these are men entitled to pay sufficient to justify them in not being compelled to go out to the New Willard and the Raleigh. The New Willard and the Raleigh pay their men $2 a day and board them besides. Yet these men have not a sufficient amount of money to support them and they have to go out to places and to hotels and work at night.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How long has that been the pay of this employee?

Mr. DILL. He says he has been there 10 or 12 years and has received only one raise of 25 cents. Since this case has become public he has received 25 cents more, I take it, because the disbursing clerk at the White House told me that he is now receiving $60 a month.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Had he a predecessor in the same position?

Mr. DILL. I do not know about that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I asked the question because I am informed that there are employees in the city getting $60 a month, which is the same pay their predecessors had before the Civil War.

Mr. DILL. I think that is true. I have made no investigation of this case in regard to that matter, but I have made investigation as to others.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is time that pay was raised.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the gentleman certain that his amendment covers the particular individual to whom he refers? These three laborers mentioned in this paragraph are in the President's office. I do not think that the individual to whom the gentleman refers and whose testimony he has been reading is covered or carried in this appropriation.

Mr. DILL. In reply to the gentleman I may say that yesterday I took up this question with the disbursing clerk of the White House and I asked him whom these three laborers are that receive this salary, and he informed me that one of them was Charles Williams, and I take it that he is the same man because he has been there for a number of years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the gentleman inquire as to how it was that the gentleman filling this position was receiving 25 cents a day less than the Congress had voted, when for several years Congress has voted a salary of $720 a year?

Mr. DILL. He says in this statement that he and the other firemen and employees in other public buildings get $2 a day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that in this very position Congress has provided the pay for several years past at $720 a year? According to the testimony the gentleman read the man was receiving only $1.75 a day until within a year or so.

Mr. DILL. He said that he was receiving $1.75 a day. That was last April.

Mr. STAFFORD. And yet Congress was providing a salary at a basis of $720 a year, or more than $2 a day. Did the gentleman inquire of the disbursing clerk as to the reason he was not receiving the full allowance which Congress had voted for the position?

Mr. DILL. I may say to the gentleman that this witness at the time he testified said that he was then under the public buildings and grounds appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On a per diem basis.

Mr. DILL. A per diem of $1.75; but I take it from the statement of the disbursing clerk yesterday that he had been transferred or promoted.

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact is that Congress has been appropriating for this position for several years past at $720 a year.

Mr. DILL. I think that is true.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then the gentleman has read a statement as to the services rendered by Mr. Williams when he was on the per diem basis. Mr. Williams now, according to the statement of the gentleman, is located in the President's office, and is not the fireman, and does not have to perform the services referred to.

Mr. DILL. I take it it would make no difference whether he got $2 a day for firing or $2 a day for something else. The fact is that the man can not make a living at that rate with foodstuffs at the price they are.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Washington and also of the committee to the fact that we have passed over several items with reference to the Library and the Capitol Building and Grounds where laborers are employed at $600 a year and at $660 a year. The gentleman offered no amendment for the purpose of raising their salaries. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this bill contains a recommendation to the House providing for a 10 per cent increase of these salaries and all other salaries under $1,200 a year.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman if we have not for this laborer provided an increase of $72 a year over that recommended by the President himself?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Precisely. I was just going on to state that there was no estimate submitted to the committee asking for an increase for pay of these laborers in the White House. The committee acted upon the estimate submitted by the President of the United States, acting through his secretary, no doubt, and granted just the salary requested, and in addition to that, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] suggests, the committee has gone further and recommended an increase of 10 per cent in this particular man's salary.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will it be in order to offer an amendment to give more than 10 per cent when we reach that particular part of the bill that provides for it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know. Of course, as it stands in the bill it would be in order, but what may be the situation when we reach that section I am not prepared now to say.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to ask any gentleman to inquire of himself whether he thinks $60 a month, or even $70 a month, is sufficient for a man to live on and maintain the proper standard of living, with the present high prices, and I would like to ask gentlemen if it is not worth while for us to give serious consideration to giving a greater increase than is provided in this bill to the employees of the Government. We talk about preparedness. Is there anything more important in the nature of preparedness than to prepare our citizenship so that they can live properly and preserve their physical and mental resources? I think not.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DILL. The gentleman calls attention to the fact that certain laborers were passed over on Tuesday. That is true. They were laborers in some of the departments, and I at that time had not been able to make an investigation, because we had just finished the Indian appropriation bill, and I am a member of that committee. In reply to what the gentleman says regarding the increase of 10 per cent, then he would only have $66 a year extra, and I think he ought to have $70 more, and the 10 per cent added to that, especially in the light of the fact that the Secretary of Commerce says that the increase in cost of foodstuffs has been 34 per cent in a year. That certainly justifies a reasonable increase in the wages of these men—not only this man but every other man who receives the miserably low wages that men are receiving here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman talks of the low wages paid to the laborers here in the departments.

I am in favor—and have always been in favor—of giving fair and liberal wages; but I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the laborers here in the departments in Washington are receiving more money for the amount of service they actually perform than laborers in private employment all over the country, not only in my own State but in the State from which the gentleman himself comes. These laborers only work 7 hours a day. They get 30 days' leave of absence upon full pay. They get a number of holidays during the year, and in addition to that they have 30 days' sick leave, when they are sick, upon full pay, and that is something that the gentleman can not claim for the laborers in the State of Washington, and when he undertakes to talk about the small pay paid to the laborers here in Washington I want to refer the gentleman to the pay that laborers receive performing similar services in his own State and in other States of the Union. For my part I believe the laborers in the departments of Washington are receiving liberal wages as compared with the wages given for similar employment in private establishments. In addition, the committee has gone further and recommended to Congress that it give them 10 per cent increase owing to present conditions, amounting to $6 a month. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

To enable the Bureau of Efficiency, authorized by the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved February 28, 1916, to establish and maintain a system of efficiency ratings, to investigate administrative needs of the service relating to personnel in the several executive departments and independent establishments, required by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914, respectively, and to investigate duplication of statistical and other work and methods of business in the various branches of the Government service; for purchase or exchange of equipment, supplies, stationery, books and periodicals, printing and binding, traveling expenses not exceeding $3,000, and street car fare not exceeding $50; in all, $43,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation exceeding $4,000 per annum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of giving notice of an amendment I shall offer to the last paragraph of this bill providing for an increase of salary for the clerks in the Government service. I wish to give this notice now, so that the proposed amendment can go in the RECORD and be considered by the Members in the meantime. I ask that the Clerk read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have the Clerk read in his time the amendment referred to. Without objection, it will be done.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the wages, salaries, or compensation of persons employed by the United States Government, by the District of Columbia, or employed in either House of Congress, shall be increased according to the following schedule:

First. Every employee now receiving $900 per annum or less shall receive an increase in wages, salary, or compensation of 25 per cent.

Second. Every employee now receiving more than $900 and less than $1,400 per annum shall receive an increase in wages, salary, or compensation of 20 per cent.

Third. Every employee now receiving $1,400 and less than $2,000 per annum shall receive an increase of wages, salary, or compensation of 15 per cent.

Fourth. Every employee now receiving $2,000 per annum and less than $2,600 shall receive an increase in wages, salary, or compensation of 10 per cent.

SEC. 2. That the above schedule shall apply to employees working on a per diem basis as well as those receiving an annual salary.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For commissioner, acting as president of the commission, $4,500; 2 commissioners, at $4,000 each; chief examiner, $3,500; secretary, $2,500; assistant chief examiner, $2,250; 3 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; examiners—1 $2,400, 3 at $2,000 each, 6 at $1,800 each; clerks—6 of class 4, 28 of class 3, 39 of class 2, 52 of class 1, 34 at $1,000 each, 22 at $900 each; messenger; assistant messenger; skilled laborer, $720; 4 messenger boys, at $360 each. Custodian force: Engineer, $840; general mechanic, $840; telephone-switchboard operator: 2 firemen; 2 watchmen; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 laborers; 4 charwomen; in all, $285,730.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to strike out in line 15, page 30, the figures "$4,500" and substitute in lieu thereof "$7,500," and in the same line the figures "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 30, in line 15, by striking out "$4,500" and inserting "$7,500," and striking out "$4,000" and inserting "$7,000."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Idaho desire to be heard?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi to reserve the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that those gentlemen who are in charge of one of the most important departments of the Government ought to be paid a larger salary than that which they now receive. I can not imagine how the gentlemen upon this committee can expect to obtain competent men to perform the work which these men are required to perform for the sum of $4,500 a year and $4,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to cast a reflection upon the present members of the commission that they are not competent because they are only receiving these salaries?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Not at all. The gentleman does not get my idea, but why should not these men receive more salary than they receive? This is one of the most important departments of the Government, and I submit, gentlemen, these salaries ought to be increased.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, your committee which has charge of making up this bill went very carefully into all these matters but there happens to be a class of people that seems to be forgotten by a great many people, and that is the public. There are two classes of people affected materially, one is the man who pays the bill and the other is the man who receives the wage. The Congress of the United States are here for the purpose of representing their constituents and for the purpose of taking care of the governmental expenses. I want to repeat what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] just said a moment ago. We have made a good many investigations since I have been upon this committee as to the character of the work performed and the wages paid in private life.

There is no question on earth that if they work the same number of hours per day and are required to do the same amount of work here that they would be required in private life to perform, they are getting infinitely better wages in the Government service than they would get elsewhere. When you take into consideration the holidays and leaves of absence which they have and the consideration they receive at the hands of the Government, and the fact that they work only seven hours a day, it seems enough to convince all of us that the wages of the Government employees are infinitely better than those of men in private life.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In one moment.

Now, I am unwilling as a Representative on this floor to always forget the people back home and to always forget the taxpayer and only remember that human being who happens to be close to us and importunate in his demand for increased wages. It is true in every department of this Government that men seem to be dissatisfied with the salaries which they get. I am not blaming them, but I am blaming Members of Congress who on all occasions, whether these men are entitled to an increase of wages or not, insist that wages be increased all down the line.

As to the high cost of living, as soon as the European war is over there will be an enormous reduction in that; and there will be no reduction in the salary, no reduction in the burden which the people of this country will have to continue to bear. One increase may look harmless on its face, but when it goes through the whole Government service, involving something like a million of employees, it becomes too burdensome on the taxpayer. It is estimated that in the next current fiscal year the burden will be something like $1,600,000,000, and it was only when Mr. Reed was Speaker that this Congress paid out $500,000,000 each Congress instead of $1,600,000,000, making $1,000,000,000 in two years, and the country was so startled that the newspapers rung it out like a fire bell at night; but since that time you have increased it over 100 per cent, and men are not satisfied with the increase.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. McCRACKEN].

Mr. McCRACKEN. The gentleman realizes the importance of the work these men do?

Mr. SISSON. I do; and, as the gentleman said a while ago, we have the same personnel there that we have had all the while. You are not going to increase the efficiency of these men there at all. On the other hand, taking into consideration men of that character—and they are splendid gentlemen—the salaries they receive are better than the salaries elsewhere, except those up near the head of the great corporations, railroads, and so on, and there there is usually a stock value in the salary.

Mr. McCRACKEN. I would like to inquire if these men are not paid less for services they perform for this Government than men who are paid for similar services elsewhere?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so. They simply have to carry out the civil-service laws that we pass. They simply have to hold examinations and, as a matter of fact, in presiding over that department it requires no such peculiar technical knowledge and skill as to preside over the other departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that the Executive relieves the Civil Service Commission of a very large part of their work, and therefore there is no necessity for increasing their salary at this time?

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, if the gentleman can ingraft that upon the policy of the administration I would be willing to relieve them of a great deal of work they are doing. The fact is, he is keeping the lid on too tight. If there ever should come a day in the distant future when the gentleman and his party control the Government, they will do well to keep the lid on as close as the Executive is keeping it on, because if there is one thing that the President excels all others in it is that the lid is kept on tight, so much so that men on this side of the House feel that they do not get that to which they are entitled. I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania would tell us how to do it.

I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 22, after the word "messenger," insert "$840."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DILL. This is for assistant messenger. I understand his regular classification is $720.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any reason for discussing the amendments to these different provisions. It is merely taking up time, and I make the point of order.

Mr. DILL. Is that fixed by law?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is fixed by law at $720.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 21, after the word "each" in line 21, insert the word "two," and after the word "messenger" strike out the words "assistant messenger."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear that read again, and I ask for order.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that until I can tell what it is.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I take it that we have a right to have another messenger there, and not appropriate for the assistant messenger.

Mr. FESS. You can do that.

Mr. DILL. I see no reason why you can not cut out the assistant messenger and make it two messengers. My reason for this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is that the assistant messenger and the messenger in this department, as in every other department of the Government, practically do the same work, and yet you pay the messenger $840 and the assistant messenger $720.

In the hearings that were had touching these wage questions it has been shown that the assistant messengers have been on the roll for 10 or 15 years at $60 a month, and under the present scale of wages unless a messenger dies there is no hope of increase for the assistant messenger. Yet all the time they are doing exactly the same work. I have it from the head of departments, one after another, that they do the same work, identically the same things. It seems but fair and proper, in the light of the tremendous increase in the cost of living, that these assistant messengers should be abolished and that messengers should be appointed in their stead and paid a living salary. I do not believe that anyone with a family could live on $60 a month with prices as they are in this city.

The gentleman from Tennessee a few moments ago saw fit to talk about the wages which men receive in the various cities in private employment as compared with what they receive under the Government. I am glad the gentleman called the attention of the House to this subject, because the facts show that men in private employment are really receiving far more, and have been receiving increases of wages for years. Yet the Congress of the United States has been establishing these positions at these low rates, which were at the time looked upon as living wages when prices were normal, yet to-day everything that a man has to buy to keep a family has increased 30 or 40 or sometimes 100 per cent. The reports of the Bureau of Statistics show that food products have actually doubled in price. Yet you propose to let these men go on under this Government with an increase of but 10 per cent in wages.

Now, it seems to me that Congress ought to look at this thing in a sensible and reasonable manner. When firms throughout the country in the past have been increasing the wages of their employees 2 and 3 per cent, they have now increased them 15 and 20 per cent. Certainly the Government ought to organize its pay roll in such a way that no man who works eight hours a day for the Government should be compelled to go out and take extra work and have his wife take in boarders or do washing, or something of that sort. I believe such a rate of wages should be paid that a man can live, and live in a decent manner. These messengers must dress well and appear well, and at the price of clothing to-day a man can not do that at the wages paid these men.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman realize what he is seeking to do if this amendment passes? Does the gentleman know what the result will be? It will result in turning this man out of the service, and turning him out on the street without a job, unless he stands a civil-service examination for messenger and makes the highest grade.

Mr. DILL. I think he had better be out than stay in at that rate. He can go out and make a better living.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why does he not go?

Mr. DILL. That is the question that is always asked when an increase of wages is requested. That is what is asked when some one is working at an insufficient rate of pay and eking out a bare living. In light of the fact that the Government took in more than $26,000,000 in increased income taxes alone, it does not seem unreasonable that this Government should give a small part of it to the men who work for it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The testimony taken before our committee was to the effect that the Bureau of Efficiency went into the Post Office Department to assist the Postmaster General in establishing there efficiency ratings, and that at the request of the Postmaster General the salary of all employees was rated at from 20 to 25 per cent more than similar employees received in private employment. That same rate of increase is borne out throughout this entire bill. The men who are getting $840 in the Government service doing the work of messengers receive about $600 a year in private employment.

There is no use in getting hysterical about this matter. We have to face the facts as they exist. The gentleman would increase the cost to the Government for clerical help more than 25 per cent, whereas the Government now pays a rate far above that received in private employment. Of course it is up to the House to decide the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. Does the gentleman from Tennessee insist on the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I only want to say this with reference to the amendment. If this amendment is adopted, it will simply result in taking this assistant messenger out of the service, and instead of rendering a favor to this particular assistant messenger the gentleman from Washington, by his amendment, seeks to eliminate the man from the service of the United States and turn him adrift without any job whatever.

Mr. DILL. Can not the assistant messenger take an examination for the messenger place?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; he could take the examination for a messenger place, but he must take it in competition with other applicants all over this country. They have got an eligible list now at the Civil Service Commission for messengers, and it would not be necessary, in all probability, for an examination to be held, and on June 30 this assistant messenger would find himself without a job. It would be necessary, then, for the department to appoint a messenger, and they would simply go to the register already established and select their man from those who stood highest on the list. The gentleman, I say, by his amendment, is absolutely seeking to deprive this assistant messenger of any opportunity to serve the Government at all and would deprive him of the job he now holds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we hear a great deal on the floor here about the pay given to employees of this Government; we hear a great deal about the inadequacy of the pay given the employees of the Government; but I have yet to hear any of these gentlemen who are making these statements say anything in behalf of those who have to pay these salaries. They do not take into consideration the fact that these salaries are paid by the people—paid out of the Treasury of the people whom we have been sent here to represent—and I think that instead of coming here and growing hysterical over the salary paid to this man and that man we ought also to consider those who have to pay them, the taxpayers whom you and I represent.

As far as this particular position is concerned, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has stated, the United States Government is to-day paying, according to the testimony submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, from 15 to 30 per cent more for positions of this kind than is paid to men holding similar positions and performing similar services in private employment.

In addition to that, the Committee on Appropriations, as I said a moment ago, have recommended to Congress that they give this particular assistant messenger and all other employees of this Government under $1,200 an increase, if you please, of 10 per cent over and above the amount they are now receiving.

I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DILL: Page 30, line 23, after the words "skilled laborer," strike out "$720" and insert "$840."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, just a moment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point of order.

Mr. DILL. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DILL. There are skilled laborers in all the departments——

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman to confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. DILL. There are skilled laborers provided in this bill at different salaries. The gentleman has given no reason why, when this skilled laborer is receiving only $720, it would be out of order to raise his salary to $840, when the others are given $840 or $900, as the case may be.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to say anything on the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Nothing, except that this salary was fixed in the legislative bill last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The law fixes the amount at $720?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DILL: Page 30, line 23, strike out "$360" and insert "$420."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, the rates of pay for these messenger boys are changed throughout the bill, and it seems to me that there is no reason why the pay of this messenger boy should not be raised. As I understand it, this messenger boy's pay is fixed by the committee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the amount carried in the prior bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is the amount carried in the prior bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr DILL. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DILL: Page 30, line 23, after the word "engineer," strike out "$840" and insert "$900."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Customs: Chief of division, $4,500; 2 assistant chiefs of division, at $3,000 each; supervising tea examiner, $2,750; law clerks—4 at $2,500 each, 3 at $2,000 each; clerks—5 of class 4, 4 of class 3, 6 of class 2, 9 of class 1, 5 at $1,000 each; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; in all, $71,250.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I send to the Clerk's desk an editorial from the Washington Post, which I ask the Clerk to read as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLICITY ON "PORK."

As an interesting preliminary to the thirtieth annual convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, which meets here December 6, its president, Senator RANSDELL, of Louisiana, has particularly invited the attendance of those who know all about "pork" in river and harbor bills.

These gentlemen, Senator RANSDELL has announced, will be given every opportunity to enlighten the public as to the iniquities contained in the various bills that are to be presented for the consideration of Congress, in so far as these are related to rivers and harbors.

The fact that for the most part the allegations of "pork" are made by patriots living several thousand miles away from the place where the appropriations are to be applied will not prevent the objectors from being heard at the waterways congress. The only restriction is that they are not to deal in generalities, but to get down to facts. Instead of heaping abuse on this or that project they will be expected to tell what they really know about it and to point out definitely the objections to the contemplated improvements or to explain exactly why the money to be appropriated will not effect the desired results.

There can be no question that the chief outcry against Government appropriations comes from the man far removed from the place of expenditure. Neither is it to be considered strange that human nature should regard blandly any form of local improvement as being justified. At the same time Senator RANSDALL'S open invitation is an appeal to the fair-mindedness of the public that should not be ignored. It is the one proper answer to a host of general and indefinite charges. The fact cited by the Senator that every waterway project in the United States is passed upon by the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors before being submitted to Congress deserves the widest possible publicity.

Probably the final test of sincerity has been applied in the good-roads law, which requires that each State furnish its equivalent before the Federal appropriation for that State becomes available. Many of the river States, however, have long been paying large sums for waterway improvements from State funds. In other cases the nature of the project is such that the Nation rather than the State is the beneficiary of the improvements, thus indicating that their cost is a legitimate Federal charge.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for War Department: Auditor, $4,000; assistant and chief clerk, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; chief of division of accounts, $2,500; chief of claims and records division, $2,000; 2 assistant chiefs of division, at $1,900 each; chief transportation clerk, $2,000; clerks—26 of class 4, 53 of class 3, 59 of class 2, 53 of class 1, 16 at $1,000 each, 8 at $900 each; skilled laborer, $900; 2 messengers; 5 assistant messengers; 9 laborers; messenger boy, $480; in all, $332,150.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DILL: Page 41, line 1, after the figures "$900," strike out "two" and insert "three," and, in line 2, strike out "five" and insert "four."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think any point of order will lie against this amendment. The report of the committee states that there is a new assistant messenger being established. This is simply a method of establishing one more of these low-priced positions. The purpose of my amendment is to prevent the establishment of a messenger at $720 a year who will do the same work that other messengers do at $840 a year, and my desire is to give this man, whose position is to be established, a living salary.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why did not the gentleman propose then to have seven messengers and no assistant messengers?

Mr. DILL. A while ago I proposed such an amendment, and I was told that it would throw all of these gentlemen out of the positions they now hold.

Mr. MANN. If it would throw them all out, then it would throw this one out.

Mr. DILL. Oh, no; this is a new one to be established.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The gentleman proposes to reduce the number of assistant messengers and to increase the number of messengers. There are five assistant messengers. Who is the favored one?

Mr. DILL. The report of the committee says that they are establishing a new assistant messenger.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; a new messenger.

Mr. MANN. A new messenger. I do not know what the report is. I know what the bill is. Last year there was one messenger and the bill now provides for two messengers.

Mr. DILL. I was simply relying upon the report of the committee, which I took to be correct. If the gentleman from Illinois is correct——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois is always correct in these matters.

Mr. DILL. It reads:

The following additional employees are provided. * * * One assistant messenger, $720.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is reading under the heading "Auditor for the Navy Department." If he will look on page 4 of the report he will find the statement with reference to the Auditor for the War Department.

Mr. DILL. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for Navy Department: Auditor, $4,000; chief clerk and chief of division, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; chief of division, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; clerks—13 of class 4, 24 (including 1 transferred from register's office) of class 3, 21 of class 2, 25 of class 1, 8 at $1,000 each, 7 at $900 each (including 1 transferred from register's office); helper, $900; messenger; 2 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; in all, $152,910.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I will now make the motion which I tried to make a moment ago, namely, to amend in line 11, after the figures "$900" by inserting "two," and after the word "messenger" strike out "two" and insert "one."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, line 11, after the figures $900 insert the word "two." And after the word "messenger" strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words as to the work of these assistant messengers and what they have to do and the kind of lives they have to lead. In the hearings on the Nolan bill—and I read from the hearings because they are extremely difficult to find, almost as difficult to get hold of as a gold coin in Europe at this time. I was unable to borrow or beg one and had to go to the library for it. I do not know why they are not printed. On page 290 one of these messengers who receives the magnificent salary which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] says is sufficient, and which is better, he says, than could be had in private employment——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, I said it was better than the salary paid in the gentleman's own State for similar services.

Mr. DILL. That I deny.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. For the sake of the argument, suppose it is. Is that any reason why the Government should not pay adequate wages?

Mr. DILL. Not at all, and the gentleman from Tennessee begs the question.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It is no argument from my point of view to say that somebody else pays unjustifiable wages.

Mr. DILL. The gentleman from Illinois is absolutely correct. Mr. Goldman, who is an assistant messenger in the Adjutant General's office, testifying, said that he had been working ever since he was 12 years and 5 months old. He said that he went into the Government service in 1906 and had been there all this time and never had any trouble; that he was getting $60 a month; and that the other boys up there were getting the same who have been there 25 years. He said there were 53 in his class at $60 a month.

He goes on to say that he does not want to be personal in the matter, but he tells how he manages to live and keep a family on the wages of $60 a month, a year ago when the prices of the necessities of life were only half or two-thirds what they are to-day.

This amendment is to prevent the establishment of another low-paid position. He says that he lives at Twenty-fourth and S streets and never uses a street car but always walks. He says:

We never ride; we watch all the sales and buy things as cheaply as we can, and the very least we can set the table for is $25 a month. We have to pay $1.50 a month for gas and $1.25 for milk, and I pay $2.50 for insurance. It is necessary for my wife to drink milk now, on account of nursing the baby. It is a case of skimp, skimp, skimp all the time.

I have heard some one say somewhere that a man ought to have two suits a year, or something to that effect. I have not had a suit in six years—a full suit. I buy a pair of pants sometimes, and then I get a coat. But I have never had a full suit, out and out, for fully six years.

I had a little money when I came out of the Navy, but it was soon gone, and I never have had any since. We never pay out anything for our washing. Every week I go home and jump into the washtub and wash, and help out that way. I have never spent a cent on tobacco or on intoxicating liquor.

Then he goes on to tell that his wife wakes up in the night and sometimes asks if the Nolan bill will pass. Such is the hope that has been awakened in his wife's mind for the passage of the Nolan bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the light of this testimony alone, it seems to me that it ought to be sufficient to prevent Congress from establishing another low-priced position, one where if in the future you should attempt to raise the salary you are met by a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we recently passed over, in the consideration of this bill, a provision for the payment of salaries to employees of the House. We employ, under the office of Clerk, six laborers at $720 a year and two janitors at $720 a year. We employ a great many so-called janitors, but they are all messengers for various committees, at $720 a year. Nearly all the messengers employed by the different committees in the House receive $720 a year. So far as I have observed in my service in the House, there has been no dissatisfaction by these messengers with their jobs. They were formerly called messengers, but they are now called janitors. They have much more important duties to perform than a mere messenger in the departments. This bill contemplates an increase in the salary of the department messengers of 10 per cent. It contemplates no increase in the salaries of the messengers under the House. I did not hear the gentleman from Washington, although I was in the Chamber, or anybody else propose that there should be any increase in the pay of these messengers who are working for us, nor have I observed in looking at them that they are lean and gaunt and half-starved and poorly dressed. Most of them are good-looking chaps, and they have to be fairly well dressed when they work around this House. You can always find in the world some improvident man with a hard-luck story about how he can not live or save on what he receives. Doubtless the salaries or wages paid are not high. I would be glad to see an increase made; but believing that charity begins at home, if I was going to make an increase in the payment of salaries of individual messengers, I would not commence with the Civil Service Commission nor any of the other executive departments of the Government. I would commence with the employees of the House of Representatives, whom we know, and we know whether they do the work or not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing which I think possibly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] forgot, and that is that these messengers to committees of the House will work here from December until March as messengers of these committees, and that then, in March, they will go home and engage in other occupations until the December following. It is my understanding that all of the time they are not in Washington they will draw their salaries as messengers to the committees. That is somewhat different from the facts relating to the man who stays here in Washington and works all of the time and tries to support a family in Washington on $60 a month—quite different.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I think it is hardly an argument worthy of very much consideration that the patronage appointees of this House, who the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has just stated serve only a part of the time, and who, being political appointees, necessarily have certain liberties that are not enjoyed by the men in the departments—I think such an argument is not worthy of much consideration when we compare those people with the men who are compelled to depend absolutely upon the money they receive here in their daily work, men who have been faithful for years and who see no chance of promotion. Especially is this so at a time like this, when living is as high as it is. It seems to me that we can ill afford now to create some more poorly paid positions. It may be sound argument in the gentleman's estimation, but not in mine, why we should not raise salaries; but certainly we should not create any more low-paid positions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the distinction which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] draws seems to me argues against the proposition. The messengers of the committees of the House, if they go home during the recess, have to pay their traveling expenses home and back again, and the Government makes them no recompense for that. They do not engage in other occupations which bring them in an income. Men who work for the committees of the House are not permitted to engage in other occupations by the men under whom they serve. They are required sometimes, if they go home, to pay their traveling expenses there and back; but these boys around the House here, to whom I first referred, out here in the cloakrooms, out here in the toilet rooms, have to stay here and work during the entire year.

Mr. KING. And they work more than seven hours a day, too.

Mr. MANN. Yes; a good deal more than eight hours a day.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was referring in what I said, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, to the only employees whom I understood the gentleman from Illinois to mention in his first address, the janitors of the committees.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman will pardon me. I quoted particularly other employees of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I was mistaken, but I know the gentleman did mention the janitors of the various committee rooms, formerly called messengers.

Mr. Chairman, this whole question of raising or not raising the salary of Government employees can be summed up in this way: Take, for instance, men who now receive $60 a month who live in the city of Washington. That salary, I am told, was established, in some instances, before the Civil War, and the men who preceded the present occupants of the positions received the same sum. Suppose we take that salary 15 or 20 years ago. Since that time the cost of living has increased 40 per cent, to put it at a minimum, and in many things more than that. That to-day is precisely as if we reduced his salary 40 per cent from what he first received. In other words, it is exactly as if he were receiving a reduction of $240, which would be as though his original salary had been fixed at $360 a year, less than a dollar a day—and that from the richest Government that the world has ever known. It is immaterial if some private employers in the city of Washington see fit to give their employees a stipend like that. That is entirely immaterial. It is the duty of the Government of the United States to make itself a model employer and not compel any of the people in its employ to work for what are really starvation wages in the city of Washington.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say anything in regard to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] except to call the attention of the committee to this fact: The Auditor for the Navy Department requests in his estimates to Congress that we provide him with an additional assistant messenger, and the committee in its recommendation to the House acted favorably upon that request and has recommended the employment of an additional assistant messenger. The Auditor of the Navy Department says that what he needs down there is another assistant messenger, and while I have great regard for the knowledge of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] in respect to the various departments and their bureaus, I must say that I prefer to consult the Auditor of the Navy Department as to exactly what he needs in his bureau rather than the gentleman from Washington, who is possibly not so entirely familiar with the needs of the Auditor of the Navy Department.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Is it or not a fact that these assistant messengers do practically the same work as the messengers?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is not as important a position as that of messenger.

Mr. DILL. What is the difference in their duties?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The messenger is frequently qualified to perform possibly sometimes some clerical work, if needed, and he has charge of the assistant messengers, and his work is more responsible and important. The assistant messengers are called upon to carry messages from bureau to bureau. Then, further, I want to again call the gentleman's attention to the fact, which he seems to have forgotten, that the committee has recommended an increase of 10 per cent on all of these salaries, and that this assistant will not get $720 a year, but that he will get $792 a year under this bill if that recommendation goes into effect. The gentleman, however, is seeking to provide a $840 messenger instead of the position that the Auditor for the Navy Department requests, and then to give him $84 in addition to the $840—something that the auditor has not asked and does not expect and does not want. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. DILL. Oh, if the gentleman will permit, I may say I have talked to some of these auditors and they are perfectly willing to have higher-priced positions filled, but they say they have so much difficulty in getting salaries increased at all that they do not want to ask for higher-priced places.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly, this auditor can not undertake to make any contention like that, because his estimates were granted in full. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEVER). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Postal Savings System: Clerks—11, at $1,000 each; 7 skilled laborers, at $900 each; in all, $17,300.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I note on page 42 there is a lump-sum appropriation of $284,000 provided for the Auditor for the Post Office Department. I would like to ask how the wages are fixed for that amount?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will read the paragraph, he will find the compensation is fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DILL. Which means, in fact, that the Post Office Department auditor fixes it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On the contrary, the law states they are fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. He may make certain recommendations to the Secretary of the Treasury, but after all they are fixed by the Secretary himself.

Mr. DILL. I understand; but in actual practice they are actually fixed by the auditor.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; I do not concede that for a moment.

Mr. DILL. I do not say that the Secretary does not O. K. it, but they are really made by this auditor.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not concede that for a moment. These salaries are actually fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DILL. And they are fixed upon the basis of piecework. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DILL. I note, on page 563 of the hearings, that these laborers are receiving, the highest $105 a month—that is, the clerks who are operating these tabulating machines—and the lowest received $60 a month. In fairness it must be said that these 25 clerks receiving $60 a month, I understand, are apprentices, as it were; they are conditional, but they are earning $60, $65, $70, and $75, all of whom are trained employees. Now, I note another thing, and that is that this lump-sum appropriation has gradually increased, and if it goes on in the same way it is only a matter of a short time until the whole appropriation will be in the hands of one man to fix salaries on a piecework basis. This House in the last session on three or four occasions on roll call voted very definitely against the Taylor system, and while this is not the Taylor system in reality it is a form of piecework system.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last words. While this question of increase of pay of employees is up I want to read just briefly from the testimony of the Postmaster General with regard to the comparative rates being paid by the Government and private establishments. Last year the Postmaster General, in hearing on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, in speaking of the reorganization of the instruction that he gave to the Bureau of Efficiency in rearranging the ratings of employees of the Postal Department, said:

I want the committee to understand that in the department we have kept in mind at all times that the Government should be a model employer. I mean by model employer that the Government should pay adequate—yes; more than adequate—a liberal compensation for services given it; that the hours of work should be reasonable—liberally reasonable—and the working conditions for employees should be most favorable. We have tried to adhere to that policy in the preparation of these estimates.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. GOOD. What do you mean by a liberal compensation?

Mr. BURLESON. I mean from 15 per cent to 30 per cent more than is being paid for similar service in private employment. I have said to the committee on personnel, of which the chief clerk of my department is the chairman, that if the committee finds any class of work in the Post Office Department for which we are not paying from 15 to 30 per cent more than is paid by private employers, that I would estimate for an increase and would come before the Committee on Appropriations and defend it. I believe that the Government should at all times be a model employer, and I believe that every employee in the Post Office Department is now receiving what I defined a moment ago as a just and equitable compensation for his services, or will receive such compensation within the next year, when the salary adjustments under the efficiency ratings have all been made. You, of course, understand that these changes in salary are made gradually. I said all the employees. I except four, and I will speak to you about them in a moment—the four Assistant Postmasters General. They are underpaid, and I can demonstrate it.

When I speak of the rates of compensation allowed the employees in my department being from 15 to 30 per cent above the rates paid for similar work or service in private employment, and that I regard this for the Government as just and equitable, I give no consideration to the fact that the Government clerk works only 7 hours a day, while persons in private employment work 8, 9, or, in some instances, even 10 hours a day. I give no consideration to the fact that there are 105 or 107 days—Sundays, days of annual leave, sick leave, and Saturday half holidays during the summer, and legal holidays, all authorized by law—that the Government employee does no work. I do not take these matters into consideration, because it is a part of the generous treatment the Federal Government as an employer should show its employees.

Then, further on in the hearing, Mr. Herbert Brown, chairman of the Efficiency Bureau, the bureau that established the ratings in the Post Office Department, said that when they came to putting into effect the efficiency ratings in the Post Office Department they followed the recommendations of the Postmaster General and provided a rate of pay from 15 to 30 per cent more to Government employees than was paid for similar employment in private life, and that is the basis upon which this entire bill was formulated. The clerks are all regulated by law. Clerks of a given class, say, class 4, receive the same compensation in all the other departments of the Government that they receive in the Post Office Department. And so it is with all other clerks and with messengers and assistant messengers and with laborers. Their salaries are fixed by law, and they are receiving from 15 to 30 per cent more than laborers and clerks receive for similar employment in private establishments. That is why there is such a demand for Government jobs. If private employment paid more, they could not be retained in the Government service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] withdraws his pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing: Director, $6,000; assistant director, $3,500; chief of division of assignments and reviews, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; disbursing agent, $2,400; cost accountant, $2,000; medical and sanitary officer, $2,250; stenographer, $1,800; storekeeper, $1,600; assistant storekeeper, $1,000; clerk in charge of purchases and supplies, $2,000; clerks—6 of class 3, 9 of class 2, 9 of class 1, 8 at $1,000 each, 12 at $900 each, 15 at $840 each, 3 at $780 each, 9 attendants, at $600 each; helpers—1 at $900, 2 at $720 each, 2 at $600 each; 3 messengers; 7 assistant messengers; captain of watch, $1,400; 2 lieutenants of watch, at $900 each; 60 watchmen, at $720 each; 2 forewomen of charwomen, at $540 each; 25 day charwomen, at $400 each; 77 morning and evening charwomen, at $300 each; foreman of laborers, $900; 4 laborers; 85 laborers, at $540 each; in all, $241,310; and no other fund appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for services, in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, of the character specified in this paragraph, except in cases of emergency arising after the passage of this act, and then only on the written approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in every such case of emergency a detailed statement of the expenditures on account thereof shall be reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making some observations about the salaries in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The chairman of the committee rather pointedly called attention a while ago to the fact that the Auditor for the Navy Department wanted an assistant messenger rather than a messenger. I note on page 157 of the hearings on this bill that the Director of this Bureau of Engraving and Printing asked that the clerks in that department be paid a salary commensurate with the services which they perform. He says that the clerks in the $900 grade in the bureau perform a higher grade of service than the average Government clerk who is getting $1,200. I was informed that the clerks provided here with a salary of $740 and $840 each do practically the same work as is done by the other clerks, and I would make a motion to amend and raise their salary but for the fact that the gentlemen would raise a point of order, and there is nothing that can be done.

Now, I call the attention of the gentlemen to another fact, that these charwomen are working for $400 a year, eight hours a day. These women who clean up down there during the day and during the night—I think anyone will agree—do a kind of work that should receive more than $33.33⅓ a month.

I desire now to say something about the clerks. It may be of some interest to relate something about how the classification of clerks came about in the Government. The act of March 3, 1853, provided the first classification, and then class 1 got $900; class 2, $1,200; class 3, $1,500; and class 4, $1,800. On April 22, 1856, this classification was made, and class 1 got $1,200; class 2 $1,400; class 3, $1,600; and class 4, $1,800.

Now, I was interested to know how the cheaper clerks got into these bills, and I find that on January 9, 1896, the President of the United States directed the classification known as A when they received less than $720; B, $720 to $840; C, $840 to $900; D, $900 to $1,000; and E, $1,000 to $1,200. That was in 1896, when the wages of the country were at such a low standard that the Government lowered the wages of the employees, and I think justly so. But now, when everything has gone beyond all reason in the cost of living, certainly a similar advance ought to be made; and when the gentleman talks about a 10 per cent advance he forgets that the big corporations that are trying to meet this situation have raised wages 20, 30, and 40 per cent.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman please name the corporations?

Mr. DILL. Yes; I will name some of the corporations, since the statement was made on the floor Tuesday by one gentleman that he did not know of any that were giving such raise in wages:

The Bowling Green (Ohio) paper, under date of November 30, says that beginning with December 1 the Edward Ford Plate Glass Co. will increase the wages of their employees 8 per cent, making an increase of 26 per cent for the year—1,600 employees.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, the gentleman says they have an increase there of 8 per cent?

Mr. DILL. Over what had already been given this year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Where does the gentleman get the authority that they have given an 18 per cent increase heretofore?

Mr. DILL. I have the statement of the newspaper printed in the town where the plant is located.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know what salaries or wages this company pays to its employees?

Mr. DILL. I do not know; but I take it that they are as good as the Government pays when it pays $50 or $60 a month.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know that the employees referred to get more than the amount paid by the Government for similar services and similar time?

Mr. DILL. No; I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know whether or not they are required to work only seven hours a day and get 30 days' annual leave with full pay and 30 days' sick leave?

Mr. DILL. I do not know the details of their employment, but I do know they get as large wages as the lowest paid employees of the Government. They could not live if they did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes more, in order to point out some other instances to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILL. The New York World on December 7 says the Guaranty Trust Co. has given its employees a bonus of 22½ per cent. The Artisan, of Holyoke, Mass., says that the American Clothing Manufacturers' Association, beginning with December 18, will give an increase of 35 per cent to its 32,000 workers. The New York Sun on December 9 says that Charles H. Jones & Co. will give its employees 50 per cent of the year's pay as a bonus or increase in their wages. The Post, of Ellicottville, N. Y., says that the Eastman Kodak Co., of Rochester, announces to its employees that between December 6, 1916, and April 25, 1917, it will pay its employees receiving $20 a week or less an emergency wage amounting to 15 per cent of their wages and to those receiving between $20 and $50 a week an emergency wage of $3 a week. The Albany Journal states that the Alpha Portland Cement Co. announces it has increased its wages 10 per cent, which is the third increase in less than a year, and it makes an aggregate increase of 30 to 35 per cent and affects 1,200 to 1,500 employees. The Alling & Cory Co., says the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat, has increased the wages of its employees who are receiving $25 a week or less 15 per cent beginning December 2.

The Boston American of November 29, 1916, says:

The American Clothing Manufacturers' Co. has increased the wages of its employees 35 to 40 per cent.

The Springfield Morning Union, of Springfield, Mass., of December 7, 1916, says that—

The average increase of wages of the Prentiss Co. since the first of the year has been 30 per cent.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. DILL. All right.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think it would be justified and would he favor an increase for the employees of the United States Government from 35 to 40 per cent, as he argues?

Mr. DILL. I said nothing of the kind. I say these poorly paid employees who have not been given a living wage should be given a wage that is commensurate with conditions under which they live, and no horizontal raise can be fair to men who have been getting only $50 or $55; and no horizontal raise would be fair to men, either, who have been getting only $70 or $80. That is what I stated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the gentleman opposed to a horizontal raise?

Mr. DILL. I will take that if nothing better can be had. Now, the gentleman talks about these horizontal increases in these bills that will raise all the wages. When you get the big supply bills through by the 4th of March you will find these provisions for these horizontal increases will be lost and will not be heard from.

I recognize that a great many firms in this country that have been increasing the wages of their employees have only increased them to the extent of 10 per cent, but in most of those cases a raise had already been made this year or last year, while the Government has not increased its salary scale in years. And now you meet this situation by proposing to insert in a paragraph at the end of this bill a provision to give a 10 per cent increase to these poorest paid employees, which, in effect, will amount to very little.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman, I observed a few moments ago, listened to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] as to the employees of the Post Office Department, where the Government employees were being paid from 15 to 30 per cent more than similar employments in civil life. What has the gentleman to say regarding that? Does the gentleman agree to that or not?

Mr. DILL. I do not agree to that, and if I had the time I would produce some figures here in answer to what the gentleman said earlier in the day.

Mr. NORTON. I was interested in what the gentleman from Iowa said on that subject, and I was expecting the gentleman from Washington to reply. I wanted the gentleman from Washington to touch on that.

Mr. DILL. I did not see fit to speak at that time, because I wanted to take up the subject later.

Mr. NORTON. That is the statement the gentleman from Iowa made concerning the Postmaster General.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

Mr. QUIN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEVER). That amendment has already been made. Does the gentleman move to strike out the last two words?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have heard what the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] says, and it occurs to me that it is time for somebody to say a word for the man who has got to pay all these increases of wages that you are talking about. [Applause.]

I do not know anything about the conditions of the State that the gentleman comes from, but has the gentleman heard here of a single Government employee asking that wages be reduced when food products have fallen in price below the cost of production? Has the gentleman from Washington any reason to say that when the farm products of this country are selling below the cost of production anybody from his State or anywhere else will at any time suggest on the floor of this House that the salaries of these employees of the Government should be reduced?

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. DILL. In answer to the gentleman's question I may say that whether they have asked for the decreases or not, the wages have been decreased, or positions have been established at much lower wages than previously existed, and the records show that the average wage in the Treasury Department to-day is less than it was in the year 1854.

Mr. QUIN. Has the gentleman since the Civil War ever heard of this Congress reducing salaries? It makes no difference how low the prices of products go, no Congressman ever rises and says, "We will reduce the salaries of these Government employees," or anybody else. The taxpayers of this country know that taxes are going up. There is not a single municipality in the State of Mississippi where taxes have not advanced; there is not a county in Mississippi where taxes have not advanced. The State taxes are heavy. That is the case with every State of this Union. Every man knows that the Federal taxes, the taxes of this Government, are growing by leaps and bounds. You have pending before the very committee that I have the honor to be a member of now increases of estimates that are enormous and astounding.

The gentleman from Washington says we should increase the wages of these Government employees more than 15 per cent. I notice gentlemen voted the other day to increase the allowance for their clerks from $1,500 to $2,000, and in addition to that they voted to put in $75 a month for a stenographer during the session for each Member of Congress. Do you believe the people are going to sit down idle while we sit up here in this revelry of official extravagance and go down into the Treasury and vote large sums in salary increases? It is outrageous and monstrous to do that here, when the people throughout the country can scarcely pay the taxes that they are paying to-day. Do you believe the people of the United States are going to indorse this continuous policy of raising the salary of everybody?

You say that a scrub woman who receives $33½ a month is getting too low a wage. Do you know of a scrub woman in private employment that gets as much as $33 a month, with 30 days' leave of absence in a year and 30 days' sick leave, and who gets every Saturday afternoon off and Sundays and holidays? In fact, do you know of any scrub woman in private employment who gets as much as a dollar a day?

We must consider the economies in private life when we consider the Government pay roll. I know that $33 sounds low when you consider the modern methods of extravagance. You speak of $33 a month for scrubbing out an office, but you do not consider all the sick leave and annual leave and holidays which they are allowed. In fact, it is a generous wage when all those things are considered. Those people work hard, it is true, for four or five hours a day, but you go down here to the old fellow in the field, working from 5 o'clock in the morning until after dark at night, and you will find he is paying for all this. Does not the gentleman know that the corporations that are making these wage increases that are referred to are not the ones who are really paying for them? The poor devils who till the soil are the ones who are paying the wages that every corporation in this country is apparently paying out. You will not accomplish this increase which is proposed by my vote. You are proposing to lay heavier burdens on the masses. You will not do it with my vote. I never yet have voted to pay out a single dollar that I would not do if it were my own private business. How many of you men on this floor, if you were running a business yourselves, would give an increase to your employees when you are hardly able to raise the normal pay roll? Already there is a deficit in the Treasury of the United States. Already we are looking about for new sources of taxation. We have increased the income tax, and I am in favor of increasing it more. What do you want to do? Do you want to go out and tax the plow, the hoe, the harness, the gears, and the wagon that the farmer uses? Is that the scheme you propose? How are you going to get the money? It must come from some source, you know. Some say we must have a protective tariff to raise it. Is that what you want? Are you going to tax the shirt off from a man's back and the shoes off from his feet? Are you going to tax the biscuits out of his mouth and leave his children crying with hunger? Is that the kind of a policy you want to pursue?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I ask unanimous consent for a little more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes; I will yield, but not long. Just for a question.

Mr. DILL. I have been asked so many questions, I should like to answer one. In answer to the gentleman's question as to whether I would take the biscuits away from people's mouths, I will say to the gentleman that I would tax the rich men of this country enough to see to it that the men who work for this Government may have biscuits to eat, anyhow. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. I hope the gentleman does not believe all he reads, all this magazine nonsense, and all this uplift policy. I have been born and reared to know what work is and what a dollar is worth; and when you tell me, sir, that you want to put biscuits in Government employees' mouths, you know they have all the necessities and comforts of life, and you propose to have them lounge in unneeded luxuries, and in doing that you are taking necessary food out of the mouths of the families of the men who have to pay these taxes. You are taking advantage of them and their families by putting additional taxes on them. If we continue to raise the salaries of these Government employees, if we continue to establish new positions where we know that already there are employees hanging around who do not earn their salt, what will the taxpayer say? You say you want to take it out of the rich man's pocket. I am willing to take from those who have fabulous incomes a sufficient amount of taxes to support this Government in an honest and legitimate way, but I do not want to tax the rich, or anybody else, in order to add a useless expense. I do not propose to vote to take money out of the pocket of Mr. Rockefeller or of anybody else to pay something for nothing, to pay more than labor is worth. Every man knows that the laborer is worthy of his hire, but he must not expect to be worth more than his real value. There is where we go wild here. We allow the American people to be imposed on, because we do not have a proper regard for the sources from which this money must come. The American people know that a great sum of money must be raised. They do not know how it is to be raised. Why, if you take the American people as a whole, they know the cost of living is high. They know if their wages are raised it is building up an inverted pyramid that will fall back down on them when it becomes top-heavy, because, after all, the law of supply and demand must govern the prices, and when there is an enormous crop of the farm products of this country prices are low, and during that period of time the taxes are the same, except they are increased.

The taxes of this country now are increasing, and you propose by this system suggested by you to keep building up taxation. You propose, for all the different fads that come along, to increase taxation upon the American people. It must come out of the pockets of some one. Does it come out of the pockets of the men who are getting these increases? It comes out of the pockets of the producers of wealth. It comes out of the pockets of the man who tills the soil, and the man who labors in the sweat of his brow; and for that man, the American taxpayer, this Congress should have some regard. It should take some notice of his welfare instead of running wild about somebody else who is sucking the lifeblood from him. Let us look out for the man who has to bear this burden; let us have some respect for him; and, gentlemen, when the roll is called that is going to put every man on record here who voted the other afternoon to put $500 more yearly in the pockets of his clerk and $75 a month more for some stenographer to sit around in his office, let that man put himself on guard, and let his people look him in the face when he goes back home. I wish I could get behind the coat tail of some gentleman back in his district where the people are honest and work for their living. I wish I could get after the man who votes on this floor to put that enormous sum of money into clerk hire for himself. I will bet there would be a new face in Congress from that district next time. Do not mistake. The American people will not be fooled if they understand the facts. Understand the American people are going to want to know why you have increased all of these Government employees. Why is it you let them work only about seven hours a day? Why is it you propose to give them all the money that the people make, and some talk about retiring them on a pension after they have served Uncle Sam for about 20 years? The people want to know why that is. They want to know who is doing it. Is it you? How did you stand on the vote? How did you talk on this floor? Do you sing the same song back home that you sing here? Do you believe the American people would elect this same gang of men if they knew what outrageous extravagances they are perpetrating here? Do you believe that the American people would want to reach down in their pockets to pay Federal taxes while their little children hardly have decent clothes to wear to school for a few months in the year, when you pension somebody in Washington, when you increase everybody's salary in Washington, when you put moving pictures all around them, and send them to theaters, and up to the roof garden on the top of this great hotel down here at night? Do you think that is what your constituents want? Would you do that in your own private business? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended two minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood the gentleman a moment ago in speaking about the action of the committee day before yesterday in increasing the salary of the clerks to Members, to say that the Members put that in their pockets.

Mr. QUIN. I said that they could do what they wanted to do with it.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood the gentleman to say that they would put it in their pockets.

Mr. QUIN. I did not say that.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman did not intend to say that the Members appropriated that money to their own use?

Mr. QUIN. No. I said that they were increasing the salary of these clerks to sit around in their office and look pretty. You can get a competent secretary for $125 a month, which is the amount paid now.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of cards and tabulating equipment for use in auditing accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service, including exchange and repairs, $139,400, to be expended under the direction of the Auditor for the Post Office Department under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That not exceeding $32,000 may be expended for the rental of tabulating and card-sorting machines.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the discussion that has proceeded here statements have been made both by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], and I am not sure by some other, to the effect that the men who are employed by the Government here are getting much higher wages for the work they do than they can secure from private employers. The gentleman from Tennessee made the statement that in the State of Washington, from which I happen to come, men and women were being secured to do similar employment for as low or lower wages. I have here a statement placed in the hearings on the Nolan bill regarding the custodian service in various buildings in the United States, in which the rates of pay for work done by the Government employees are compared with those rates paid by city and county employees in some communities and towns.

Since the State of Washington was mentioned, I want to call attention to the fact that in Tacoma, Wash., where laborers in the post office and treasury building receive $660 a year, or a salary of $55 a month, employees doing similar work for the city receive $840 a year.

In the city of Spokane, where I live, we have what is known as a $3-a-day wage bill, and no man works for the city for less than $3 a day. I think similar laws are in operation in other cities in the State, but of that I am not certain. But I do know about the city of Spokane.

In the city of Portland, where the wages of the Government laborers are given as $660 a year, the wages of private employees are $780. Now, it is a simple matter to go throughout the country and take the number of cities and compare them with the Government employees. For instance, Detroit, where charwomen receive $300 from the Government, the county pays $720. In Superior, Wis., where charwomen receive $300, the city pays $480 to $540.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman realize that there may be a great difference in the maximum hours that these charwomen labor? The Government maximum is four hours—two to four.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the gentleman is comparing them with charwomen who work a full day.

Mr. DILL. I do not think so.

Mr. BORLAND. The salary that the gentleman gave indicates a full day's work.

Mr. DILL. At the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, I was informed by the director's office this morning that some of the charwomen work eight hours a day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. The Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing did not ask for one dollar's increase for charwomen. I am sure the gentleman is mistaken when he says that the charwomen in that bureau work eight hours a day. It averages two to four hours a day.

Mr. DILL. That is true in the War, State, and Treasury Departments, but when I called attention to the fact that the charwomen at the bureau were getting $400, the statement was made that that was because they worked the full day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, I do not question the private information that the gentleman from Washington got from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but I do say that the director never made any such statement as that to the Committee on Appropriations or to me.

Mr. DILL. I will say that it was not the director, but the assistant director that gave me that information.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Washington took the floor to disprove the statements by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Mississippi that persons employed by the Government received more wages than those in private employment. The gentleman from Washington has not referred to any private employment. The cases he referred to were simply those of city, county, and State.

Mr. DILL. Some were private.

Mr. GOOD. What ones were private?

Mr. DILL. I gave some from Portland.

Mr. GOOD. No; those were State and county.

Mr. DILL. The city of Superior, Wis., was private.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman refer to some of the Washington cities where he knows what is paid by private employers?

Mr. DILL. I know that no skilled workman in Washington works for less than from $3 to $5 a day. Under Government employment skilled laborers are forced to work for very much lower wages.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman think that we ought to appropriate for common laborers the same pay that skilled laborers receive?

Mr. DILL. No; but you appropriate $720 for a skilled laborer in this bill, and that is what I attempted to correct.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman know the character of work that they do?

Mr. DILL. I went out to see what some of these laborers do who get $55 and $60 a month. I found that one of them had been sent over to the auditor's office to do electrical work. He is such a competent electrician at $60 a month that his chief sent him to do that work. I found another man trained sufficiently in the handling of a pump so that he was sent to fix a pump that had gotten out of order, and yet he was drawing only $60 a month for doing that work.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the statute does not know any position of skilled laborer. Once in a while these people have received advanced pay and the reason for it is that they were skilled laborers.

Mr. DILL. It says skilled laborers.

Mr. GOOD. It is because they are getting more compensation than the others, and that is the only reason. An exception is made in their cases.

Mr. DILL. It says "skilled laborers." What it means I do not know. If it has any new meaning other than what it generally has, the gentleman must interpret it. The statute refers to them as skilled laborers at $60 a month. I maintain that a man who is sufficiently trained so that he can do electrical wiring and electrical work in a Government building is a skilled laborer, and that a man who can fix a pump which is out of order is certainly more than an ordinary laborer, especially when he can put in a new valve and that sort of thing. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] made the ordinary speech that he has made every time it is proposed to spend a little money to help these employees get living wages, and yet we get up here and vote for millions and millions of dollars because of imaginary dangers or of doubtful value. He spoke of the committee of which he is a member and he said that there were so many millions extra proposed that we ought not to spend any more. Certainly, if we can afford to spend eighty or one hundred million dollars extra for the thing to which the gentleman refers, we can at least afford to spend two or three or four or five or even ten million dollars extra in order to give these men decent living wages. This talk about the taxpayer being unable to pay living wages I think is all buncombe. I think the taxpayers of the country are willing that Congress see to it that the men who work for this Government are given living wages, and men who get so wrought up over the fact that there may be $50 or $100 extra given to some man as a living wage are simply working on their own imagination. As I said a while ago, we received millions and millions of dollars more last year as internal revenue in the way of income taxes than we have ever received before, and that is all due to the great prosperity of the country everywhere, and the increased cost of everything brought about much of this great revenue, and we should recognize it to the extent of giving these men living wages.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a great deal is being said about the amount of money that the Government pays to its employees. I do not think any one who will make a careful investigation will fail to find that the statement made by the Postmaster General which was referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], if he will consult his own people at home, about what they pay people working in private employment, is entirely correct, and that the salaries paid by the Federal Government are from 20 to 30 per cent higher than those paid for like services in private employment. A great deal also is being said about the high cost of living. It is true that the cost of living has reached an enormous point, and the expenses of the ordinary family have been increased a great deal, but we do not take into consideration the fact that when we make these increases in salaries in the departments of the Government they become permanent increases.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In just a moment. You have fat years sometimes like this in private employment throughout the country, where factories are running overtime and men are begging to get employees, when they are taking them from sections of the country where they have never traveled to get labor before. Labor agents have been going all over the South getting men to emigrate at a wage less than this, especially the negro population, to work in the factories and in the mines. This is an abnormal condition in which we find ourselves, but this Government pay is steady and regular, there are absolutely no idle days, the man who works for the Government gets 30 days' leave of absence with pay and he gets 30 days' sick leave with pay, and also 11 holidays, I think it is. He gets his half Saturdays off during the summer. It is a delightful and desirable employment, but if you were to listen to some of the gentlemen on the floor of the House, you would imagine with their weeping and their woe that these people were drafted into the public service and were compelled to remain there. You would imagine that they were compelled to come into the service; that the great arm of the Federal Government was denying them the right to resign at any time they saw fit; and that there was some compulsory service about it. There is no compulsion that I know of.

The only trouble I have in my section of the country, and I believe this to be true in almost every congressional district in the United States, is to take care of the enormous number who are constantly applying to get into the service. Another thing as to wages. You will find wages in one section of the country infinitely higher than in others. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] compares things as he sees them in his own State, and yet perhaps they may pay higher wages there than they do in California, and in California they may pay higher wages than they do in Maine, and they may pay higher wages in New York than they do in Maine. It may be cheaper in the South than it is in the North and in the West. There is something remarkable about the labor market of the country. What would be a fair wage in one section of the country would not be in the other, and all the comparison that the gentleman makes is in that section of the country where he lives. What we ask gentlemen to do is to confine themselves to this territory here and around Washington, and when you take the private employment in this city and the States around Washington you will find there is everything in favor of the Government employee. The rule with the private telephone company here is that the girls get a dollar a day. I am not condemning nor am I defending that situation. The telephone girls in the Government service get $75 a month, and get all of the advantages of which I have spoken for Government employees. It seems to me that gentlemen are not confining themselves to the facts literally when they endeavor to convince the Members of this House and to convince the country that Congress has not been liberal with the Government employee. There is a responsibility that rests upon us, not of to-day but for the future, because when you increase the salary of one of the employees of the Federal Government that salary remains practically for all time, and within the last few decades there has been a gradual increase in many of the salaries. There is one other thing that ought to be referred to, and that is that when vacancies occur in the higher grades under the civil service men are gradually advanced from class 1 to class 2 and class 3, and they gradually get higher wages until they reach class 4.

Then there is opportunity for those who are efficient—those who are interested in the department's work, those who are willing to show they are competent, are filling the higher places, and are able to rise and get away from a mere clerkship, and you find the men who are getting salaries of $3,600, $4,800, and $5,000, many of them chiefs of their bureaus, getting $5,000 and $6,000, were the worthy Government clerks who were willing to work more and complain less, who thought more about making efficient clerks, doing efficient service for the people, spending more time in doing that than in complaining about the penuriousness of the Government. I find in private employment those men who work with you and for you, who give their time and attention ungrudgingly and show a deep interest in your business, are thoughtful of your interests, those are the men who get out of the lower places and get along in the world. Inquiries have led me to believe this is largely true of the Government where men who start in at low wages, men inexperienced, who stand the ordinary civil-service examination, starting at the bottom and have several years' employment, are promoted to higher and higher places. Then the beauty of it is that there is no waste of time, the employment is fixed and permanent. When you work for a private employer and lean years come you are liable to be discharged. When you work for private individuals they are likely to find some excuse to get rid of you; but it is next to impossible to take a man off the Government service, and I say without hesitation that in accordance with the amount and units of labor performed that the Federal employees are paid better than they are paid for like services anywhere on this earth as a class. For years our Republican brethren controlled all branches of this Government. Nobody has charged them with not being liberal in treatment and in dealing with employees in the Federal service, and yet during those years there was no such demand for increases as are coming now and have come since the Democrats have been in power.

Now, the high cost of living is temporary—we all hope it will be temporary—which is due to war conditions and the fact that the countries in Europe are not going on with their private business, but the Governments have gone into the markets of the world and are mortgaging their posterity in buying supplies of food in order to insure themselves as nearly as they can for at least one year's supply of food in advance, building up an artificial high price for foods which the people of the United States have to meet in bidding for food. Unless they happen to have more of that particular food supply than they consume, they must enter the market and enter into competition with those people for foodstuffs at these enormous prices.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. It is utterly impossible for these enormous prices to long stay up, and the message that came from Germany to the neutral nations of the world that they wanted peace on the terms which they submitted to the neutral nations of the world immediately caused the food markets to respond, and there was an immediate drop in prices. Why? Because as certain as the war shall cease there will be an enormous drop, not only in the price of stocks, but in the price of foodstuffs, and that is due to the fact the Governments will get out of the market and will cease to purchase food at such enormous prices. This is all temporary, and we ought to consider it only for the time being. We ought to look to the thousands and millions of people in private employment, to the little bookkeepers, to the little clerks throughout the country in the towns and cities and villages and those sections of the country where they have had a crop failure, who have these wages to pay, and consider them. The man working on the farm, irrespective of where he lives, must take into consideration an inclement season, a failure of the crop.

If they happen to have a fat year or two, it may be followed in a few years by some lean year caused by unfavorable conditions. But that is not true with Government employees. Uncle Sam with his strong arm reaches out and he gets the money the very day and hour it is due and the Government employee is paid. I am tired, yes, I am getting sick, of this demogogy practiced here on the floor of this House with the idea of standing in well with the Government employee, with the idea of standing in with those people who are clamoring for these high wages. It is frequently contended that the various committees of the House do not give these people in the Government service consideration. But they do, and when you take into account, as I said of private employment, those people who are working on the farm, with all the uncertainties that they have in private life and in private business, in sickness, in the change of market conditions, and then take the certainty, which is like a bond, of getting your salary at the end of the month and the ease with which it is earned, you will understand why the Government service is the most sought for service of all the services in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I was a Government clerk in Washington City 39 years ago, in the Post Office Department. There has not been a general, systematic, scientific change in the classification, a general increase, or equalization of Government salaries since I severed my connection with the Post Office Department 40 years ago. I think the record will show there has not been a general increase in Government salaries in half a century. These clerks and other officials, with few exceptions, are to-day being paid the same wages that they were paid 40 and 50 years ago. Now, in your mind contrast the purchasing power of a dollar to-day with the purchasing power of a dollar 40 and 50 years ago. What this Congress ought to do, and what I urged upon the Committee on Appropriations several years ago upon this floor was that there should be a careful revision, a reclassification, a readjustment, and a general increase of Government salaries in every branch of the service in Washington City and throughout the country.

I also appealed for needed, humane, and just legislation for the worthy superannuated Government officials.

We ought to iron out all of the existing injustices and all of the long-standing inequalities and do what is right, just, and proper as regards the interests of the Government and in fairness to our faithful and efficient public servants. We come here hurriedly, and the members of this great Appropriations Committee are overcrowded with work. They do the very best they can with the time and the great and enormous amount of work which they have to deal with in the preparation of the many great supply bills of the Government. We ought, in justice to ourselves, in the interest of fair play, to insert in this bill a provision creating either a commission or a special committee to take charge of this subject from the adjournment of this Congress to the convening of the new Congress in December and come here next winter and adopt a report along sane and just business lines.

If any great private corporation or firm should attempt to conduct and manage its business as the business of the Government of the United States is managed, that corporation or firm would be wrecked. This great body is made up largely of lawyers, 90 per cent, I doubt not, who are not trained as practical, experienced business men in dealing with executive and complicated business methods. It would be perhaps a fortunate thing for the American people if at least one-half of Congress was made up of successful, trained, and experienced business men.

The Government of the United States after all is a business corporation, the largest corporation in the world. The taxpayers, the voters, the people are the stockholders. So in the management of this great corporation we ought to conduct its affairs just as the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation, with 200,000 employees, or other great corporations are conducted, and fix the scale of wages upon a standard based upon efficiency, upon the character of the work, and the value and importance of the services rendered. But here we take a nibble at it, a few hours in a hasty running debate on a bill from a committee which is swamped with work. Everybody's business in Congress is nobody's business. This unsettled thing goes on year after year, until half a century has passed away. We are now where we were 50 long years ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I do not wish to do so. The gentleman can follow me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have nothing but words of praise for my worthy colleague [Mr. BYRNS] in charge of this bill. Considering his surroundings and his environment and his opportunities, he has done remarkably well. But I deny the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] that our prosperity is temporary. We have it from the leaders of the Democratic Party that the present prosperity is to last as long as Woodrow Wilson is President, because it is based on so-called Democratic "constructive legislation."

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is wrong about my saying "prosperity." I said the high cost of living was temporary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, if high wages are to be maintained for four years in private manufacturing business and in commercial lines, why not measure up the scale of wages in the Government service at once. Here in the pending bill is an increase of $1 a week for certain Government employees. That is a magnificent advance in wages for the hard-working, married Government employee on an annual salary of $540 with which to meet the enormous increase in the cost of living. Ten years ago Congress took as an excuse the advance in the cost of living and increased the salary of every Member of Congress 50 per cent—increased it from $5,000 to $7,500. If Congress could do that 10 years ago for its Members, why should Congress hesitate or refuse 10 years later to do a plain, simple act of justice to this great deserving army of efficient Government employees in Washington and in every State of the Union?

Oh, the gentleman from Mississippi, from a State in which they have a low standard of wages, is afraid of his constituents. I would rather be dead than be a coward. I have never yet attempted to evade my responsibility as a Member of this House to vote my honest convictions and to do what my conscience told me was right and just. It costs a Government official more to live in this magnificent city than elsewhere. A Government official must dress better here than the man on the farm in the swamps of Mississippi. I desire as a Member of this House to show my appreciation and my sense of justice by helping our competent, worthy, and deserving officials here and elsewhere. I earnestly hope this House will measure up to its plain duty on this question and write on the statute book an act of justice which has been delayed for half a century. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to detain the committee but a moment or two, but there has been so repeatedly made the statement, both on the floor and in the press, that there has been no revision of salaries of Government employees—the gentleman from Tennessee says in 39 years; other gentlemen say in 50 years—that I am not willing to let the statement go unchallenged. I have been a Member of this House for 14 years, and during three-fourths of that time, nearly, a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not recall a single bill that has ever been reported in that time that did not carry increases in salary for some employees—sometimes many, sometimes few. And that has been going on not only for the years I speak of from my personal knowledge, but had been going on for many, many years prior thereto. So that the statement that there has been no general revision may be technically accurate, and yet the impression desired to be produced is as false as a half truth always is false.

There is another statement that goes unchallenged frequently, and that is that men are employed here by the Government at less wage than private employers pay for a similar class of work. Just the opposite is true, and I will guarantee to say that if a commission is appointed—and I hope one may be appointed—to go fully into the matter and investigate in the very newspaper offices that daily tell us here in Washington our duty in the matter they will find that the salaries paid there for a similar class of work is less than paid by the Government to its employees. With the exception of a few high-grade men, some of the lowest paid men are reporters employed by some newspapers, and it is so understood by all who are conversant with the facts.

Now, I am glad to vote for the increase that the committee has recommended. I am not prepared to say that it represents exact justice. Exact justice can not be done by any general rule. But I think it is high time that the country should understand that it is not true that the Government treats its employees niggardly, here or elsewhere. The statement will not hold. Whether they are engaged in manual labor or in clerical labor, speaking by and large, they are better paid, both in the amount they receive, and in the leave they get, and in the privileges they get, and their hours of labor, than men employed in similar employment elsewhere.

I come from a city of some fair size. I know something about terms of employment, even if I do happen to rest under the disadvantage of having been an attorney at law, which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] seems to think is a very reprehensible fact. Perhaps he illustrates the old rule that what we least understand we most resent. But certain it is the fact remains that the Government has not treated its employees niggardly. I do not desire it to do so now.

In my judgment, the trouble with Government employment is this: We have too many men in the lower grades, being paid small salaries, who do not do much work, and too few men being paid larger salaries, giving a full day's work for the salaries they receive; and what ought to be done is to see to it that less men are necessary to do the work to be done, and then pay them a higher wage.

I am not urging now that the hours of employment should be increased. The Government's clerical employees are better off than employees that I know of in commercial cities. In my city you will find the average clerk going down to his work at 8 o'clock. He is lucky to leave for home a little before 6. He will go, the last two or three nights of the month, and stay at his office for several hours in order to check up and balance the books for the end of the month. And that condition is the usual condition in America.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting the income tax: For expenses of assessing and collecting the income tax as provided in Title I of an act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, including the employment of agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, and messengers in the District of Columbia, and the several collection districts, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, including not to exceed $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence, $1,700,000; and authority is given to use $40,000 of said sum for the employment in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia of necessary clerical and other personal services, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman in charge of the bill state wherein the appropriation provided for here differs from that allowed last year? I understand the duties of the Internal-Revenue Office have been considerably increased by the new revenue laws, particularly that pertaining to the collection of the income tax.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is the same amount that was allowed last year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The department has asked for no more than it received last year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is all the department asked for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it the same that was allowed last year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is the same that was allowed last year, and the same that was estimated for this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting the tax on estates, munitions, etc.: For expenses of assessing and collecting the tax as provided by Titles I, II, and III, of an act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, and to pay such sums as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may deem necessary, $340,000, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to appoint and pay from this appropriation all necessary officers, experts, agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, messengers, and janitors, and to rent such quarters, incur expense for telephone service, purchase such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for employment or use in the District of Columbia, or any collection district of the United States, or any of the Territories thereof: Provided, That not more than $40,000 of the amount appropriated may be used for the employment in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia of necessary clerical help at rates to be fixed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This appropriation of $340,000 is new, is it not?

Mr. SISSON. No; that is not new.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Covering the collection of the tax on estates, munitions, and so forth.

Mr. SISSON. At the bottom of page 56?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; for collecting the tax on estates, and so forth.

Mr. SISSON. No. That was carried in the deficiency appropriation last year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was carried in the deficiency bill at this same amount, $340,000?

Mr. SISSON. I think it is exactly the same.

Mr. GOOD. It is exactly the same.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is due to the passage of the new revenue bill, containing the income-tax provision?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman state how many persons are employed in the service of collecting the tax on estates, munitions, and so forth?

Mr. SISSON. I can not; but if the gentleman desires I will make an investigation and find out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman state approximately how many persons are employed under this appropriation?

Mr. SISSON. No; but they are all employed under the classified service. The clerk informs me that there are something like 100.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One hundred employees are engaged in this particular branch of the Internal-Revenue Service?

Mr. SISSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restricting the sale of opium, etc.: For expenses to enforce the provisions of the act approved December 17, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," including the employment of agents, deputy collectors, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, clerks, and messengers in the field and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, including not to exceed $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence, $300,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Here is an item of $300,000 for enforcing the so-called Harrison antinarcotic law. The Supreme Court has passed upon that law, so that prosecutions in certain cases have not been made recently by the department. In view of that fact I should like to ask whether the entire staff employed for the purpose of enforcing the antinarcotic law is still employed by the department, and whether there is any use for their services to the extent of $300,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. So far as I am able to state, the entire staff is still employed, and it is contemplated they will be employed during the next fiscal year. The Secretary of the Treasury estimated for the sum that is allowed in this bill, $300,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reports coming from some of the large cities indicate that there has been no very great success in restricting the use of narcotics by habitual users, at least so far as the Government's power to restrict it is concerned. A number of cases have been tried in the courts of Philadelphia of which I have some knowledge, and they have been thrown out. I think some recommendations on this subject have been made by the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to an amendment to the antinarcotic law. Now, the question is, Are we maintaining all the machinery to the extent of $300,000 for enforcing a law which the Supreme Court has indicated is not enforcable in some respects?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This force is not used in prosecuting in the courts offenders against this act. This is for the purpose of ferreting out and detecting violations. Now, I happen to know of my personal knowledge that a great deal of very effective work has been done in the city from which I come by representatives of this department, and I assume that it is being done all over the country in the same way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The department has already a number of agents and representatives to enforce this law, but this bill provides that the appropriation shall be applied not only to the employment of deputy collectors, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, clerks, and so forth, but those "to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Now, if we are at a standstill with regard to the enforcement of the law, and some new legislation is necessary, why are we giving to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the power to appoint new officials when apparently there is nothing to be done?

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that my understanding is that that decision might affect some prosecutions, but it would in no wise decrease the force employed for the detection of violations of the law. Now, this force, of course, is limited by this appropriation. The words "to be appointed by him" would simply permit appointments to be made where necessary up to the limit of this appropriation. But if a man should die or resign and the appointment of a successor was necessary, that language would be necessary to carry it out. I suppose that was in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It looks to the future; and if there is nothing to be done, I was wondering why he would want to appoint new officials.

Mr. SISSON. The decision in no wise prevents the enforcement of the law. It is only in reference to the enforcement of some features of the law. The Supreme Court did not declare the law to be unconstitutional. They decided a case, and the decision was stare decisis as to that particular case, and would, of course, be the guide in future prosecutions in all cases exactly on all fours with that, but the decision in no wise affected the validity of the law generally.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know whether any legislation has been proposed looking to the carrying out of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SISSON. I have not heard of any legislation. Of course, that would not come before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would not come before the Appropriations Committee, but has anything appeared in the testimony before the Appropriations Committee bearing upon this subject?

Mr. SISSON. Not a word, as I am informed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course the gentleman understands that druggists and physicians are all required to keep records.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and I happen to know that that was the main purpose of the so-called Harrison antinarcotic law, and it did not go further than to provide for registration. That is a part of the trouble that the people are confronted with now who are undertaking to suppress the opium trade.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The force employed under this lump-sum appropriation are used largely for the purpose of investigating druggists and their records, to see whether the various drug stores and physicians are complying with the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To make a long story short, the committee are convinced, then, that there is a necessity for the use of this entire $300,000 to carry out the law so far as it may be in force.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Most clearly, from the statement made by those representing the Bureau of Internal Revenue bofore the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEPENDENT TREASURY.

Baltimore, office of assistant treasurer: That portion of section 3595 of the Revised Statutes which provides for the appointment of an assistant treasurer of the United States at Baltimore is repealed from and after July 1, 1917.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COADY: Page 58, line 21, after the word "treasurer" strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert, in lieu thereof, the following:

"Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $1,900; exchange teller, $1,800; vault clerk, $1,800; clerks—two at $1,600 each, three at $1,400 each, three at $1,200 each, three at $1,000 each; messenger, $840; three watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $31,500."

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment strikes out the following provision in the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations:

Baltimore, office of assistant treasurer: That portion of section 3595 of the Revised Statutes which provides for the appointment of an assistant treasurer of the United States at Baltimore is repealed from and after July 1, 1917.

I know it is and has been the policy of the Committee on Appropriations eventually to do away with all the subtreasuries in the United States, upon the theory that the Federal reserve banks would perform the functions now ordinarily performed by these Subtreasuries. In this connection I would like to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 15, 1914, a discussion between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], pertaining to this same item. The gentleman from Iowa said, in connection with this appropriation not only for the Baltimore Subtreasury but for the other Subtreasuries throughout the United States, amounting to $500,000:

Then the gentleman from New York must agree with me that the Committee on Appropriations, in this case, ought to have refused to report out this appropriation of half a million dollars.

The gentleman from New York replied:

I think not. The gentleman from Iowa will recall that not until this session did the committee wait to inquire into this matter, but at the last session of Congress, about a year ago, the committee took up the question as to the necessity of continuing the Independent Treasury system and Subtreasuries. It was then stated by officials of the Treasury Department that it had been impossible to determine the effect upon the Independent Treasury system of the operation of the Federal reserve act. I understand that no one lives who can tell just what effect the Federal reserve act will have upon the Subtreasuries or the Independent Treasury system until it is in working order and those connected with it have an opportunity to determine what is to be done. I think it would be great foolhardiness to abolish the Independent Treasury system without making ample provision for the continuance of its functions.

Continuing further, the gentleman from New York said:

The gentleman from Iowa must agree that until it is possible to say definitely whether there is necessity to continue the Subtreasuries or whether it is necessary to modify the law in some way, so as to fit in the Independent Treasury system with the new financial system resulting from the Federal reserve act, it would not be the part of wisdom to refuse to appropriate for the compensation of officials necessary to continue the fiscal operations of the Government so far as they are controlled by the Independent Treasury system.

Again, in March, 1916, an effort was made to strike this item from the bill, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who was in charge of the bill, was interrogated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee why it is that appropriations continue to be made for these Subtreasuries since we have established the Federal reserve bank act, which provides that all public moneys shall be deposited in those banks. What do the Subtreasuries do now?

The gentleman from Tennessee replied:

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. These Subtreasuries are places of deposit for our coin, and they also do the business of cashing checks and handling checks drawn on the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. What are the Federal reserve banks for?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, the latter service is performed by the national depositories also. The Treasury officials have been giving some attention to the question of whether or not the duties of these subtreasuries can be transferred or devolved upon the Federal reserve banks, at least to a certain extent. But the gentleman is no doubt aware of the fact that in order to do this it would be necessary to pass some legislation and make provision for some of the duties now performed by the Subtreasuries. While most of the members of the committee are in accord with the idea of the gentleman from Illinois, that there might be an elimination of much, if not all, of the work done by these independent treasuries, we were unwilling to arbitrarily cut off all the appropriations until there had been some consideration given to the question of what particular agency was to perform the service now performed by them, and proper legislation passed in order to make it possible to transfer the duties.

Now, the gentleman will find in this bill, on page 62—

Referring to the bill under consideration—

a provision which the committee has recommended, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress at the beginning of the next session which, if any, of the Subtreasuries shall be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued, the full reason for such continuance; or if any should be discontinued, what legislation will be necessary in order to transfer their funds or functions to the Federal reserve banks. The committee recommended that provision, so that at the next session of Congress we might possibly be able to devise some means whereby some of these independent treasuries may be eliminated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the absence of the report, notwithstanding the fact that we have no additional light on the subject, the committee comes in here with the provision, not striking out all the Subtreasuries, but striking out the Subtreasury at Baltimore and eliminating that, and that only. There are nine Subtreasuries in the United States—at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, San Francisco, and New Orleans. As I understand the policy of this committee, as expressed in the debates heretofore held in this Chamber and expressed in the committee room, their policy is and will be to strike down all the Subtreasuries that I have just mentioned.

Now, if they want to eliminate the Subtreasury upon the theory that it is performing the functions of the Federal reserve bank, why did not they go to the cities that have both Subtreasuries and Federal reserve banks? Why did they pick out Baltimore, that has no Federal reserve bank, but only a Subtreasury? The Subtreasury performs a most useful function in the city of Baltimore, and if this provision stays in the bill that city will be deprived of something of great benefit and importance to the financial interests of our State.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. What does the Subtreasury do for the city of Baltimore?

Mr. COADY. The Subtreasury keeps on hand an immense amount of money, and a little later on my colleague [Mr. LINTHICUM] has a statement of the receipts and expenditures which he will explain in detail.

Mr. PLATT. Suppose the Subtreasury is abolished, would not the money taken from Government collections of customs and revenue be put in the Baltimore banks?

Mr. COADY. If this item stays in the bill and the Baltimore Subtreasury is eliminated it will be necessary for our banks in Baltimore and other institutions that take in a great deal of coin to pack that coin and send it to Washington at considerable expense and trouble.

Mr. PLATT. Could not the Baltimore banks take care of it themselves?

Mr. COADY. They can, but they must send it to Washington; they could not keep all of the coin there.

Mr. PLATT. They can if they want to.

Mr. COADY. Oh, no; they could not; that would not be good business. The gentleman from New York is wise enough and able enough to know that money must circulate, that you can not keep it in the vaults, and so this money would have to be shipped to Washington.

Mr. PLATT. You will have more money to use if you keep it there in Baltimore.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman knows that the Subtreasury is like a bank, and that the money keeps coming in and going out. The bank that keeps its money in its vaults is not prosperous.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up very much time of the committee. I want to call attention to the fact that the Subtreasury has continued in Baltimore since 1870, or 46 years. Around it has grown up tremendous financial and banking interests. We are not like the inland cities; we are a seaport. We are perhaps the largest grain-exporting city in the country at this time. We have great customs receipts, all of which go to the Subtreasury.

This matter was taken up by the Appropriations Committee without any consideration and without any opportunity to place our case before it. The Treasury sent in estimates providing for the Subtreasury at Baltimore, and the first intimation that we from Maryland had that the committee had stricken out the Baltimore item was when the report was filed in this House. We had no opportunity to go and lay our case before the committee. We had no intimation that it was going to be eliminated. You may imagine how surprised the people were when at this time Baltimore is forging ahead as it never has before, when the Bethlehem Steel Co. is about to enlarge and increase its plant at an expenditure of $50,000,000, when we have at Curtis Bay new plants coming in within the last two years involving an expenditure of $25,000,000, when we are increasing on every hand.

Now comes the blow to remove the Subtreasury at a time when we most need it. You gentlemen who were here when the Federal reserve act was passed and when the Federal reserve banks were located will remember that the people of Baltimore contended that the Government ought not to try to make water run up hill by creating a Federal reserve bank in Richmond instead of Baltimore. Nevertheless the bank went to Richmond. We are not complaining about Richmond having it, but we do say that as they have the Federal reserve bank we ought not to be further humiliated by taking away from us the Subtreasury.

I want to call further attention to the fact that every city in this country larger than Baltimore has a Federal reserve bank, and we do our business through the Subtreasury, which we otherwise might do through a Federal reserve bank. If the Subtreasuries are to be removed, why take it from Baltimore city, which has merely the Subtreasury and not a Federal reserve bank? If you are going to try it on some city, do it on some city which is amply provided by a Federal institution to do the business.

It has been asked of what use is the Subtreasury. I want to say that during the year from December 1, 1915, to November 30, 1916, the Subtreasury did a business of over $227,000,000. The following table shows it in detail:

Receipts.

Currency received for redemption	$19,525,881.00
Deposits for credit of 5 per cent redemption fund	14,846,478.00
Deposits received for official credit of United States disbursing officers	2,768,086.00
Deposits covering excess funds (collections from customs and internal-revenue receipts)	31,346,337.29
Deposits for issue of order gold certificates	9,700,000.00
Deposits of coin for exchange and redemption	10,158,486.26
Deposits received in payment of drafts charged through Baltimore Clearing House	15,211,305.28
Currency received for exchange of coin	10,155,092.00
Total	113,711,665.83

Disbursements.

Payments made on account of checks, drafts, coupons, etc	$19,352,380.92
Payments made in redemption of order gold certificates	9,610,000.00
Payments of currency made in redemption of coin	10,158,486.00
Payments of currency for mutilated currency	19,525,881.00
Shipments of currency	22,485,023.00
Payments of coin	15,155,092.00
Payments made on Treasurer United States transfer orders	5,324,800.00
Payments of emergency currency	150,150.00
Exchanges of currency	12,390,400.00
Total	114,152,212.92

If you take that away from us, all that business has to be done through Washington at a tremendous expense to our financial institutions.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The Subtreasury does not loan any money to anybody in Baltimore, does it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No.

Mr. PLATT. All it does is to take in money and lock it up so that you can not get at it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It does not lock up much of it. It pays it out on checks and drafts, it redeems currency that has been destroyed or defaced, it changes money into small coin so that it can be used in the large packing interests in Baltimore, and it does an innumerable number of things that help out in our financial world.

Mr. PLATT. Does it do anything that a national bank can not do?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Except locking up money?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Of course, a national bank could redeem currency which has been defaced or destroyed. It might change money, but can you imagine how much money it would compel the national banks to carry when you realize that the great packing interests of Baltimore do millions of dollars of business which they have to pay out in small coins, nickels and dimes and quarters? I can not imagine how much money the national banks would have to carry on deposit all of the time. You can imagine the business of this Subtreasury when I tell you that last year they did a business of over $227,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How does the Subtreasury furnish them money for their pay rolls?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I presume it gets a large part of it from Washington.

Mr. MANN. Does not it furnish it through the national banks?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; it furnishes small coin through the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. What do they turn in to get the coin?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Notes of large denomination, checks, and paper of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Which they could just as well turn in at their banks and get the same thing for it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am not disputing the fact that if you are going to take away the Subtreasury at Baltimore, we might be compelled to expand the actions of our national banks to cover all those processes, but I do say that it will cost our financial institutions more than $200,000 to do that, and all the appropriation here is $31,500 to maintain our Subtreasury.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that we ought to establish a Subtreasury at Detroit and one at Columbus and one at Cleveland?

Mr. LINTHICUM. There is reason why Baltimore ought to have it.

Mr. MANN. And not Detroit?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Baltimore is a port of entry.

Mr. MANN. So is Detroit.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Detroit is not a foreign port of entry.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly it is.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Not to any extent.

Mr. MANN. It is right on the border, and Baltimore is not. Baltimore is an inland town.

Mr. TALBOTT. It is on Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Nobody would seriously consider the business that Detroit does with Canada. Baltimore is one of nine cities with Subtreasuries, and you pick out Baltimore and eliminate it and leave all of the other Subtreasuries in all of the other cities where they also have Federal reserve banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. There is no reason why Baltimore should be separated and segregated as the one city to do away with the Subtreasury. If the Subtreasury is not of any use in Baltimore, of what use is it in any city that has a Federal bank? Why not take it from that city?

Mr. MANN. That is what we would like to know. We would like to eliminate all of them.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman from Illinois add to the bill the Chicago Subtreasury?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to eliminate the Chicago Subtreasury.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You have a Federal reserve bank in Chicago, and it can perform the functions of the Subtreasury.

Mr. MANN. There are lots of cities that do not have Federal reserve banks or Subtreasuries, and they have not all gone out of business.

Mr. GOOD. If Baltimore had a Federal reserve bank, would the gentleman then think they should still have the Subtreasury?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say this: That if Baltimore had a Federal reserve bank, and you were going to do away with the Subtreasuries and give the power which the Subtreasury now has to the Federal reserve bank, and do it in all the cities that have Federal reserve banks, I do not know that we should object.

Mr. GOOD. What good purpose would the Subtreasury perform that could not be performed by the Federal reserve bank, if one were located there?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am told that with very slight legislation, if any, the Federal reserve bank could perform the functions of the Subtreasury, but we have no Federal reserve bank.

Mr. GOOD. Then there would be no need of a Subtreasury at Baltimore, even from the gentleman's standpoint, if you had a Federal reserve bank there?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am told, I say, that with slight additional legislation the Federal reserve bank can perform the functions of the Subtreasury, but the fact is, as I have said, that Baltimore has no Federal reserve bank. So let us have our Subtreasury and do business as we have done for nearly a half century.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. Does not the Government have a Government depository in your banks?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The Government deposits in the national banks and then the money is transferred to the Subtreasury, and the custom receipts are sent to the Subtreasury.

Mr. LOBECK. And they would be reported to Washington?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Of course.

Mr. LOBECK. That is what they have to do in all the cities.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That may be where they do not have any Federal reserve bank.

Mr. LOBECK. We do more packing business in my city alone in a week than you do in a month.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, there is a statement made that Baltimore had only a cash balance of $16,000,000 in the Subtreasury. I want to say the only reason Baltimore had a cash balance of $16,000,000 in the Subtreasury was, before we built our new customhouse, where the Subtreasury is located, the money was reduced by the Treasury Department to $16,000,000 because of the fact we had not the vault room for it, but in the present building we now have room for some $50,000,000. But we have been able with that $16,000,000 to do a business of $227,000,000, so that we have not found the necessity for a larger deposit. We should be commended rather than penalized for being able to do such large business with this limited capital. There is no need of having a larger deposit than you need to do business and we have found that $16,000,000 on deposit will do a business of $227,000,000.

Now, I ask this committee in all fairness and justice to restore our Subtreasury appropriation. If in the future you consider these Subtreasuries are not needful and you decide to pass certain additional legislation giving that power to the Federal reserve banks, let us go before the committee and lay our claim before the committee and let it decide upon proof furnished to the committee and a proper hearing that it is unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But do not exercise this snap judgment on us, which is unjust to the Baltimore Representatives. We had not the slightest chance to go before the committee. We knew nothing about this situation. There are people who wonder why Baltimore should be singled out without being given notice as to the abolishment of our Subtreasury. What we ask is fair play. Do not make fish of one and flesh of the other. Do not take the Baltimore Subtreasury away from Baltimore without giving her a chance for a hearing, a chance to produce evidence. Do not single her out as one in nine because we happen to be near by and the first on the list. Give us a fair show in this matter and let us have our Subtreasury restored to us at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the following is a letter from the Acting Assistant Treasurer of the United States:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES SUBTREASURY,
Baltimore, Md., December 14, 1916.

Hon. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At the request of Mr. C. C. Homer, president of the Baltimore Clearing House, I beg to hand you the analysis of the figures given you by Mr. Homer showing the transactions at the Baltimore Subtreasury from December 1, 1915, to November 30, 1916, aggregating more than $200,000,000.

In reference to the cash balance of $16,000,000 carried in the vaults of the Subtreasury at this city, please be advised that this amount may be reduced at any time by transfer order from the Treasurer of the United States, and was reduced by many millions of dollars to relieve the congestion of the vaults pending the construction of the present quarters, which have vault space to accommodate $50,000,000 in coin.

The millions transferred have never been replaced, and the fact that the present balance has not reached larger proportions, notwithstanding annual transactions of over $200,000,000, is due to the fact that the heavy deposits made with the Subtreasury are practically offset by the large volume of its disbursements.

Respectfully,

C. P. HAMMOND,
Acting Assistant Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen from Maryland [Mr. COADY and Mr. LINTHICUM] have set forth the claims of Baltimore in the Subtreasury matter very ably. It does seem a sort of injustice to take away the Subtreasury from Baltimore without giving a hearing, but I desire to say there is no reason for a Subtreasury in any place except as a matter of sentiment. A Subtreasury is of no benefit to the people of Baltimore, but it is a positive detriment. It takes in the money collected by the customhouse and locks it up, and if you take it away they will put that money in the banks of Baltimore, where it would serve as a basis of credit. All the Subtreasury can do for business is to make change. Perhaps if a man has got a $1,000 bill he could split it up in the Subtreasury, but the banks can do the same thing, and far more.

Mr. COADY. If the gentleman will permit, I want to say in answer to the gentleman's query in that respect the banks would be compelled to keep a large amount of their own money on hand. They would be compelled to keep a large amount of money idle in their vaults.

Mr. PLATT. They would get it from the United States Government.

Mr. COADY. They could do that, but they would have to send to Washington for money and pay the express on it, which would be expensive, and of course they would lose the interest.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no; they would not have to bring money from Washington, except perhaps rarely.

Mr. COADY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but they would. They would be compelled to send to Washington and have the money expressed to Baltimore.

Mr. PLATT. Where does the money come from in the Baltimore Subtreasury now? Is it not taken in at Baltimore through the customhouse and the internal-revenue collector's office?

Mr. COADY. Not all the money. There are cancellations and——

Mr. PLATT. The reason why a Subtreasury was put at Baltimore was because considerable sums are collected in the customhouse there from duties on imports, as Baltimore is an important port of entry. There is no money sent there that does not come from there originally. Large amounts are collected in Baltimore, and that money ought to be deposited in the banks in Baltimore. The whole Subtreasury system was established in 1846 to take the place of the United States bank. Previous to that time the money was turned into the United States bank. Now we have practically restored the United States bank in creating the Federal reserve banks, and there is no earthly reason why we should keep up the Subtreasuries. The money collected from customs and internal revenue ought to be put in the banks, and there is no bank in the United States that would not be glad to get it and put up collateral for it or make any other arrangement required. Of course, they would have to keep a large amount of money on hand, but they would get it in the form of deposits from the United States Government and it would be a great benefit to them.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT. The bankers in Baltimore were all here before this committee, and they prefer to have the Subtreasury in which to deposit.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose it is a matter of pride with Baltimore to keep this Subtreasury. Baltimore ought to have a reserve bank, and if you abolish this Subtreasury you will have a branch reserve bank, and the branch will be so big that it will wag the other end.

Mr. COADY. Do I understand the gentleman's position to be this: This Congress has passed considerable legislation for the benefit of the working people of this country, for the farmers, for the cotton growers of the South, and do I understand his position to be to object to an appropriation of $31,500 for the benefit of the business men and financiers of Baltimore, who give the money to enable the wheels of progress to go around?

Mr. PLATT. I may say that the Subtreasury in Baltimore is a positive detriment to the business interests of Baltimore, and the whole Subtreasury system is a drag on the business interests of the United States. I do not except the New York Subtreasury. There may be reasons for keeping a Subtreasury in New York, but I do not believe they are convincing. I think the money collected by the United States Government as revenue ought to go into the banks, where business men can borrow it if they want to do so, under such regulations and safeguards as the Government may see fit to put in force. The Subtreasury is a scheme for taking money and locking it up. It is an old stocking, a scheme for hoarding money. A bank is for keeping money in circulation. It is not an old stocking and is of benefit to the business interests of a city.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman evidently did not follow the statement read by my colleague [Mr. LINTHICUM], which showed receipts of over $100,000,000 and an expenditure of more than the amount received, showing that there is no question of the old stocking there. It is a circulating medium.

Mr. PLATT. The Government pays out money on appropriations and pays it out as Congress votes it out. It takes in the actual cash, and does not create credit or put money in circulation as a bank does.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman think if you are going to do away with the Subtreasuries at all, you ought to do away with them all? Do you think it better to leave the Subtreasury in cities that have not reserve banks than leave it in cities that have reserve banks?

Mr. PLATT. If you take this away from the city of Baltimore, you will have a reserve bank there, in my opinion.

Mr. TALBOTT. Let us have the bank first.

Mr. PLATT. I will help you.

Mr. COADY. I would like to say to the gentleman that there will have to be some changes down in the Treasury Department before Baltimore has any chance.

Mr. PLATT. That may be. I think it can be definitely proved to anybody that a Subtreasury is of no benefit to any town except as it employs a certain number of clerks. How many in Baltimore?

Mr. COADY. Twenty-one.

Mr. PLATT. All that it does for Baltimore is to pay the salaries of the assistant treasurer, cashier, and clerks who are there, and in these prosperous times every one of these men can get a better job if he would go out and hustle for it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I realize how difficult it is to abolish a job. There is no man or woman who holds a position under the Government of the United States but that can give a good and plausible reason for the continuation of the position, and there is no one so much without influence or friends that he can not persuade great numbers of estimable people to urge that the position be continued. That is the case here.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. If I get more time; but I do not want to yield for irrelevant matters.

Mr. COADY. Does the gentleman deny that these Subtreasuries are a great convenience to the business interests of the cities in which they are located?

Mr. MANN. I do. I deny that they are any convenience to the business interests, and assert that the only reason the gentleman is urging the continuation of the Subtreasury in Baltimore is because his leg has been pulled by it. He has to appear and advocate it. The business men of Baltimore think they have to do so. They are asked to do so by the Subtreasury office. They are going to discriminate against Baltimore. You can raise that cry in any hamlet, village, or city in the United States and get an uproar at once from all the people there.

Mr. COADY. Does the gentleman admit that they are of great convenience?

Mr. MANN. I do not. I assert that they are no convenience to the business public.

Mr. COADY. I am sorry the gentleman is such a poor business man.

Mr. MANN. That is just a gratuitous insult.

Mr. COADY. I did not mean it as such, and if the gentleman took it as such I withdraw it. It was only a little pleasantry.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman that not one of the officeholders ever came to me with a proposition.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; they have sent somebody. They have sent them to me. I know. It comes from the Subtreasury office.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentlemen will permit, I will say that we had a hearing yesterday morning, and the man most interested appeared before that committee, and he is holding the office of subtreasurer in Baltimore.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to criticize a subtreasurer for wanting to hold his place.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Let me answer the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. No; not in my time. It is enough to answer the gentleman myself, let alone somebody else. You can not stop one office without a contest.

Now, when we passed the Federal reserve act everybody here, I think, believed we were going to do away with the Subtreasuries. When the matter first came before the House on this appropriation bill after the Federal reserve bank was created I asked why we were continuing the Subtreasuries. The Committee on Appropriations did not know, but did not feel warranted in abolishing the offices without further information. The matter came up again last year. Last year the Committee on Appropriations, in reporting the bill, recommended that there be a report from the Treasury upon it, and included in the law this provision:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session which of the subtreasuries, if any, should be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if in his opinion any should be continued, the reasons in full for such continuance—

And so forth. The Secretary of the Treasury, in violation of the law, in plain disregard of the mandate of Congress, has insulted us by refusing to make any report upon the subject at all. Since when——

Mr. LINTHICUM. He included it in the Book of Estimates, did he not?

Mr. MANN. Since when has an executive officer of the Government grown so great that he refuses to report to Congress in reference to the possible abolition of an office in order to maintain some pet in a job? He is not trying to maintain the pet in Baltimore, probably. Perhaps the subtreasurer in Baltimore is not the particular man in the mind of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LINTHICUM. He included it in the Book of Estimates, which was sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. He did not comply with the directions of the law, which directed him to give the reasons for the continuation of any of these Subtreasuries; and being unable to find any reason for their continuation, he just plainly disregarded the act of this Congress and said nothing at all, and included these estimates in the Book of Estimates. There is no good reason for the continuation of any of the Subtreasuries.

I am sorry that Baltimore happened to be at the head of the list and happened to be struck first. I wish it had been Chicago. There is no reason there for a Subtreasury.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We will trade.

Mr. MANN. We ought to find nerve enough to abolish some of the useless offices now maintained by the Government, especially when we have created other offices to do the work which they now do.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is anyone who considered the matter who did not expect all of the Subtreasuries of the United States to be abolished after the passage of the Federal reserve act. It seems to me there can be absolutely no excuse for maintaining two governmental institutions, one of which is capable of performing all of the duties and all of the necessary functions required for the Government and the people.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT. If that is true, why did you not start on some location where they have a Federal reserve bank?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am coming to that. That is the main purpose for which I rose.

Mr. TALBOTT. Was not this appropriation estimated for in the Book of Estimates?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was estimated for in the Book of Estimates, and I will come to that if the gentleman will bear with me. Shortly after the Federal reserve act was passed the Committee on Appropriations began to make an effort to elicit from the Government officials the reason why all the Subtreasuries of the United States should not be abolished and their duties transferred to the Federal reserve banks. The act creating the Federal reserve banks specifically authorizes them to be made fiscal agents of the Government, and certainly there can be no reason why the duties performed by any Subtreasury can not be performed by the Federal reserve bank; and if my information is correct the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks are very anxious to have those duties transferred to those banks. In addition to this, the farm-loan banks may also be used as fiscal agents.

Now, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] asked me why Baltimore was singled out for recommendation in this particular instance. As I said a moment ago, ever since the passage of the Federal reserve act the Committee on Appropriations has been endeavoring to get some information upon which it could base some report to the House with respect to these various Subtreasuries. The hearings of last year and the hearings of the year before will all show that this matter was gone into fully with the Treasury officials, and, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a moment ago, failing to get the information that we have called for repeatedly, the Committee on Appropriations recommended to this House, and Congress wrote into the law, a specific direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to report at the beginning of this session of Congress whether or not any of these Subtreasuries could be abolished, and, if not, to give Congress the reason why they should be maintained, or why we should not abolish them all.

Now, when the committee took up the hearings at this session we called for that report, but were informed that it had not yet been submitted; and, later on, before this bill was finally reported, we again called for it, and were unable to get it. I am merely stating the facts. The Secretary of the Treasury has been away in connection with his official duties as a member of the Farm Loan Board, and I am not criticizing anyone for the failure.

Now, we were convinced, and, I think, any man on the floor of this House will be convinced if he stops and considers it for a moment, that there is absolutely no reason, no economical reason, why any of these Subtreasuries should be maintained. The whole nine Subtreasuries are costing the people of this country approximately $500,000 every year in salaries, and I want some gentleman to tell me why the people of this country should be taxed to maintain these nine Subtreasuries when, as a matter of fact, these Federal reserve banks can perform the same functions with the same degree of convenience to the public and at no additional expense to the people. In addition to that——

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT. What I want to know is why the gentleman did not select some place that has a Federal reserve bank and a Subtreasury, both, and wipe out the Subtreasury there, and then find out how it would work. That is what I want to know—why you discriminate against Baltimore and leave undisturbed the Federal reserve-bank cities where the other Subtreasuries are?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When the committee began to consider this matter at this session, with such information as could be obtained, it was disclosed to the committee that Baltimore carried the least amount of funds of any Subtreasury in the United States on November 29 of this year. The statement was made that on that day Baltimore was carrying funds of the Government amounting to $16,000,000; that Boston was carrying funds amounting to $33,000,000, Chicago $115,000,000, Cincinnati $33,000,000, New Orleans $30,000,000, New York $325,000,000, Philadelphia $25,000,000, St. Louis $43,000,000, and San Francisco $90,000,000.

It developed in the hearings that Baltimore was carrying less than 50 per cent——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It developed that Baltimore was carrying 50 per cent less funds than any other Subtreasury in the United States; that it was the smallest and did less business than any of them.

Mr. TALBOTT. And yet did over $200,000,000 of business.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In addition to that, Baltimore is located within 40 miles of the city of Washington, within about an hour's ride of the main Treasury. The Baltimore banks can therefore get the necessary coin from the Treasury more cheaply and more quickly than the banks of any other city. As has been suggested here, there are large cities all over this country which have no Subtreasuries or Federal reserve banks, and we have not heard any complaint from the bankers and business men of those cities that their business is being injured because they have no Subtreasury.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. In view of the fact that we have no instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury, when our request was that if there was any reason for continuing the Subtreasury the reason be given, is not that a justification of the abolition of all of these Subtreasuries?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Ohio is entirely correct in his conclusion, and possibly if we abolish one of them, or if we abolish a number of them—and I am willing to vote to abolish all of them, because I do not believe they are necessary—if we abolish some of them, then if there is any real, genuine reason why they should be maintained, some one may furnish the reason to Congress, something which has not been done up to this time.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman introduce an amendment to abolish them?

Mr. TALBOTT. To abolish all of them?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will vote for such an amendment.

Mr. COADY. If the gentleman believes they ought to be abolished, he ought to be consistent enough to offer an amendment to do it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have been a Member of this House long enough to know that when you undertake to combine together a great many of these various propositions to abolish useless Government positions you have less opportunity to abolish any of them.

Mr. TALBOTT. That shows how unfair you are to our city of Baltimore.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. A few years ago, when a proposition was made to abolish all the needless and useless assay offices over the country, there was a combination of the delegations from the States in which those assay offices were located, as a result of which the proposition to abolish them was defeated; but I want to say to the gentleman from Maryland that if he will offer a proposition to abolish all of these Subtreasuries I will very cheerfully vote for it.

Mr. COADY. As I understand the gentleman, that is a warning to Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and some other cities to look out, that the same thing is coming to them.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not represented here as Maryland is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman ought to withdraw that remark.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is here, I think I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is a warning to this extent, that those cities should be sufficiently patriotic and interested in the general public good to understand that the Federal reserve banks can carry on the business of these Subtreasuries, and that in the interest of economy, in the interest of a tax-burdened people, this expense of over $500,000 ought to be taken from their shoulders and the functions of the Subtreasuries transferred to the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am going to take only a minute. The gentleman says the Federal reserve banks ought to take the places of these subtreasuries. I admit that they can in the cities where there are Federal reserve banks; and the bankers who came before the gentleman's committee yesterday from Baltimore stated that if they had a Federal reserve bank they would not be asking for the continuance of the subtreasury in Baltimore. But we have no Federal reserve bank. Now, what I want to know is, If you believe that the Federal reserve banks can take the place of the subtreasuries, why did you not select, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they could do it, a city with a Federal reserve bank? That is what I want to make this House understand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY], and I call upon gentlemen from the State of Massachusetts to witness what has just taken place in this House. Not such a combination of assay office representatives as the gentleman from Tennessee has kindly indicated existed heretofore, but a combination prepared to take away from the State of Massachusetts the Subtreasury that is now located at Boston, and that has been located there for many years. And taking the gentlemen at their own word, those who propose to abolish the Subtreasury at Baltimore, I call upon the gentlemen from Massachusetts in this House to take notice that they have warning that the next step is to abolish the Subtreasury at Boston, Mass. Let every gentleman from Massachusetts take notice that the committee have begun their work upon Baltimore, and have given notice that they propose to proceed against Massachusetts next.

Mr. GORDON. And Philadelphia, too.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It looks that way. I call upon gentlemen in this House representing the State of Illinois—and there are many of them, and very good, strong Representatives of the people of that great State—to observe that notice has been given that the next move will be to remove from the city of Chicago the Subtreasury that has been there for many years, and that has been doing excellent service.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. As a gentleman from Massachusetts, having every intention of voting for the amendment of the gentleman from Baltimore [Mr. COADY], I suggest that it is not always well to threaten people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of that statement I call upon the able Representatives of the great State of Ohio—and there are many of them in this House now, and others will be here when the time comes to vote upon this question—to observe that they have notice that the entering wedge has been driven for the destruction of all the Subtreasuries in the United States, and that the committee intend to proceed against the State of Ohio next year and to remove from Cincinnati the Subtreasury that has long existed at that place.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not, because I want to pass down the line. The gentleman is in opposition and wants to do away with the Subtreasury in New York. I am not in favor of that just now. I have been calling in clarion tones, as it were, to the gentlemen from Ohio to take notice that they are in danger of losing their Subtreasury. Are there any Representatives from Louisiana here? Well, let me suggest to them that they have had in New Orleans for many years a Subtreasury of which they have been proud and which they earnestly needed.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret I can not yield to my friend from Ohio. I want them all to take notice that they have notice from the committee in charge of this bill that the purpose is to do away with all Subtreasuries.

I call upon the Representatives from the State of New York, the great Empire State that usually defends itself well in this House, to observe that the committee has served notice that the destruction of this Subtreasury at Baltimore is but a move ahead of the taking away from New York of the Subtreasury which, according to the report read by the gentleman from Tennessee a moment ago, has housed more than $200,000,000 at a recent period. We are going to distribute this money to other sections of the country, and the New York Members will kindly take notice.

I call upon the Representatives from Pennsylvania to observe——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, it is the same thing with Missouri and the same thing with California. Gentlemen, get busy, for the "big stick" is on your trail. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the pro forma amendment to strike out the last two words. I do not know that I have knowledge which I can impart to the members of the committee as to the propriety or impropriety of the provision in the bill. I do know that the consensus of opinion in Illinois, and I believe in Indiana and generally throughout the country, that the member banks of the central reserve bank have not paper that they can discount and will not have in the future under the existing law in regard to Federal reserve banks. I do know further that there is a practically universal protest. I think I may safely say that over two-thirds of the member banks of the Federal reserve bank, or its branches, are uneasy and restless because they are compelled under the law, without one cent of interest, without any advantage to themselves, to make large deposits in the Federal reserve bank without interest or profit.

I think I know further that in the so-called and real depression that followed 1913, when we were in great trouble, that the relief that was given was not under the Federal reserve banking law, but it was given under a law that was continued for a year longer when the Federal reserve law was enacted. The relief came under the provisions of that law that was continued for one year.

Now, I know further, and I can safely say, that in the Middle West the members of these reserve banks keep deposits with the city banks in the Federal reserve cities for the reason that they get 2 per cent interest for the money that is not being used, and with the hope and expectation that if they want their money out of the banks where it is deposited in the reserve cities, that perchance they may get it out by the reserve-city banks furnishing the security that will enable them to get the money from the central reserve bank to pay the country banks what the city banks owe them.

Now, I do not know, under the existing conditions, whether the Subtreasuries should be abolished or not, but so far— and I think I could have substantially the uniform approval of the banks in the Middle West, the country banks, in this statement—that so far as I am concerned, I believe I am justified in saying that if they were present, without exception I would receive great applause for what I am saying now. [Applause.]

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I am sure that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is inconsiderate and uninformed when he undertakes to make to this House a statement that the member banks of the Federal Reserve System have not in their portfolios paper which may be rediscounted with the Federal reserve banks. As a matter of fact, when I last examined the figures, there was in the portfolios of the member banks, outside of the reserve and central reserve cities, $1,326,000,000 of paper that was subject to rediscount on the 90 days' basis and a large additional amount of cattle and other agricultural paper of six months' maturity. Of the 90 days' paper the great Middle West alone supplied, as I recall, nearly a third of the total amount, while of the cattle paper nearly the whole of it was furnished by the West and Southwest.

I further desire to say to the gentleman, when he represents to the House that the banking community of the United States does not derive any advantage from the Federal Reserve System, that his impression is radically different from that which I have, as well as from that which anybody must receive by close observation of the operations of the Federal Reserve System. The system, for the first time in 50 years, insures the banking community of the United States against precipitate crises in financial matters and the country against appalling panics. The banks of the country are thoroughly well satisfied, except a certain group that wants to continue to graft on commerce and industry by appropriating to itself the privilege of indiscriminate taxation. The banks that are most dissatisfied with the Federal Reserve System are not members of it, but desire to use its facilities without accepting its responsibilities.

I desire to insist, in spite of the gentleman's observation to the contrary, that it was the Federal Reserve Banking System that protected this country against a financial catastrophe when the European war broke out; and to his observation that it was the Vreeland-Aldrich Act that averted disaster, I desire to respond by saying that the original Vreeland-Aldrich Act was not worth the paper it was written on until the Sixty-third Congress radically amended its provisions and made it operative.

Under that act as originally passed the tax on emergency currency ranged from 6 to 10 per cent, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], one of the best-informed Members of the House, served notice upon Congress at the time that the Vreeland-Aldrich bill was pending that no prudently operated bank on earth could avail itself of its privileges; that it was preposterous to imagine that the crops of the country could be moved or urgent business be transacted with an emergency currency taxed at from 6 to 10 per cent. Moreover, the Republican chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House observed at the same time that any bank that would apply for currency under the terms of the Vreeland-Aldrich bill, with its prohibitive rate of taxation on emergency notes, would not need currency, but would need a receiver, and that if he were the Comptroller of the Currency he would appoint a receiver for it. It was not, therefore, the original Vreeland-Aldrich Act, but a very different act, that met the emergency in August, 1914. Furthermore, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the extension of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act constituted a provision of the Federal reserve act itself. But for the enactment of the Federal reserve act we should have had, when the crisis came, neither the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, which had expired by limitation, nor the Federal Reserve System. We should have been utterly helpless under the rigid restrictions of the old national bank act.

As to the merits of this proposition to abolish the Subtreasuries, I am not precisely informed. If they ought to be abolished, why they ought to be abolished, and that is all there is to it. The House should act without reference to the outcry of those who lustily protest, for undisguised local reasons, that an institution once created should forever be retained. The spectacle presented here a moment ago, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] appealed to Congressmen of States having subtreasuries to band together, regardless of the merits of the question, to prevent what may be a desirable economy in the conduct of the public business, was amazing. It was, indeed, the most extraordinary spectacle I have witnessed in the 15 years I have been a Member of this House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, frankly I do not know what office the Subtreasuries perform for the country that would fail to be performed in the event they were wiped out. I have always been a little conservative touching matters of which I am not fully informed, about changing the law until I am informed. There is a great deal of money locked up, you say, in these Subtreasuries, but there is not more than enough, I presume, to keep the silver bullion and dollars in the Treasury Department at a par with gold and to support the greenbacks at a parity with gold. But I shall not speak of that further. I do know one thing, however, or think I know it. I think the reserve system is here to stay, but it stays in my section of the country, in the Middle West, so far as the country banks are concerned, as they believe, very largely at their expense, without profit; and I want to say that in the Middle West the country banks do not graft. The rate of interest follows the market, substantially. Their discounts, however, are to the business men in the smaller towns, and in the smaller cities, and to the farmers, although in the main in the section of the Middle West where I reside the farmers are quite six in their deposits in the banks, while other people are half a dozen. What I complain of is not on my own account, but the protests that I get, that this act, if it is to remain permanently, ought to be improved to be of some advantage to three-quarters of the banks of the country—not for graft; nay, nay, but in their accommodation where they do accommodate the farmers, and they do where the farmers desire it in my section, as well as the business men; and the paper that they take does not fill the requirements of the Federal reserve act. How far we could amend the law so as to meet that difficulty I do not know. Oh, it is a last year's bird nest to quarrel about whether it was the Aldrich-Vreeland Act or the Federal reserve act that benefited the country. You repealed the Aldrich-Vreeland Act, or, rather, it expired by limitation, and you extended it for a year. Possibly and probably you added some amendments to it that made it more workable.

So far as I am informed, I want to be practically fair to the House and fair to myself. There was a depression in 1907, and the country banks received relief from deposits of public money in the Subtreasuries and at Washington upon securities not deposited by the country banks, but upon securities that were good and valid deposited by the city banks, and the money was used by the city banks to pay their indebtedness to the country banks, and I believe never a cent lost. I do not care about wrangling over this matter. I say again, it may be that these Subtreasuries ought to be abolished. I only have the feeling, as one Member of Congress, that I ought to be further informed. The regional act is far more popular in the great commercial centers than it is in the country.

I had occasion at a State bankers' meeting in Illinois last fall, where there were 500 country bankers present one evening dining at the close of their session, to make substantially the remarks I made here, and I said, "If there is any country banker or any banker present outside of the city of Chicago who indorses the Federal Reserve System, let him hold up his hand," and I waited, and I looked around over that audience of 500 bankers and not a hand went up, and I said, "No one is satisfied with the Federal Reserve System under the present condition of the legislation."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that this matter had been pretty thoroughly thrashed out in the hearings and on the floor of this House. I have yet to hear one word why these subtreasuries should be retained. When the bill creating the Federal reserve banking system was under discussion on the floor of the House it was frequently stated that it was the intention that that system should absorb all of the duties of the Subtreasuries, and since that law has been in effect not a single person has appeared before the subcommittee and given a single reason for the retention of the Subtreasuries. Out of an abundance of caution last year when this bill was before the House we wrote into the law that at this session of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury should report which of the Subtreasuries should be retained.

Here is the act of Congress approved May 10, 1916:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session which of the subtreasuries, if any, should be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued, the reasons in full for such continuance; also if any or all of said Subtreasuries may be discontinued, what legislation will be necessary in order to transfer their duties and functions to some other branch of the public service or to the Federal reserve banks.

That is the law; that the Secretary of the Treasury, you will observe, was commanded to report to us at the beginning of this session of Congress what Subtreasuries should be retained—not what ones should be abolished, but what ones we should retain; and as the chairman, Mr. BYRNS, has told you, when we tried to get the Secretary of the Treasury to come before our committee and tell us which ones should be retained he was not in town, and we postponed the hearings on that proposition from day to day and at all times requesting some one to come and tell us which of these Subtreasuries we should retain. Neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor anyone for him has yet appeared before the committee or furnished this information.

And to this day the Secretary of the Treasury, in violation of the act of Congress and in plain violation of his duties, has not told Congress which one should be retained. The logical inference is that all should be abolished. It remained for the gentleman, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], to tell us why they should be retained, and his reason is that Members of Congress from Massachusetts, and especially from Boston, from New York, from Ohio, from Illinois, and the other States where Subtreasuries are located, should violate their oaths as Members of this House and for reasons of pure pork and for no other consideration should vote to retain these Subtreasuries. The gentleman from Maryland had a hearing yesterday. Bankers came before the subcommittee. What was their argument? Their argument was that because they did not have a Federal reserve bank in Baltimore it was necessary, if we should abolish the Subtreasury there, for the bankers there to pay the express charges on coin and currency that is shipped from the Treasury at Washington to the national and other banks at Baltimore.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. No; I can not yield. And if this is a sufficient reason for the retention of the Subtreasury at Baltimore, is it not also a sufficient reason why we should establish a Subtreasury in every State and every city where you have a national bank and unload on the Government, if you please, the expense of sending subsidiary coin and currency to the various National and State banks? Why, they estimate that cost, as I recall it, to express the coin and currency to Baltimore, if we should abolish the Subtreasury there, at about $50,000. Who pays it now? Why, the Treasury of the United States pays it. And that is why Baltimore wants to retain the office. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] says that the Subtreasuries cost $500,000 They cost that much in this bill, and I recall we appropriated a large sum of money in the sundry civil bill to pay the expense of sending coin and currency from the Treasury at Washington to the various Subtreasuries.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was referring to the salaries.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that. In addition, there is a large sum appropriated in another bill. Why should not these people pay for sending the coin and currency to Baltimore the same as other cities do?

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a couple of minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman asks why we should expend this amount of money. Does not the gentleman think we should expend this money, $500,000, if it is in the interest of the business and commercial——

Mr. GOOD. Not unless it is needed to perform a governmental function. There is no more reason for a Subtreasury at Baltimore than there is for many other cities, such as Detroit——

Mr. COADY. That serve the business interests of the country.

Mr. GOOD (continuing). Or Buffalo or Pittsburgh or Omaha or a great many other cities——

Mr. KONOP. Or Milwaukee.

Mr. GOOD. Every bank outside of a Subtreasury city pays the express on every kind of currency and so should Baltimore. One reason why the committee decided to eliminate the Subtreasury at Baltimore was that Baltimore is only an hour's ride, 40 miles, from Washington. Anyone having business with the Treasury of the United States from Baltimore can come to Washington in an hour's time. Then, why should we appropriate this sum of money in addition to the $50,000 the bankers estimate that it would cost us to send the currency and subsidiary coin from the Treasury at Washington to that Subtreasury. It seems to me that inasmuch as not a single reason has been advanced by the Secretary of the Treasury why any of these Subtreasuries should be retained, although instructed by Congress to point out the Subtreasuries that should be retained, and nobody here or elsewhere can give a good reason for the retention of this office, we ought in the interest, especially in the present condition of the Treasury of the United States, to be mindful of a threatened deficiency there, even if the Secretary is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All pro forma on amendments are withdrawn and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were—ayes 59, noes 60.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. COADY) reported that there were—ayes 71, noes 60.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boston, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,500; vault clerk, $2,000; receiving teller, $2,000; redemption teller, $1,800; clerks—one $2,200, five at $1,600 each, one $1,500, one $1,400, two at $1,200 each, three at $1,100 each, four at $1,000 each; chief guard, $1,100; three watchmen, at $850 each; laborer and guard, $720; four money counters and handlers for money laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $46,570.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, strike out the paragraph beginning in line 1 and ending with line 9.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, it is in the mind of your committee that these Subtreasuries are not needed. I am not going into any discussion at length on this question and do not want to provoke it, but I have felt all along that these Subtreasuries are useless. To begin with, you lock up something like $500,000,000, averaging about that much, which lies in these nine subtreasuries, useless to the country. I think it would be of very great assistance and help to the Federal Reserve System if we would put it in the Federal reserve banks, where it can be used and drawn against. In addition to that, the mere item of expense is something that is enormous. I do not believe that it was in the minds of the committee to single out any particular city, but it happened Baltimore came first.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman says there are $500,000,000 locked up. Now, is not that money held to redeem the gold and silver certificates, and how can you use it? If you do not keep it there, will you not have to bring it to Washington?

Mr. SISSON. If it is in the Federal reserve banks it could perform identically the same functions——

Mr. IGOE. Yes; but you would not use it in the commerce of the country.

Mr. SISSON. You could as a reserve.

Mr. IGOE. You could not do anything of the kind, because it is held against the gold or silver certificates, and naturally you have to have it there when people bring the certificates in.

Mr. SISSON. Some of the money deposited in the Subtreasuries is deposited for that purpose, but the money collected from time to time in those cities is not kept there for that purpose.

The amount of money which is put into the Subtreasuries against gold certificates is a fixed amount and ordered to be kept there by the law.

Mr. IGOE. We have not any $500,000,000 available. If we had, we would be in much better position than we are now.

Mr. SISSON. If you take the amount of money that is in the Subtreasuries of the United States according to the last report, it is something over $1,600,000,000.

Mr. IGOE. What is it used for?

Mr. SISSON. I did not have any reference to that $1,600,000,000. I am speaking of that which floats about, not in the Subtreasury at New York, where we were called upon to build the vaults for the purpose of keeping the gold bars as a guaranty against the gold notes that have been issued. I am speaking of that which floats around at the Subtreasuries of the country. It may be a special convenience to a particular city where it is located, but under the old system of banking somebody had to have the convenience and you had to select arbitrarily the city in which you placed it, and that was the center and a convenience to the banks that needed the currency. But under the present Federal system of finances no living man has yet suggested a single thing—and we have had three years on the investigation, three hearings before the committee—or a single reason why this business should not be transacted in the 12 Federal reserve banks and not in the 9 Subtreasuries.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Would not the gentleman's argument apply to all the banks and all the Subtreasuries, and would not the committee have been in better position before the House if they had gone right to the root of the matter and abolished all of the Subtreasuries?

Mr. SISSON. Well, that might have been tactically a better position, and I want to say that personally I agree with the gentleman; but they say if you can not abolish one you can not abolish them all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think the Federal Reserve Bank System has proceeded far enough for the country to be satisfied that it ought to abolish the existing system?

Mr. SISSON. I think there is no question about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The committee came in here——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentleman to answer that question, because when I was discussing the matter from the floor a little while ago I had no opportunity to discuss the merits of it.

Mr. SISSON. What is the question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point is this, that the Federal Reserve Bank System has not proceeded far enough, has not yet secured a sufficient foundation in this country, for us to let go and abolish an existing system that we may still need.

Mr. SISSON. So far as that single proposition is concerned, that the Federal Reserve System should not prove to be a success, I do not concede at all, because I believe it will succeed and is already a success; but if not it will merely mean that in the same bill in which you should abolish the Federal Reserve System you may reenact the Subtreasury system.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want in reply to the gentleman to answer his question. It was stated, as the gentleman will recall, in the hearing yesterday that the Federal Reserve System has advanced so far in Boston, for instance, that they have abolished the clearing-house system there, and there is no longer any necessity for any clearing house in Boston, but that that work is being performed by the Federal reserve bank of Boston.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the committee had been satisfied that it could recommend to this House the abolition of all the Subtreasuries because of its confidence in the Federal Reserve System, was it altogether fair to come in here with a proposition to abolish the Subtreasury at Baltimore merely as an example to the rest of the Subtreasuries?

Mr. SISSON. The criticism is of the committee, and I do not think it is a just one at all. My own personal position is that we ought to abolish all, but the committee felt that Baltimore, being close to Philadelphia, within an hour's run, and close to Washington, too, with the trains running as regularly as they do, any argument that might be made about the supply of coin or currency would be more easily met there; and the committee took that view of it. My own personal view—and I will state now that I am acting in my own individual capacity in making the motion to strike this out——

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is not a committee amendment, then?

Mr. SISSON. It is not; but it is an amendment of your humble servant's.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman withhold that amendment until to-morrow? There is no Massachusetts man on the floor of the House except me. I do not think it is a proper thing to bring that matter up at this late hour. I would request the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to have it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SISSON. I will state that I have no objection to its going over; but, of course, our friends from Boston ought to be as regular in attendance as the gentleman who now has the floor.

Mr. GARDNER. One of the Members from Boston is on the floor, as I see now, so that I will withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. In what way does the Subtreasury receive its money?

Mr. SISSON. The Subtreasuries get their money from the collections of internal revenue and the collections of customs duties at the ports.

Mr. LOBECK. Is that so?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. The Government officials collect the money from the various sources and put it in the Subtreasuries. The Subtreasury does not pay out the money.

Mr. LOBECK. There was a time in 1897 when the Subtreasury people could not get their money in the Subtreasury for two months.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to the Boston item coming up, but I am going to move to abolish each one of these Subtreasuries in its time. I do not think anybody will accuse us of singling out just one particular Subtreasury.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman will permit this matter to go over until to-morrow. I want to assure the gentleman that I have been here attending to my duties and have been attending a committee meeting for three days. That is the reason why I was not on hand and in attendance on the meeting of the House this morning.

Mr. SISSON. I understand the gentleman has been attending the sessions of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I have some little intimation from what the House did awhile ago with respect to the Baltimore item, which was singled out, that the Boston proposition will have the same fate.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman agree to go on then?

Mr. SISSON. No. I would like to have included in this Baltimore and all the Subtreasuries, all down along the line, and then the Secretary of the Treasury would have to say something to Congress. He would have to hear our request after the enactment of a positive law to the effect that we wanted to know why we could not abolish all these Subtreasuries, and if there was any reason why they should not be abolished, to state that reason, and what reason there may be why we should not abolish them all. In that way we may get an expression and response from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DYER. Will not the gentleman amend his unanimous-consent motion to include all the items, and vote upon them? Or does the gentleman want to vote on them now?

Mr. SISSON. I am willing, Mr. Chairman, that all the subtreasury matters should go over until to-morrow, including all the nine subtreasuries, and to-morrow I will make the motion to strike them all out at the same time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not make that motion under the rules of the House. We have already wasted a half a day on this matter, and it seems to me we ought to wind it up to-day. If we go over it to-morrow, it will take all afternoon to-morrow.

Mr. SISSON. I am willing to accommodate the wishes of the gentlemen of the House.

Mr. MANN. If it is the desire of the Members of the House to expedite the business of the House enough to warrant us in taking a holiday recess, we can not afford to spend two days on the Subtreasuries.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAGUE and Mr. IGOE demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 25.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. GARDNER. Pending that, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members—a quorum—are present. A quorum is here. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] demands tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eighteen have risen, not a sufficient number. Tellers are denied.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chicago, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $3,000; assistant cashier, $2,000; vault clerk, $2,250; paying teller, $2,500; assorting teller, $2,000; redemption teller, $2,000; change teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $2,000; 2 bookkeepers, at $1,500 each; clerks—1 $1,750, 1 $1,600, 9 at $1,500 each, 13 at $1,200 each; attendant for money-laundry machines, $1,200; hall man, $1,100; messenger, $840; 3 watchmen, at $720 each; janitor, $720; 8 money counters and handlers for money-laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $71,420.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that motion, because it is snap judgment on Representatives of the House who are not here at this time.

A little while ago a fair test was had here, so far as the Members present were concerned, with respect to the Baltimore item. A motion was made to replace in the bill the usual figures for the Baltimore Subtreasury. That motion was resisted by the committee. A vote was taken, and it resulted in favor of restoring the Baltimore Subtreasury to the bill. The committee, persisting in its desire to abolish the subtreasuries of the country, through one of their members at least, then made a motion to strike out the Boston item. The Representatives from Boston, some of them busy elsewhere, were not very largely upon the floor, having left the House, as the Representatives from other States had done, after the Maryland test vote was taken.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The Maryland Representatives are here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They may have returned—I am not referring particularly to Maryland—and if I can keep on talking until more Members return, my purpose in addressing the House will have been accomplished. I am watching the time, so that I may have the full five minutes to make this statement. This may give Members a chance to come in.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have been here all the time.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I will not yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have not been out of the hall of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman from Maryland is here. I accept his statement, of course, but I hope other Members interested will come in.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am addressing myself to the amendment, and I hope I may do so without being filibustered against by members of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the motion which is before the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am endeavoring to confine myself to the motion. I am resisting the motion to strike out the Chicago paragraph. I am aware that some gentlemen from Illinois are not in favor of retaining the Subtreasury in their own State; but if by holding the floor a little while to argue this question I may give Members from Illinois, and from Chicago in particular, an opportunity to go to the telephone and advise their fellow Members exactly what is happening, I may do some good for the city of Chicago and the State of Illinois. It seems to me Illinois ought to be advised that the guillotine is about to fall——

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield, because I have but five minutes. I am glad the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has arrived and taken his place on the floor, in order, if he pleases, to declare himself against this motion.

Mr. RAINEY. I have been here during this entire discussion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assume that is so. The gentleman from Illinois is eloquent and forceful, and could defend this item with singular ability if he desired to take the floor to endeavor to hold for his own State and for all the people of the country interested in its retention the Subtreasury at Chicago, which this committee is now endeavoring to abolish. I hope when I have finished, having attracted the attention of the gentleman from Illinois and others, that he will rise in his place and say that this is an unfair proceeding, that without notice to the people of Illinois, and particularly without notice to the people of Chicago, it is now proposed to sweep the Chicago Subtreasury off the map, without the business men of that community having a chance to be heard at all.

Now, by this motion the committee proposes to strike out the Chicago Subtreasury. That is only one Subtreasury; there are others. I call attention to the fact that the Cincinnati Subtreasury is next in line, and that some gentleman from Ohio might do his State a service and the Government a service by going to the telephone to call in the Ohio Members, and that the same thing might be done with respect to the State of Louisiana. Some gentleman might go to the telephone and call in the Louisiana Members, in order that they might thoroughly understand what is about to be done to the New Orleans Subtreasury, and the same with regard to New York, the same with regard to Pennsylvania, the same with regard to Missouri, the same with regard to California, some of whose Members have gone away, thinking the fight was won on the single item of Baltimore.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, as a substitute for the gentleman's motion, I move to strike out the last word. For my part, I am perfectly willing to have this whole question considered on its merits; but if there is a disposition in this House to treat these questions unfairly, when the committee of the House whose duty it is to prepare this bill reports appropriations for all Subtreasuries except Baltimore, and then the Committee of the Whole restores the appropriation for Baltimore, and when it is moved to strike out the other appropriations recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, and I see the Committee on Appropriations itself not standing to its own guns, out of petulance because that committee was defeated by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, why then I will endeavor to the best of my ability during the further consideration of this bill to show that two can play at that kind of a game.

I notice particularly how the members of the Committee on Appropriations voted in support of their own item. If there was a single one of them that voted the way he reported, I would be glad to have him rise. I did not notice one. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is exceedingly likely that these Subtreasuries may be unwise; they may ultimately require all to be abolished. I confess that I voted to sustain the Baltimore item. Probably I did it in a light-hearted way, without giving the matter sufficient thought, but I know that the Committee on Appropriations had good reason for withdrawing the support for Baltimore. I presume they had good reason for making fish of one Subtreasury and fowl of another. But there is no justification on earth for that committee not having the courage to back up their own report.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman I know is aware that, owing to the fact that the Federal reserve bank has been located in the city of Boston, the clearing-house association has been abandoned.

Mr. GARDNER. No; I do not know that. I am not a Boston man.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have understood from a source in which I have every reason to have faith that on account of the Federal reserve bank being located in Boston it is no longer necessary to have a clearing-house association, and that in addition to that the Federal reserve bank has actually taken over to itself many of the functions and duties formerly performed by the Subtreasury in Boston.

Mr. GARDNER. Then why did not the gentleman strike out the appropriation for Boston?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We did not receive that information until yesterday in the course of the hearings with reference to Baltimore. The hearings were conducted by the subcommittee yesterday on the Baltimore item after the bill had been reported to the House.

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know anything about the merits of the question, but I know that the committee does. But I know that you are making fish of one and fowl of another, because any man who can look at this bill with half an eye and who has listened to the debate knows that it is so.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman heard the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Did he not hear an argument why every member of the Committee on Appropriations, and everybody else, should vote to strike out all of these items?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I will tell my colleague from Massachusetts why this item was not considered by the Committee on Appropriations. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and the proposer of the amendment here this afternoon did not dare to bring it up in that committee. I was present and I know.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GALLIVAN. I decline to yield; I have the floor.

Mr. SISSON. I will be able to defend myself if the House will not.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Oh, the gentleman can not frighten me!

Mr. SISSON. I am not trying to frighten the gentleman; I am calling the gentleman to order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, when this item was reported by the chairman of the subcommittee there was not a single suggestion of the action that was taken here this afternoon. I was there and heard the reason given for striking out Baltimore, and not one whisper was heard about this proposition which has been passed in the absence of my colleague from Boston [Mr. TAGUE] and myself. We have been all day long at a committee hearing before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. We were at that hearing at the request of Boston's business men. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] knew that we were there, because he saw us there this afternoon. I repeat that an unfair advantage has been taken of Boston and its Representatives in this Congress. The third Member from Boston, Mr. TINKHAM, is sick and can not be here. I do not know what the action of this committee will be about these other items, but I recall distinctly that the chairman of the subcommittee on this bill said to the full Committee on Appropriations that he had asked the Secretary of the Treasury for a report about these other Subtreasuries; that he was waiting to receive that report; and because he had not received the report the subcommittee decided to recommend the abolition of the Baltimore Subtreasury, simply and solely for the reason that Baltimore was but a few miles away from the Capital and that the work done by the Baltimore Subtreasury could well be done here in Washington. There was not a suggestion about this Boston proposition from any member of the subcommittee. The items for Boston and the other cities were unanimously approved, as I recall it, and I challenge any contradiction of my assertion. Why did not the gentleman offer his amendment in committee? My city is deeply interested in the attempt to discontinue the pneumatic-tube service as an adjunct to the postal system in Boston, and as a representative of the citizens of that city I am opposed to this abolition of the tubes. I have just come from the hearing before the Post Office Committee, where I have spent this entire day. Had I been advised that any such amendment as has been passed was to have been offered here I would certainly have been here and opposed such action. Why did the gentleman keep this thing to himself? I resent his action in the absence of my colleague [Mr. TAGUE] and myself, and I hope we will get a chance here to make a fight for Boston; but if we do not, thank God there is another body somewhere else that will give us half a show. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the subcommittee. The subcommittee differed with me as to the course of procedure. I have always made it a rule to notify the committee if I differ with them on a matter. I did differ with them, with the very idea that I felt that all of those cities should be dealt with alike, and as I stated to the committee a moment ago, I felt that all of the Subtreasuries ought to be abolished; and feeling that way, I simply exercised my rights as a member of this Committee of the Whole to make that motion. It is not my purpose to take any advantage of anyone at any time. I have not done so, nor shall I wait when Members are not here. I did happen to know that one gentleman was a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and happened to be there when he was on the committee. I did not know that the other gentleman was a member of that committee, nor have I thought it my duty to keep any lookout or watch upon him as to his whereabouts, whether he is in the committee or not, because I presume that he does as most Members do, exercises his own choice about where he will or will not be. I made the motion also as to Chicago, and I am going to make the motion on down the line, as I stated, as to the others. If this committee shall sustain me in the motion which I make in respect to Chicago, then we will have an opportunity in the House to take a vote on Baltimore. If by using this method I am able to abolish the Subtreasuries which for two years preceding this your committee has had under consideration, then I shall congratulate myself.

Last year and the year before we had some considerable hearings, and those hearings are to be had if the Members of the House desire them to read. I am convinced that these Subtreasuries are performing no proper function. That would be especially true with reference to Boston, because they have a Federal reserve bank in the city of Boston. So has the city of Chicago; but the matter now pending is the city of Chicago, and I shall make a motion to strike out the Subtreasuries in each of these cities, because I see no good reason, and I do not believe a single member of the Appropriations Committee who has given attention to this matter sees any good reason why they should be retained. Certainly, no member of the subcommittee has been able to find a single reason, nor has a reason been given to us by the Treasury Department, why they should be retained, although we asked by law that the Treasury give us a reason why they should be retained, and we have gotten absolutely no reason.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with what the gentleman has said, that they ought all to be stricken out; but the gentleman has said several times with regard to Baltimore that there was no particular reason why that should be stricken out. As a matter of fact, the hearings show that Baltimore is the smallest Subtreasury of the bunch.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but I am simply giving you my position and not the position of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. That is an additional reason.

Mr. SISSON. And so, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to question the motives of any member of the committee in striking out this section as applied to Boston, or the intention of anyone in striking out any other section applying to any other city, but I do believe that the members of the Committee on Appropriations should give some good reason before voting as they have why it should be done. I take issue with the chairman of this subcommittee that the clearing house of Boston has been wiped out. I do not know where he gets his information, and if he has his information it is not the information that I get or that my colleagues from Boston get. I do know the duties performed by the subtreasury in the city of Boston, and I know it is performing those duties faithfully and well. Mr. Chairman, I have confidence in the justice and fairness of the Members of this House and feel that when a question of this importance is before this body and the membership from that city are attending to their duties in committee and not present to take issue on the question that we will be given an opportunity to express ourselves, in order that we may tell this Congress what the people of our section of the country want.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. While the gentleman is on his feet will he just give us one reason why we should reverse the vote striking out Boston?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the debate or any of the reasons advanced for the striking out of Boston. It has been in existence for years.

Mr. GORDON. But they have no use or function to perform.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a good reason that the committee has just voted Baltimore in?

Mr. GARDNER. After the fullest discussion for hours.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I think the most important reason why it should be left in is that your Committee on Appropriations has already reported the item, and it is only when a member of the subcommittee comes in here and tells the committee in a few moments that he has some information which the other members of his committee did not possess that it has been stricken out.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. I will.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not true that the Secretary of the Treasury in his estimates put in this very item for Boston, and is it not also true that he had not given any indication of sending in supplemental estimates withdrawing that?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I am not aware that the Secretary of the Treasury made any recommendation for the abolishment of this institution, and I have enough confidence in him to think that he would recommend it if it were necessary.

Mr. GARDNER. He has recommended it in his estimates; he deliberately recommended this item.

Mr. TAGUE. He has already recommended the appropriation, and nothing, so far as I know, has been brought into this House to warrant the membership in acting as it has. I know, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, that the justice of the Members of this House will be submitted when this matter is brought before the House, and I am confident that they will override, as they do on almost every occasion, an action such as has been taken here to-day by the gentleman who has opposed the item.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment. The motion is to strike out, and I wish to perfect the item before it is stricken out. I move, page 57, line 11, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,975."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to reduce the salary of the assistant treasurer at Chicago. I offer an amendment in that form solely for the purpose of keeping myself out of the vortex of order. I think there is only one successful way of settling this question and that is to reconsider the action taken on the Boston Subtreasury and put over until to-morrow the debate on all these Subtreasury appropriations which the Committee on Appropriations provides for. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended that Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco retain their Subtreasuries. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended that Baltimore lose its Subtreasury. After a long debate in a very full Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—if I recollect rightly there were about 130 Members voting—it was the deliberate judgment of the committee by a narrow margin that Baltimore should retain its Subtreasury. After that vote was taken the membership of the committee disbursed. Without any notice, and contrary to the report of his own committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] made the motion to strike out the appropriation for the Subtreasury at Boston. None of the Boston Members were prepared to discuss that question at that time. One of them was sick, two others were at that moment absent from the floor on committee business. They are here now as I am speaking, but neither they nor anyone else has had an opportunity as yet to prepare their case. I submit to the gentleman from Mississippi, if I have his attention, that it is clearly unjust at this late hour to treat Boston differently from Chicago or Cincinnati or any of these other Subtreasuries.

Mr. SISSON. It was about an hour ago when we brought this Boston matter up.

Mr. GARDNER. I quite understand. I submit that it is not fair under the circumstances, if I can have the attention of the gentleman. Anyway, I submit that it would be much fairer if the gentleman would agree to reconsider the vote by which the Boston Subtreasury was abolished and put the whole matter over until to-morrow, to give the Members from Massachusetts a chance to prepare their case.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman, does the gentleman recall he made a request to me for unanimous consent?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I very promptly said, so far as I was concerned, if it was satisfactory to the other gentlemen it was satisfactory to me. It was not so satisfactory, and the committee has acted, and we now have under consideration the question of Chicago.

Mr. GARDNER. That is all true. The gentleman was perfectly courteous and perfectly ready to put the whole matter over until to-morrow. There was a general feeling throughout the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that inasmuch as the Committee on Appropriations had deliberately put the Boston item in the bill, that at least one of them would stand back of his own committee's action. Unfortunately that did not prove to be the case.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that if these other cities are treated differently from Boston and Boston should be the only one singled out, I should not hesitate one moment to ask that the Boston matter go back, but in this way I will get what I have wanted for two years, if the committee will agree with me, and, of course, when we get in the House, on the roll call we will treat Baltimore like we do the others.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman will remember that Baltimore is a southern city and Democracy has control of this House.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think the gentleman will say that the chairman of the committee is a southern man. But he is a Democrat, and so am I.

Mr. GARDNER. The southern control of the House is Democratic, and the significance of putting back Baltimore and striking out Boston, in defiance of your committee's action, is very significant, sir.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that. I do not think that cuts one particle of ice with me, because I wanted to abolish all of them to start with.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; I think the gentleman did.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto now close.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I object. I would like to have a couple of minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, then I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that we adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] has been recognized. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that he would not entertain the point of order at this time. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully ask the chairman——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The point of order takes precedence of the recognition of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point of order was that there was no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 105 Members present—a quorum.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I simply want the attention of the committee for a moment or two. This is a matter that pertains to Chicago, and it is something we have not had a chance to think about, and I would like to know if we can not let it go over until to-morrow before the vote is taken? [Cries of "No, no!"] Let us see. It may be all right to abolish these Subtreasuries. If the regional banks will take their place, as some people think they will, we may not need Subtreasuries, but we ought to have a chance to look into it for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is necessary to retain them or not, and for that reason I think it would be good judgment to let this matter go over until to-morrow. It is not alone Chicago, but the other cities which have these Subtreasuries, and for that reason, if it is agreeable to the committee, I think it would be good judgment to let the matter go over until we ascertain whether the Subtreasuries are really necessary or not. That is what I want. I would like to know if that can not be done?

Mr. CANNON. Why does not the gentleman move that the committee rise?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen move that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAGUE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 45.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is dilatory. The Chair has just counted and found a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that he found a quorum present only a minute before. On this vote the ayes are 44 and the noes are 45, and the committee refuses to rise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers on that vote.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. GALLAGHER and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 58.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In line 11, page 59, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$4,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 48.

Mr. GARDNER. Tellers!

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and be counted. [After counting.] Not a sufficient number. Tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment on page 59, line 11, to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order and ask that the gentleman reduce his amendment to writing in accordance with the rules of the House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I must have reasonable time in which to reduce my amendment to writing. Will the Chair hear me on the point of order? It has been decided over and over again that when that claim is made an opportunity must be given to the mover of the amendment to reduce it to writing.

Mr. MANN. A reasonable time for a reasonable amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, no. That is all right.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The count disclosed the presence of a quorum just a moment ago. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARDNER: Page 59, line 11, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman. I think the amendment was carried.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 28.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On that, Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and be counted. [After counting.] Seventeen gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 59, line 20, after the word "all," strike out "$71,420" and insert "$71,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 28.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present. This vote discloses the fact that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is overruled. The count has just disclosed the presence of a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. At what point is it permissible to make the point of no quorum if the Chair continually rules that he has just counted one if the vote itself discloses that there is no quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to make a point of order that the vote disclosed that there was not a quorum present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I distinctly made that statement, that the vote had disclosed that there was no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cincinnati, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,250; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $1,800; vault clerk, $1,600; clerks—2 at $1,300 each, 4 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each; clerk and stenographer, $1,000; chief watchman, $840; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $24,830.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to oppose the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he promised to recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To oppose the motion?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Ohio will yield to me, I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ALLEN. All right.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DALE of New York, until further notice, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 15, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting an item of legislation authorizing the transfer of all American citizens legally adjudged insane in the Canal Zone whose legal State or Territory residence can not be established to St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Washington, D. C. (H. Doc. No. 1741); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the annual inspection of the several branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers (H. Doc. No. 1742); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a summary of reports transmitted by collectors of customs and a brief statement of the action of the department in respect of accidents sustained or caused by barges while in tow through the open sea, from November 4, 1915, the date when the act took effect, to the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1916 (H. SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 15, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee at the beginning of this legislative day to know Thy will. We are being brought face to face every day with great issues which affect the moral and physical welfare of millions of our fellow men. The limitations of our knowledge and experience lead us back to the Source of all knowledge and of all wisdom. We come to Thee lifting up our hearts that we may know God's will. We seek to give expression to the highest achievements of the intellect and of the spirit of man in our national life. We pray that in our endeavor we may have the guidance of the spirit of God and of Thy truth. We ask these things for Jesus' sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, December 13, 1916, was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Presbytery of Washington City, which will be printed in the RECORD.

The communication was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESBYTERY OF WASHINGTON CITY,
OFFICE OF THE STATED CLERK,
Takoma Park, D. C., December 14, 1916.

To the Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President of the Senate of the United States of America.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: The Presbytery of Washington City, in session in the city of Washington December 11, 1916, adopted the following resolution, which is hereby submitted for official notice.

Respectfully, yours,

THOMAS C. CLARK,
Stated Clerk.

Action of the Presbytery of Washington City in session in the city of Washington, D. C., December 11, 1916, to wit:

"The Presbytery of Washington City hereby records itself in favor of the passage of the Webb-Sheppard bill now pending before the Senate without the referendum proposed by Senator UNDERWOOD."

Attest:

THOMAS C. CLARK,
Stated Clerk, Presbytery of Washington City.

Mr. NORRIS presented a memorial adopted by the Seventh-day Adventist Conference, held at Hastings, Nebr., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Little Rock, Ark., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the General Association of Baptist Churches at Sheridan, Ark., remonstrating against the action of the military authorities on the Mexican border in regard to evangelical work among the soldiers, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 7289) granting an increase of pension to Frank Burrow, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a petition of postal clerks and other employees in the post office at Fargo, N. Dak., asking for a raise in their wages. I ask that it may be properly referred after reading just the petition part. I do not know to what particular committee it ought to go, but I suppose to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the petition was read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as follows:

To the Members of the Sixty-fourth Congress, Washington, D. C.:

In view of the greatly increased cost of living within the past year, and also in view of the fact that practically all private corporations have assisted their employees in bearing this additional burden placed upon them by a substantial increase in their pay—

We, the railway mail clerks, post-office clerks, letter carriers, and rural-delivery carriers of the United States, feel that we should have some relief from this burden, therefore petition your honorable body to grant us such an increase in pay as will in some manner help us in this emergency.

We ask that you give this petition your earnest and careful consideration, and trust to your sense of fairness and right to deal justly by us.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD G. SWANSON
(And others).

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Clearfield and Tabor, in the State of Iowa, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Chariton, Cedar Falls, and Iowa City, all in the State of Iowa, praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. THOMPSON presented memorials of the Mitchell Grain & Supply Co., of Mitchell, and of the Farmers' Grain & Mercantile Co., of Gorham, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the placing of an embargo on food products, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Interior of the Congregational Church of the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of intoxicating liquor, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMERICAN PRISON REFORM.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to have placed in the RECORD a resolution passed by the American Prison Association. At the meeting of the American Prison Association held in Buffalo October 7 to 12 of the present year the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of the American Prison Association, a step forward would be taken if the administration of the Federal prisons and the Federal parole system of the United States was placed in charge of a nonpartisan board appointed by, and responsible solely to, the President.

I believe, Mr. President, there are serious objections to our present parole system. I present this resolution from the National Prison Association, and trust it may receive some thought from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7095) extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River, authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved the 24th day of August, 1912, and I submit a report (No. 876) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland submitted an amendment relative to the appointment of one clerk of class 4 in the Office of the Naval Records, Library of the Navy Department, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 18542), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservation in Wyoming from $100,000 to $150,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 18453), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for beginning the construction of an irrigation system for the irrigation of ceded Indian lands of the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 18453), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CATRON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the construction of a steel bridge across the San Juan River in San Juan County, N. Mex., at the best and most available location west or southwest and near the town of Farmington, in that State, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 18453), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ADJUDICATION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. KENYON. I offer the following resolution, which speaks for itself, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 290) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the cost of print paper has so enormously increased; and
Whereas the demand for such paper is constantly increasing; and
Whereas great quantities of print paper are used by the Government in printing useless bulletins, pamphlets, books, etc.; and
Whereas in the present emergency regarding print paper the supply should be conserved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing of the Senate be directed to investigate the subject and to report to the Senate within 30 days from the passage of this resolution as to what bulletins and publications, if any, issued by the Government may be suspended temporarily at least, and as to what economies may be practiced in the use of print paper and other paper by the Government in the various Government departments.

PURCHASE OF FOOD SUPPLIES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer two resolutions, one addressed to the Secretary of War and the other to the Secretary of the Navy. They are identical in phraseology. I ask for the present consideration of the resolutions.

The first resolution (S. Res. 291) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War inform the Senate to what extent, if any, Army officers and employees are now permitted to purchase food supplies through Government agencies; what reduction from the prevailing market prices of such food supplies is thereby obtained by such officers and employees; and whether it would be practicable to grant similar privileges to other employees of the Government.

The second resolution (S. Res. 292) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy inform the Senate to what extent, if any, naval officers and employees are now permitted to purchase food supplies through Government agencies; what reduction from the prevailing market prices of such food supplies is thereby obtained by such officers and employees; and whether it would be practicable to grant similar privileges to other employees of the Government.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1082.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I propose to take this opportunity to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads or some member of that committee.

At the last session of Congress a motion was made in the Senate to make in order on the Post Office appropriation bill a provision preventing the use of the mails for carrying liquor advertisements into States where such liquor advertisements are not permitted. Upon the vote on the motion to make it in order a majority of the Senate voted favorably; but under the rules of the Senate as heretofore construed it required a two-thirds majority, and that could not be had.

The appropriation bill is now pending before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I want to call attention to the character of three or four advertisements and the methods used by those distributing liquors in States where they have laws preventing these advertisements.

I have here a photograph of an envelope which indicates that they address their envelopes containing their advertisements without addressing it to any particular individual, but not knowing who lives at a certain place and knowing there is such a location they simply address it to the occupant in order that it may be sure to reach the desired address. I have one here that has a return on it in this form, "Return in 10 days to P. O. Box 24," without indicating what the purpose of it is, the business of the sender, or anything of that sort. It is addressed: "Occupant of 1523 North Nineteenth Street, Birmingham, Ala." Of course, the occupant of the building upon that lot will not know what it is when he gets it until he opens it. I am informed that the gentleman who received this is very bitterly opposed to the sale of liquor and the use of liquors and would be insulted if asked to drink.

Then here is another form of advertisement that is sent into States where they have laws preventing such advertisements:

For private persons only.
Let us send you our interesting price list, containing sealed information explaining our method of shipping wines and liquors to your home. Correspondence confidential.

Then here is another one, using the mails of the United States to evade and nullify the laws of the different States:

It's nobody's business but yours and ours. Wines and liquors for family and medicinal use sent to your home incognito. Send for free sealed information.

Note the insult to the people of the States who are trying to protect their children and their homes from a traffic which they condemn and who think that this is their business. Is it possible that it is not the business of these people that their laws are evaded and nullified? Does the Senate agree with this advertisement, that it is not the business of the people of these States?

Then I have another. This is an envelope with a return corner, on which is printed "The Manufacturers and Dealers' Association of America."

That looks like a very innocent organization, one having to do with the industries or manufactures of the country. It also has marked on the envelope: "Private mail. Very important. Read. Think." Then it contains an advertisement of liquors telling the recipient of this letter or envelope how he may get them.

Then here is another advertisement sent into these States:

Free whisky! Send us your name and address, thereby placing yourself in position to receive a full quart of the finest whisky free of cost.

That certainly would be a rather enticing advertisement to anybody who was inclined to use liquor.

Here is one more, and this is the only further one that I am going to call attention to, that is sent through the mails into this prohibited territory:

All for $3.48—

Then there is a picture of a fine-looking revolver placed in a beautiful holster with a good supply of cartridges—

Revolver and whisky free—

Then there is a splendid bottle having on it "100 proof rye or corn."

The advertisement reads as follows:

All for $3.48.
Revolver and whisky free.
Send us order for sample box (50) of our regular $75 per thousand cigars, which we will express you at wholesale for only $3.48, having figured off special discounts, and will give you in same shipment this S & W mod. safety police, either .32 or .38 caliber, revolver absolutely free; also this full quart 100 proof rye or corn whisky free. Name express office and remit $3.48 with three addresses of friends who buy by mail and all the goods as advertised will be shipped you first express. Money order or cash—

And so on.

What I want to ask the chairman of the committee is, whether or not the committee is considering acting upon the bill, that has been pending before the committee so long, to prohibit the use of the mails for carrying advertisements like this into territory where these advertisements are prohibited?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I want to say to the Senator from Washington that I am decidedly in favor of the reporting and passage of that bill. I believe that in the States where prohibition laws are in effect they should be enforced. To that end, I think, the passage of the bill perhaps would largely contribute. I have called a meeting of the committee for next Tuesday, at which time I shall lay the bill before the committee, and, so far as I am able to do, I shall try to secure a favorable report upon it.

My own opinion is, from discussing this matter with members of the committee, that a majority are in favor of the bill being reported. However, I can not definitely say as to that. All that I can say in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington is that, as chairman of the committee, I am decidedly in favor of reporting the bill and shall make the best effort I can to get the bill out of the committee next Tuesday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are a half dozen such bills pending in the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; there is more than one such bill now pending before the committee. I have a bill there; the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has one, and there are other bills. I can not definitely say which of those bills the committee will prefer to report, but I have no doubt that we shall report out some one of them next Tuesday.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Alabama could not give me any more assurances than he has given, and I am glad to learn that a meeting of the committee has been called and that the chairman of the committee is so heartily in favor of some legislation along these lines. Of course, I know there are different proposals, that there are different bills which have been submitted. I hope that the committee will have a quorum present at the next meeting which has been called, and that it will take action upon this proposition and will report to the Senate some measure such as in its judgment it deems wise. That, of course, will then give the Senate an opportunity to consider the matter and to express its will with reference to it. I believe the great majority sentiment of the country is in favor of it. A majority of the daily newspapers of the country now refuse their advertisements. One great paper in this city has announced it will refuse them. These papers should be protected from the cupidity of those papers that are willing to permit for gain the use of their columns to evade the laws of the States of the Union.

So far as I am concerned, I think it is really infamous that the mails of the United States should be permitted to be used as an instrument of advertisements like these to carry these articles into States where the people of the States have by their laws prohibited the sale of such articles and the printing of such advertisements. I can not believe that the Senate will permit this abuse to continue, if it gets an opportunity to vote upon the proposition. I am therefore glad to have this assurance from the chairman of the committee, and I hope that the committee will take prompt action on the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to offer at this time a substitute for Senate bill 1082. In doing so, I wish to say that this is a prohibition bill; and, if we are going to have prohibition in the District of Columbia, I think we ought to have it, and not have a mere makeshift, as I consider Senate bill 1082 to be. The result of that bill, if enacted into law, I think, will be very disappointing, indeed, to the people who believe in prohibition.

In saying that, Mr. President, I do not mean to intimate that the bill is not a step toward prohibition; I believe that even the passage of this bill will be a step in the right direction; but if the prohibitionists really want prohibition in the District of Columbia, I think they ought to have a chance to vote for a bill that will bring prohibition without a question of doubt. Therefore, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for Senate bill 1082, and I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That on and after the 1st day of November, A. D. 1917, it shall be unlawful for any person, house, association, firm, company, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, to sell, manufacture, or dispose of any intoxicating liquor or alcohol of any kind in the District of Columbia or to have in his or its possession or to transport any intoxicating liquor or alcohol in the District of Columbia unless the same was procured and is so possessed and transported under a permit as hereinafter provided.

Wherever the term "liquor," "intoxicating liquor," or "intoxicating liquors" is used in this act it shall be deemed to include whisky, brandy, rum, gin, wine, ale, porter, beer, cordials, hard or fermented cider, alcoholic bitters, ethyl alcohol, all malt liquors, and all other alcoholic liquors.

That any person, or persons, or any house, company, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, servants, who shall, directly or indirectly, violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $300 nor more than $1,000 and shall be imprisoned in the District jail or workhouse for a period of not less than 30 days nor more than one year for each offense.

SEC. 2. That before a pharmacist shall be authorized to transport pure alcohol for scientific or mechanical purposes or for compounding or preparing medicines, as provided by this act, he shall procure a permit for that purpose from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That to procure such permit a pharmacist shall make and file with the Commissioners of the District a statement in writing under oath stating that he desires to transport pure alcohol for scientific or mechanical purposes or for compounding, preparing, or preserving medicines only, as provided by this act, and giving his name, the location of his place of business, a statement that he is a licensed pharmacist, that he is regularly engaged in the practice of his profession at the location named, and that he will not violate any provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That if the Commissioners of the District are satisfied of the good faith of the applicant, they shall issue to such pharmacist a permit to transport pure alcohol for compounding, preparing, or preserving medicines or for scientific or mechanical purposes. Such permit shall be substantially in the following form:

PERMIT TO PHARMACISTS TO TRANSPORT PURE ALCOHOL FOR COMPOUNDING, PREPARING, AND PRESERVING MEDICINES ONLY OR FOR SCIENTIFIC OR MECHANICAL PURPOSES.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
City of Washington, ss:

———— ————, a pharmacist, residing at ————, is hereby permitted to transport pure alcohol for compounding, preparing, and preserving medicines only or for scientific or mechanical purposes. This permit can only be used for one shipment and will be void after 20 days from the date of issue.

By order of the Commissioners of the District.
Dated this —— day of ————, 191—.

————— ————,
President of the Board.

SEC. 5. That said permit mentioned in section 4 hereof shall be issued upon forms supplied by the Commissioners of the District and shall contain the permit, a copy of the application for permit, and a copy of the provisions of section 6 of this act, and shall be issued under the seal of the Commissioners of the District and shall be void for transportation purposes after 20 days from the date of issuance. The Commissioners of the District shall keep in a separate book provided for that purpose a record of permits issued under this act, wherein shall be entered the date and the number thereof, the person to whom issued, and the purpose for which issued.

SEC. 6. That said permit shall be attached to and remain affixed in a conspicuous place upon any package or parcel containing pure alcohol imported into or shipped in the District of Columbia, and when so affixed shall authorize any common carrier or any person operating a boat or vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, or merchandise within the District to transport, ship, or carry such pure alcohol. Any person so transporting such alcohol shall, before the delivery of such package or parcel, cancel said permit and so deface the same that it can not be used again.

SEC. 7. That all express companies, railroad companies, public or private carriers, are hereby required to keep a separate book in which shall be entered, immediately upon receipt thereof, the name of the person to whom pure alcohol is shipped, from what city or town and State the same was shipped, and the name of the shipper, the amount and kind received, the date when received, the date when delivered and to whom delivered, after which record shall be a blank space in which the consignee shall be required to sign his own name in ink before such pure alcohol is delivered to such consignee, which book shall be open to the inspection of the public at any time during business hours of the company and shall not be removed from the place where the same is required to be kept. A copy of entries upon any such record herein provided to be kept, when certified to by the agent of any express or railroad company, or any public or private carrier in charge of the same, shall constitute prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated in any court of the District.

It shall be unlawful for any person, house, association, firm, company, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, to ship alcohol or intoxicating liquor to a false or fictitious name or person, or any person to receive or receipt for alcohol or intoxicating liquor in a false or fictitious name.

SEC. 8. That any common carrier or any person operating a boat or vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, or merchandise may accept for transportation, and may transport to any place within the District of Columbia shipments of wine for sacramental purposes when there is attached to such shipments a certificate in substantially the following form:

"I (or we) certify that this package contains only ——— (amount) of ——— wine, which has been ordered by ——— ———, who represents himself to be a duly authorized and officiating priest, or minister, of the ——— church, at ———, D. C., and that said wine is desired for sacramental purposes only.

"——— ———."

(Signature of shipper.)

SEC. 9. That whenever a shipment of wines for sacramental purposes shall have been transported for delivery within the District of Columbia the delivering agent of the transportation company must refuse to deliver the same unless it is accompanied by the certificate prescribed in section 8 of this act, and then only to the person to whom the same is addressed, or upon his written order. The transportation company must keep a record of all shipments and deliveries of wines for sacramental purposes, and must preserve for a period of one year after their receipt all certificates accompanying such shipments and all written orders upon which deliveries may be made. Such records must be open to the inspection of the public at any time during office hours.

SEC. 10. That any person who shall desire to purchase pure alcohol for scientific or mechanical purposes shall apply to the Commissioners of the District for a permit for that purpose. To procure such permit he shall make and file with the commissioners a statement in writing, under oath, stating that he desires to purchase pure alcohol for scientific or mechanical purposes, as provided by this act, and giving his name and residence and the place at which such pure alcohol is to be used.

SEC. 11. That if the Commissioners of the District are satisfied of the good faith of the applicant, they shall issue to said applicant a permit to purchase pure alcohol for scientific or mechanical purposes. The original of said permit shall have attached thereto a duplicate copy, and each shall be numbered with the same number and be in substantially the following form:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
City of Washington, ss:

——— ———, residing at ———, is hereby permitted to purchase pure alcohol in the amount of ——— (here insert quantity), to be used for scientific or mechanical purposes. This permit can only be used for one purchase, and the copy hereof attached hereto shall be conspicuously pasted upon the package containing said alcohol, and this permit to purchase shall be void after 20 days from the date hereof.

By order of the Commissioners of the District.

Dated this ——— day of ———, 19—.

——— ———,
President of the Board.

SEC. 12. That the permit mentioned in section 11 shall authorize the applicant to purchase and any pharmacist to sell and deliver to him the quantity named in the said permit. The permit shall be canceled, kept, and retained on file for at least one year by the pharmacist so selling said pure alcohol, and the copy of said permit shall be by the pharmacist conspicuously pasted upon the receptacle containing said alcohol, and shall so remain upon said receptacle so long as the same shall contain alcohol. Said permit and copy shall only authorize one purchase and sale. It shall be unlawful for any pharmacist to sell pure alcohol without the permit herein specified or for any person to keep or have in his possession any pure alcohol unless the receptacle containing the same shall be distinctly labeled with the copy of the permit authorizing the purchase of the same.

SEC. 13. That it shall be unlawful for any person owning, leasing, or occupying or in possession or control of any premises, building, vehicle, car, or boat to knowingly permit thereon or therein the manufacture, transportation, disposal, or the keeping of intoxicating liquor with intent to manufacture, transport, or dispose of the same in violation of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for any person to import, ship, sell, transport, deliver, receive, or have in his possession any intoxicating liquors except as in this act provided.

SEC. 15. That any person who shall in any public place or in or upon any passenger coach, street car, boat, or in or upon any other vehicle commonly used for the transportation of passengers, or in or about any depot, platform, or waiting room drink any intoxicating liquor of any kind, or any person who shall be drunk or intoxicated in any public or private road or street, or in any passenger coach, street car, or any public place or building, or at any public gathering, or any person who shall be drunk or intoxicated and shall disturb the peace of any person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 16. That any person convicted of violation of any of the provisions of this act where the punishment therefor is not herein specifically provided shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, and by imprisonment in the District jail or workhouse for a period of not less than 30 days nor more than 6 months.

SEC. 17. That a person having once been convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, except section 15, who thereafter violates the provisions hereof shall be considered a persistent violator of this act and shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the District jail or workhouse for a period of not less than one year and not more than two years.

SEC. 18. That in case a pharmacist is convicted under the provisions of this act the Commissioners of the District shall, in addition to the penalty provided by this act, revoke his license to practice pharmacy.

SEC. 19. That the issuance by the United States of any internal-revenue special-tax stamp or receipt to any person as a dealer in intoxicating liquors shall be prima facie evidence of the sale of intoxicating liquors by such person during the time the stamp or receipt is in force and effect.

A copy of such stamp or receipt or of the record of the issuance thereof, certified to by a United States internal-revenue officer having charge of such record, is admissible as evidence in like case and with like effect as the original stamp or receipt.

SEC. 20. That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, house, company, association, corporation, or club, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, servants to have in his or its possession any intoxicating liquors of any kind for any use or purpose, except the same shall have been obtained and is so possessed under a permit authorized by this act.

SEC. 21. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to enforce the provisions of this act. They shall detail qualified members of the police force to detect violations of the act, if any, and to report promptly all knowledge or information they may have concerning such violations, together with the names of any witnesses by whom they may be proven to the corporation counsel; but it shall be the duty of all members of the police force to detect violations of the act and to promptly report any information or knowledge concerning the same to the corporation counsel, together with the names of witnesses, by whom such violations may be proven; and the corporation counsel shall bring such alleged violators of the law to trial with all due diligence.

If any such officer shall fail to comply with the provisions of this section, he shall upon conviction be fined in any sum not less than $100 nor more than $500; and such conviction shall be a forfeiture of the office held by such person, and the court before whom such conviction is had shall, in addition to imposition of the fine aforesaid, order and adjudge the forfeiture of his said office. For a failure or neglect of official duty in the enforcement of this act any official herein referred to may be removed by court action.

SEC. 22. That prosecutions for violations of the provisions of this act shall be on information filed in the police court by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants duly authorized to act for him, and said corporation counsel or his assistants shall file such information upon the presentation to him or his assistants of sworn information that the law has been violated; and such corporation counsel and his assistants shall have power to administer oaths to such informant or informants, and such others as present themselves, and anyone making a false oath to any material fact shall be deemed guilty of perjury and subject to the same penalties as now provided by law for such offense.

When, however, it appears to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that it will be in the interest of more effective enforcement of the provisions of this act, they may request the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia to prosecute persons charged with offenses against the law, and when so requested by said commissioners the said district attorney shall proceed before the grand jury and in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to prosecute such offenders in manner now prescribed by law for the prosecution of persons charged with violations of the laws against crime in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 23. That if for any reason any section, paragraph, provision, clause, or part of this act shall be held unconstitutional or invalid, that fact shall not affect or destroy any other section, paragraph, provision, clause, or part of the act not in and of itself invalid, but the remaining parts of sections shall be enforced without regard to that so invalidated.

SEC. 24. That in the interpretation of this act words of the singular number shall be deemed to include their plurals, and words of the masculine gender shall be deemed to include the feminine, as the case may be.

SEC. 25. That this act shall be in full force and effect on and after the 1st day of November, 1917, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith be, and they are hereby, repealed. And that the excise board for the District of Columbia, provided for and established under the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, be, and it is hereby, abolished upon the taking effect of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that that substitute be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I listened to the reading of the proposed substitute, but did not hear all of it. I desire to learn if there is a provision in it declaring places where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale to be a public nuisance?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no specific provision in the substitute declaring those places a public nuisance.

Mr. CURTIS. I will prepare, at the proper time, an amendment declaring them to be such.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question in reference to his amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to answer the question if I can.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under this amendment, is the shipment of alcohol into the District entirely prohibited?

Mr. SMOOT. It is only permitted as provided in the substitute. I will say to the Senator that it prohibits the importation of all liquors of any kind—beers and malted liquors—into the District of Columbia. The only thing that can come here is the alcohol, and that can only come as provided in the substitute. Pharmacists can ship it here for the purposes named in the substitute—medicinal purposes and scientific purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And does the Senator propose to cut it out for beverage purposes entirely?

Mr. SMOOT. Entirely—not only alcohol but every other kind of liquor; intoxicating liquors of all kinds.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What does the Senator's amendment propose to do with the question of exporting alcohol from the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMOOT. It absolutely prohibits the manufacture of liquors of all kinds, alcohol as well as malted beers, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator does not play favorites with anybody?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. It is a pure, unadulterated prohibition measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "barter," it is proposed to insert "export, ship out of the District of Columbia."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, it is proposed to insert a comma after the word "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. After the word "importation," in line 23, page 2 of the reprint, it is proposed to add the word "exportation."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, what has become of the amendment that was proposed just before that one on page 2, line 1? The Secretary stated that on page 2, line 1, it was proposed to insert a comma after the word "of," and then it goes on to say:

The paragraph as amended will read as follows.

That was not stated to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not an amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The paragraph to which the Senator refers was added merely by way of explanation. The amendments already adopted will make the paragraph read as it appears on page 2.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I see. The former amendments make it read that way?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 23, after the word "importation" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the word "exportation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary proceeded to read the next amendment of Mr. SHEPPARD, which was to insert a new section, to be known as section 2a. During the reading,

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the clause "nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house" be stricken out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not catch the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the clause "nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house" be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. On page 4 of the amendment, in lines 5 and 6, it is proposed to strike out "nor shall more than one member of a family occupying the same house."

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the amendment of the Senator from Texas, is it not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to strike it out, then.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to have substituted for "intoxicating" the word "alcoholic."

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the word "intoxicating" and insert the word "alcoholic."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That modification will be made.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. On page 5, after line 3, I wish to insert the following:

No minor or habitual drunkard shall be permitted to order or possess alcoholic liquors in any quantity whatsoever.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, following line 3, the Senator from Texas modifies his amendment by inserting:

No minor or habitual drunkard shall be permitted to order or possess alcoholic liquors in any quantity whatsoever.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment, which, as modified, is as follows:

SEC. 2a. All railroad, steamboat, or other boat companies, express and transportation companies of any kind, which shall in any manner at any time transport intoxicating liquors into the District, are hereby required to keep a record, alphabetically arranged, in which shall be entered immediately upon receipt thereof the name of every person shipping or to whom intoxicating liquors are shipped, the amount and kind of liquor, the date of delivery, by whom and to whom delivered, and the affidavit of the person receiving the liquor as provided herein. After this record is made and before delivery it shall be signed by the consignee. The book shall be open to the inspection of any person during the business hours of the company. Such books or a copy of such records, attested by an officer of the company or verified by affidavit, shall be admissible as evidence in any court and shall be prima facie evidence of the fact therein stated in any trial or proceeding for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

An employee or agent of any express company, railroad company, steamboat company, or transportation company charged with the duty of keeping such record who shall fail to keep such record shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Any railroad company, express company, steamboat company, or transportation company who shall not require some one of its employees to keep such record shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100 for every day or portion thereof during which such failure shall continue.

No railroad or other transportation company shall receive a package of liquor to be shipped or carried into the District without having attached to it the affidavit of the consignee stating the amount of the liquors, the kinds of liquors ordered, and that it is not purchased for, nor will such liquors be used by the consignee for, an illegal purpose.

No person shall have in his possession, receive, or accept delivery oftener than once a month from any railroad, steamboat, express company, or transportation company of any kind, or from any person whomsoever, any alcoholic liquors in excess of one quart of distilled liquor in a single container, or one gallon of beer, or one gallon of wine, except as herein otherwise provided. Every container in which such distilled liquor, wine, or beer is carried or transported, shall have on it a card not less than 12 inches long by 6 inches wide, upon which shall be stated in letters not less than 1 inch high the kind and quantity of its contents; but a container in which a quart or less is carried may have on it a card 6 inches long by 4 inches wide, upon which shall be stated in letters not less than 1 inch high the kind and quantity of its contents, and the consignee shall, before receiving the distilled liquor, wine, or beer, sign a record as herein provided, and shall make an affidavit that the said distilled liquor, wine, or beer will not be used in violation of the provision of this act. A certified copy of such record shall be filed with the District Commissioners not later than the 5th day of each month for the calendar month preceding. Such commissioners shall keep a public record of such data as herein provided.

No minor or habitual drunkard shall be permitted to order or possess alcoholic liquors in any quantity whatsoever.

Any person who shall violate the provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished as provided in section 1 of this act.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] gave notice yesterday that he wished to move to reconsider the action of the Senate by which the amendment relating to ambassadors and ministers was adopted. I say to him that if he desires to make a change along that line it should be done at this point.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not understand that the amendment now proposed by the Senator has been adopted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator wish to wait until this amendment is adopted?

Mr. KENYON. It is entirely immaterial. I would just as soon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that this amendment be passed over for the present and that we may proceed with the next one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 5a, as follows——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Texas to suggest that the reconsideration I proposed last evening would be proper at this point. I rather think, however, that it comes in the next section, section 6. This is section 5a. I will defer it until section 6 is reached.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Texas. Section 6 has in it the provision with reference to foreign ambassadors. According to the reprint section 6 goes out, and section 4 apparently covers the provision in the first part of section 6 with reference to ministers and pastors getting liquors for sacramental purposes, and does not show the provision with reference to ambassadors.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator will turn to page 10 of the reprint, section 4——

Mr. JONES. That is where I am.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to direct his attention to the fact that the Senate added the clause relating to ambassadors and ministers to this section, and inserted it after the word "purpose," in line 17. That is the action which the Senator from Iowa moves to reconsider.

Mr. JONES. No such provision appears in the reprint.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill has not been reprinted with the amendments adopted so far by the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Oh, I see.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I was confused in that matter because it did not appear in the print I had. If that is a fact, as I assume it is, I think now would be the proper time to ask a reconsideration. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the action on the amendment of section 4 with relation to ambassadors and ministers of foreign countries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reconsideration of the vote whereby an amendment was adopted to section 4. The Chair does not know what it is, and does not suppose anybody else knows.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, when section 6 is reached I shall make the same request. It seems to me, upon reflection, that we ought to say nothing at all in this bill about the ambassadors or ministers of foreign powers. That is something that is governed by international law and custom between countries, and nothing that we could say here in any event would amount to anything. It would not be enforceable, and it might lead to irritation and embarrassment. I asked to reconsider it because I think we should say absolutely nothing about foreign ambassadors and ministers from foreign countries.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as a member of the committee which reported this bill to the Senate, I agree with the Senator from Iowa as far as I am concerned. I think, under the circumstances, it probably would be better to leave out any reference to foreign ambassadors, and let them take their chances under the law and under existing customs and regulations between nations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course. Does the Senator from Iowa move to strike out the provision?

Mr. KENYON. I suppose the question is on agreeing to this amendment, as the action on it has been reconsidered, and it does not require a motion to strike out. If it requires a motion to strike out, however, I will make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it does not require it. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments passed over will be stated.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Section 5a was passed over.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section to be known as section 5a, as follows:

SEC. 5a. That every licensed manufacturer of alcoholic liquor not herein prohibited shall keep a permanent record of all sales and shipments of alcoholic liquor. Such record shall set forth the following information: The name of the consignee or purchaser, the quantity of liquor, the express company or other carrier by which such liquor was shipped, the date of sale or shipment, and the purpose of the purchase as set forth in the affidavit accompanying the order. Each common or special carrier of alcoholic liquors within the District shall keep a record as above provided, and a certified copy of such record with a copy of the affidavits shall be filed with the District Commissioners not later than the 5th day of each month for the calendar month preceding. No shipment of alcoholic liquors shall be made until the purchaser signs an affidavit that such alcoholic liquors are not purchased for nor will such liquors be used or sold by the consignee for beverage purposes. The District Commissioners shall keep a public record of such sales, shipments, and affidavits, alphabetically arranged. Copies of the affidavit shall be attached permanently at the end of the record of each shipment or sale, and to each package containing liquor until delivered to the consignee. Any violation of this section shall be deemed a misdemeanor and be subject to the same penalties as provided in section 1 of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following proviso at the close of section 5:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent any executive department or other establishment of the United States Government from purchasing or importing into the District of Columbia, free of tax and for its own uses, denatured, methyl, or ethyl alcohol for scientific, medicinal, pharmaceutical, or mechanical purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move, on page 12 of the reprint, line 5, after the word "liquors," to insert the words "within the District of Columbia."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator explain the purpose of that amendment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The purpose of the amendment is to show that this clause does not apply to shipments to points outside the District.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What effect will the amendment have on exportation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It will permit exportation for lawful purposes to anyone outside the District, and not to druggists only, as the clause originally read through mere oversight.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And as the Senator proposes to enlarge his amendment it will widen the field for the exportation of alcohol outside of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SHEPPARD. As to alcohol manufactured for industrial, mechanical, sacramental, and medicinal purposes, it will widen the number of those to whom it may be shipped, instead of restricting such number to druggists only, that is all. It does not widen the field of exportation in any other sense.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as I stated yesterday, I do not think this bill ought to be written for the purpose of playing favorites. There can not be any question in the world that the efforts on the part of the proponents of the bill to inject these amendments into it broaden the field of the shipment of alcohol out of the District for the purpose of taking care of and protecting a manufacturer of alcohol in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is not true, Mr. President, with all due regard to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is true.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I deny it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not talking about the Senator from Texas; he may deny it; but the Senator is not the proponent of this measure. I read a statement in the papers yesterday where the Antisaloon League agreed, and it was published in a public print, that they would broaden this bill so as to open the field for the doing of the business of the manufacture of alcohol in the District of Columbia. The Senator from Texas, so far as I know, was not in that conference or at that meeting. If he was I am not informed, but it has not been denied that it was done.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was not at the meeting.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Senator is carrying out on the floor of the Senate the declared purpose of that meeting.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is wrong in that declared purpose?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Here is what I say is wrong, and I said so yesterday. There is one manufacturer of alcohol in this District who says he is a prohibitionist, and I do not doubt his word. As far as I know, he has contributed to that cause. He may or may not, I do not know, but I assume he has.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator knows——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He is the one man, as far as I know, who is affected by this amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me ask the Senator a question right there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does this law prevent anybody else from going into the business of making alcohol for nonbeverage purposes? Does it restrict that privilege to one individual or one institution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But here is where I say you are playing favoritism. You make this amendment so that this gentleman can continue his business and save his property. Now, I do not object to doing that, not for a minute; but I do say you are playing favorites when you confine the proposition to one man. There are other people who are going to have their property confiscated if you pass this bill; it will be just as absolutely destroyed as if you took a torch and set fire to it.

What I say is if you propose to play favorites and take care of one manufacturer of alcohol, you ought to do what is just, what is fair, and put a provision in the bill that you are going to pay all the men whose property is destroyed by this law and wiped out entirely. That is but just and fair; but because one manufacturer of alcohol happens to be on your side you are very careful to guard it, so that he will not get hurt, and then you destroy the balance of the people.

I do not think that is fair. I am not going to interfere with it, but I am asking you to submit this bill to the judgment of the people of the District, if this is the way that you want to play the game—it is your bill—and put it up to the people of the District that way. But I say it is not fair.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The statement of the Senator from Alabama is entirely unfair. The institution to which he refers manufactures alcohol for industrial, mechanical, and medicinal purposes. Institutions or individuals who manufacture alcohol for a beverage have no property rights, and the highest courts of the country have so decided. The courts say that they have no more right to be repaid for property used in that nefarious business than if they had been engaged in making counterfeit money or illicit-distilling machinery. The Senator's analogy can not be justified.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask for a statement of the amendment which is now pending?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has the Senator the reprint before him?

Mr. BORAH. I have.

The SECRETARY. On page 12 of the reprinted bill, line 15, after the word "liquors," it is proposed to insert the words

"within the District of Columbia," so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

Manufacturers licensed according to this section shall sell alcoholic and other prohibited liquors within the District of Columbia to druggists only, and only to such druggists as are licensed under the terms of this section.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I submit the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. President, after the word "druggists," in the same line, I move that there be inserted the words "hospitals, and scientific laboratories."

Mr. THOMAS. I think alcohol is one of the principal ingredients in the manufacture of cellulose explosives. If my information is correct, the principal consumers of alcohol are the manufacturers of powder. That, of course, is a great industry. I should like to inquire why the sale of alcohol for medicinal purposes should be limited to druggists and hospitals and other institutions of that kind when there is such a large market for legitimate consumption in other directions.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Those engaged in the legitimate industry of which the Senator speaks may obtain this material from druggists within the District of Columbia. We agreed to confine sale within the District to druggists in order to be able to keep in touch with the traffic more easily.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think the Du Pont or the Hercules Co., which consume large quantities of alcohol, should be compelled to go to the druggist for their supplies?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This amendment does not apply to shipments to points outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMAS. The sale, then, of alcohol manufactured in the District can be made to these large consumers?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is manifest to me that if this sale is to be permitted to druggists it ought to be permitted to hospitals and scientific laboratories. Alcohol is an absolute necessity in a hospital, and it is possibly a greater necessity in a scientific laboratory.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Texas whether Peruna and Coca-Cola are included in the Senator's amendment. I am serious about that. I have a letter from a gentleman, no less than Dr. Wiley, who says that both these concoctions are poor and miserable whisky, and that there are more wrecks from Peruna than from many other drugs that are thought to be dangerous. I should like to inquire whether they are incorporated in the Senator's bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Coca-Cola is not affected by the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Is Peruna?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Peruna being a patent medicine is controlled by the section which refers to sale by pharmacists and druggists, and as a medicine, under proper restrictions, it probably may be sold.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Would it be agreeable to the Senator from Alabama to have his amendment for a referendum considered now?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would be very glad to do it, but I would prefer to have a vote on the substitute of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] first, because, as I said, my purpose is not to interfere with the manner and mode of the preparation of the bill. It is my effort merely to have a submission to the people of the District of Columbia. If the Senate intends to adopt the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah for the bill in charge of the Senator from Texas, I would then apply my amendment to the substitute of the Senator from Utah, and if he is prepared to proceed to a vote on that proposition I am prepared and ask that it be done now.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas whether the amendment that we laid aside a while ago has been agreed to?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has not been passed on. I asked that it be passed over because I wanted a little more time to discuss it with some of the Senators before finally submitting it; but if the parliamentary status is such that it must be immediately considered I am willing to dispose of it now.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to its going over, but such an amendment as that ought to be disposed of before we vote on the substitute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say if we vote on the substitute and it is adopted it wipes the Senator's bill out of the way.

Mr. NORRIS. But a vote on the amendment should come before we vote on the substitute.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. May we vote on the substitute before passing on the amendments I have submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By withdrawing them.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I hesitate to assume the responsibility of withdrawing one part of this amendment—that is, the amendment limiting the amount of liquor that may be imported to an individual for personal use, owing to the pronounced differences of opinion among those who favor this bill. I realize that we can not accomplish everything at once. If we destroy the saloon in this District, we will have taken a long step forward. Therefore I am going to withdraw the last two paragraphs of the amendment in question and ask that the other paragraphs be adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator explain exactly what is withdrawn so that we may understand it?

Mr. NORRIS. The part which the Senator withdraws, I understand, commences at line 5, page 4, of the printed amendment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. And ends on line 6, page 5.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator read the language for our information?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The part withdrawn relates to the limitation of the amount that may be imported for personal use.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So, as you leave it, there is no limitation on the amount?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I leave it in that shape, although I hesitate to do so. I wanted more time, but I realize that a decision must be made and that we can not accomplish everything in one effort. I think it best to withdraw that part of the amendment limiting importation for personal use.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has the Senator any further amendments pending?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have none that I recall except the part of the amendment to be known as section 2a, which is still to be considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What does that relate to?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It relates to regulations governing shipments and requiring records to be kept by the transportation companies, and so forth.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator does not desire to proceed with those amendments now?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We must proceed with them now. I ask that the parts of section 2a which I have not withdrawn be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Texas clarify the situation—as far as I am concerned I may be very obtuse—as to the present condition of the bill since the withdrawal of the amendment which was under discussion yesterday, which the Senator withdrew a moment ago. As I understand it an amendment has been adopted to the bill which forbids the manufacture for sale or gift, import for sale, import for use or gift, of any alcoholic beverage except for nonbeverage purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Of course, Mr. President, section 1 will have to be slightly rearranged to accommodate the withdrawal I have made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose the Senator probably contemplates elimination of the words "for use or gift."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do. I shall ask that this be done after we adopt this other part of section 2a.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Have the amendments of the Senator from Texas been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the language which the Senator proposes to withdraw be read. I do not find it.

The SECRETARY. While under consideration the proposed amendment known as section 2a of the Senator from Texas was passed over. The Senator from Texas now proposes to modify that proposed amendment by striking from it the following words on page 4 of the amendment of the Senator from Texas, beginning at line 5, which reads:

No person shall, for personal use or gift, have in his possession, receive, or accept delivery oftener than once a month from any railroad, steamboat, express company, or transportation company of any kind, or from any person whomsoever, any alcoholic liquors in excess of 1 quart of distilled liquor in a single container, or 1 gallon of beer, or 1 gallon of wine, except as herein otherwise provided. Every container in which such distilled liquor, wine, or beer is carried or transported shall have on it a card not less than 12 inches long by 6 inches wide, upon which shall be stated in letters not less than 1 inch high the kind and quantity of its contents; but a container in which a quart or less is carried may have on it a card 6 inches long by 4 inches wide, upon which shall be stated in letters not less than 1 inch high the kind and quantity of its contents; and the consignee shall, before receiving the distilled liquor, wine, or beer, sign a record as herein provided, and shall make an affidavit that the said distilled liquor, wine, or beer will not be used in violation of the provisions of this act. A certified copy of such record shall be filed with the District commissioners not later than the 5th day of each month for the calendar month preceding. Such commissioners shall keep a public record of such data as herein provided.

No minor or habitual drunkard shall be permitted to order or possess alcoholic liquors in any quantity whatsoever.

And person who shall violate the provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished as provided in section 1 of this act.

Mr. BORAH. Is the portion of the amendment which has just been read the portion which the Senator asks to have stricken out?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw that part of the amendment. I ask that the other part of the amendment be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the words on page 2, lines 8, 9, and 10, "import for use or gift, except as hereinafter provided, store, keep, deposit, or give away, except as hereinafter provided," be eliminated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the printed amendment, beginning in line 8, after the word "sale," it is proposed to strike out the words "import for use or gift, except as hereinafter provided, store, keep, deposit, or give away, except as hereinafter provided."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I believe that this concludes my amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] if he desires to present his substitute before I offer the referendum amendment, so that we may know what bill we propose to refer?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. Can not the Senator offer his amendment to either one of these bills?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; but I do not care to take two votes on the amendment. If we have to take a vote on the Sheppard bill and the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] should prevail, then I should have to have another vote on that proposition. I do not see any use in taking two votes. I had rather have the proposition of the Senator from Utah as a substitute first decided.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Secretary has sent for a copy of my substitute amendment. I only had that one copy, and it will be here in a moment. Then, if there is no objection, I shall offer it at this time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is not the substitute intended to be proposed by the Senator from Utah on the Secretary's desk?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the Secretary has just now handed me the substitute.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah is now being considered, I desire to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Kansas to withhold his amendment to the proposed substitute for a moment, so that I may make a brief statement as to its provisions.

Mr. BORAH. May I submit a suggestion?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. We have had this measure under consideration here for a couple of days, and I now understand that the Senator from Utah offers an amendment which is a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. That substitute has not yet been printed, and no one will know, except in a most superficial way, what it contains or what it is. I am myself rather desirous of knowing more about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I have just had a consultation with the Senator having the bill in charge in regard to the matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why can not the Senator from Utah now explain the purport of his substitute, so that we may understand it better than having it read from the desk?

Mr. BORAH. To explain the purport of a bill without having the bill before one's eyes, without having the print, or without having gone over it at all does not afford very accurate information regarding it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would mean two or three days' hard work studying it in detail and perfecting it, and we have already gone ahead and perfected another bill to the satisfaction of the Senate. That is the trouble with the suggestion.

Mr. BORAH. It may be that the Senator from Utah has a better bill than that pending, but I do not want to vote for a bill about which I know nothing, except what will take place here in the next 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the bill which has now been perfected should also be reprinted before a vote is taken upon it. I do not believe a half dozen Senators know what is in the bill. I think both bills should be printed and laid before the Senate, so that we may know what we are going to vote upon.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I was stating before interrupted, I had asked the Senator having the bill in charge if it were possible to allow the substitute offered by me to be printed, so that Senators might see just exactly what the substitute contains. I myself think that the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is a very wise one, that the bill that is now before the Senate as amended should be printed, so that Senators may see exactly what amendments have been made.

There is no disposition on the part of the Senate to withhold action on the bill; and it seems to me, if the Senator from Texas would allow the bill to go over until to-morrow, in the meantime the substitute may be printed, and we may have the bill as amended printed. Then Senators can see just exactly what the two bills are.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If that be done, would the Senator consent to let this bill retain its present status as the unfinished business?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly; I think there would be no question about that.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Utah yield to a suggestion there?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It strikes me that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] might at this time offer his referendum amendment. I presume he is ready to argue the amendment. He might offer it with the understanding that, if his amendment is agreed to, and if afterwards the substitute of the Senator from Utah shall be agreed to, he will then offer it as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have already stated that I did not care to offer my amendment until the form of the bill had been determined on. That is the logical parliamentary way to present the case; and I see no reason why I should present my substitute to the bill until the original bill is perfected.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Texas will have no trouble in obtaining unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Then we can proceed with the calendar and take up the Senator's bill the first thing in the morning. I assure the Senator that the substitute will be printed and each Senator will have time to read the substitute in detail. I do not think the adoption of my suggestion will delay the passage of the bill. If there were a disposition on the part of the Senate to defeat a vote upon the bill I should not make this request of the Senator, but I have not seen any disposition on the part of any Senator to delay the vote. The bill might just as well pass to-morrow as to-day.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I think there is very much in the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. Of course, I am not going to dictate to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] as to when he shall submit his very able speech, which will have the same effect if delivered this afternoon as it would have if delivered to-morrow; but, as a friend of this bill, I desire to say that I am not in favor of taking undue advantage of anyone. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that this question should have free and full discussion and that the bill should be proceeded with in the regular parliamentary way. While I have nothing to do with the management of the bill, I desire to state that I am sure the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] feels the same way about it as I do. We want a vote on the bill; we expect to pass it; but we are not in any undue haste in the matter if Senators want more time to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may be permitted to remark, without interfering with the progress of this negotiation, which is not getting anywhere, that it does not need a call of the Senate to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to take this bill up at the close of the morning business to-morrow morning. A call is required when it is sought to have a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed to consider a bill to a final vote; but the Senators now present, if they want to do so—and the Chair only interrupted because there seemed to be a different idea—can enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to resume the consideration of this bill immediately upon the close of the morning business to-morrow morning.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, what would happen to the bill, then, at 2 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. SMOOT. It would be the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it were under consideration, and there should not be anything pending at the close of the business of to-day so as to make that the unfinished business, the pending bill would proceed along as the unfinished business. The Chair understood the suggestion to be to take up the calendar under Rule VIII. Of course, if the calendar is taken up under Rule VIII, nothing can be considered except unobjected bills, so there would not be any other business which would intervene and become the unfinished business. An agreement may be entered into to proceed with the calendar under Rule VIII and at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow to take up Senate bill 1082. That certainly would avoid any steps being taken to make any other measure the unfinished business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have no disposition——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. If the Senator from Texas should ask unanimous consent now to lay the bill temporarily aside, especially if he did so at 2 o'clock, then the bill would be the unfinished business to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Provided it were taken up before the adjournment if any other measure were then pending.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is true; and that is why I made the suggestion to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be accomplished in that way.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I presume that both courses would be equally effective.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so. Whichever the Senator prefers will answer the purpose. It seems to me, however, the easiest way would be to ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether he expects to discuss his amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I expect to discuss it for perhaps 30 minutes, but not longer than that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator would not care to proceed this afternoon, so as to get rid of it, would he?

Mr. SMOOT. I would very much prefer that Senators have the proposed substitute before them in printed form. If the bill goes over until to-morrow, more than likely at least those who are interested will read the proposed substitute before the discussion takes place to-morrow after the morning business, and then, I will assure the Senator, that I will not take more than 30 minutes in the discussion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have no disposition whatever to resist any suggestion that would lead to a thorough and proper consideration of this measure and of the substitute proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. We are all endeavoring to reach the best possible solution of the question under consideration. I intend to make the request suggested However, before I do that, I shall ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if it would be agreeable to him, if there is no objection from others, to vote on this bill at 6 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not think it would be agreeable. If the Senator is willing to fix the time for a vote on Monday, I will agree to that. I have no desire to delay the matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN (to Mr. SHEPPARD). Make it 2 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the final vote on this matter be taken on Monday at 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will necessitate a call of the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I make that request, Mr. President.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. At what time?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall change it to 3 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Three o'clock?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Texas that his motion be put in the form that we have recently found most desirable, that at the time designated we take up the bill and proceed to vote upon any pending amendment and upon the bill itself to a final conclusion, debate being limited to not more than five minutes upon any amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I make that request.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the understanding that my substitute is the pending amendment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Not the pending amendment now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One of the pending amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us ascertain what the proposed unanimous-consent agreement is before the Chair orders the roll called.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Secretary of the Senate has the form which we have used frequently.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I may not have used the exact language. I was about to suggest to the Secretary that he put it in the language that we have recently used.

Mr. CURTIS. While the Secretary is preparing the order I should like to present an amendment and have it printed with the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. As an amendment to my proposed substitute?

Mr. CURTIS. As an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Utah declaring all places where intoxicating liquors are sold to be public nuisances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement in order to ascertain whether it is in such form as to express the views of Senators.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD asks unanimous consent that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m., Monday, December 18, 1916, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill, Senate 1082, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the Secretary has it wrong. There should be a provision as to five minutes' debate upon each amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. I suggest, Mr. President, that the order be amended so as to provide that from 2 o'clock until the vote is taken the five-minute rule shall be applied to the discussion on all amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not from 3 o'clock?

Mr. HUGHES. If we make it 2 o'clock, that will give us an hour to debate amendments under the five-minute rule. Then at 3 o'clock we will proceed to vote upon the bill through all the parliamentary stages to its final passage, and any amendment that has not been considered at that time can not be considered at all. That will give us an hour to operate under the five-minute rule in the consideration of amendments. I suggest that that change be made in the order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want also to have it understood that it will be in order to take up and consider the substitute which I propose to offer not later than 12 o'clock on Monday. I do not know whether the debate will run all day to-morrow on the other amendment. I want to be assured of an opportunity of presenting and having a vote upon the substitute I propose to offer.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is acceptable to me.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there does not appear to be any disposition to unnecessarily delay the passage of this bill. I do not like the idea of fixing a time now for voting upon the bill. The substitute of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has not been printed; the bill as it has been amended in very many particulars has not been printed; and I think that all that we ought to do now is to agree to the suggestion that the bill go over until to-morrow, and that it then be taken up after the bill as amended and the various amendments to it have been printed. Then possibly we may reach some understanding, if it seems advisable, as to when a vote shall be taken.

I do not feel that we ought to agree now to fixing a definite time to vote on this bill. The referendum proposition has not been discussed at all, except the debate we had upon it several months ago. That is the crux of the whole matter; and if we agree now to fix a time to vote—we know how discussion goes on in the Senate—the time may be practically all taken on one side or the other, and so, as a friend of the measure, I should now feel constrained to object to fixing a time to vote definitely on the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I suggest to the Senator from Texas that, if that be the case, why not ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Do I understand the Senator from Washington to indicate that he would object to the proposed agreement?

Mr. JONES. I would feel constrained to object at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest to the Senator from Texas, why not adjourn, and then to-morrow his bill will have the same status that it has to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Well, Mr. President, before we do that, I ask that the bill be reprinted, showing the amendments which have been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that it be reprinted as amended.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well; I ask that it be reprinted as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill as amended will be reprinted and the proposed substitute of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will be printed, together with the amendment to the proposed substitute offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 353, being the bill (S. 4060) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have an understanding before that is done, Mr. President. I will ask the Senator from Texas if the pending bill has gone over definitely until to-morrow?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to prefer the request that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside, and that we proceed with the calendar under Rule VIII, without prejudice to the bill S. 1082.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the understanding that it shall not be taken up again this afternoon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It may be taken up again at 2 o'clock, but I will say to the Senator that I shall make this same request at that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, with the understanding that the bill will not be taken up again this afternoon, I shall not object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will have to be taken up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But will not be taken up for consideration or a vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I agree to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not know that I understood the motion. The Senator can not make a compound motion that the bill be laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection to that. That is proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion I made to proceed with a particular bill. That would take precedence of the calendar, I having made the motion, but I withdraw it, as the calendar is now to be taken up.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 609) to aid in the erection of a monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 611) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2406) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is interested in this bill, and he is not present in the Senate Chamber at this time. Therefore I shall ask that the bill be passed over temporarily, at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. He has not the bill before him, but thinks it is one in which he is interested. [A pause.] The bill will be passed over.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a similar resolution was passed at the last session of this Congress, and there is no need of this remaining on the calendar any longer. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 43) for the appointment of a committee to investigate and inquire into the causes of the existing freight blockade and embargoes on the trunk-line railroads entering into the port of New York was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that resolution go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be placed under Rule IX. The object of the resolution, of course, is past, and I ask that it be placed under Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be indefinitely postponed, if the object is passed. [A pause.] Let it remain on the calendar where it is, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

SERVICE ON POLITICAL COMMITTEES, ETC.

The bill (S. 668) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there are a number of measures like this pending upon the calendar. It occurs to me that if we should carry them all over to the calendar under Rule IX we will get them off our calendar here, and we would know what we really had to deal with, not only with reference to this but with reference to other measures that are not being seriously pressed. As we come to them, I think if we want to handle this calendar we ought to transfer them to Rule IX and get them off of this calendar, where apparently they are to be pressed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I notice here a number of bills relating to election practices. The Owen bill, so called, has been recommitted. Why would it not be well to recommit these measures for consideration in connection with the whole subject?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think these election matters might very properly take that course.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, as the proponent of some of these bills, at least, I think the suggestion is a very good one, that all these bills relating to campaign and election matters be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, Mr. President, I move that this bill and the next two bills be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I refer to the bill (S. 665) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, and the bill (S. 669) to limit the use of campaign funds in presidential and national elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, that course will be taken. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the bill which was under consideration before the calendar was taken up.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2730) to fix the compensation of assistant appraisers of merchandise, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MONUMENT TO MATTHEW FONTAINE MAURY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, while I was out of the Chamber the second bill on the calendar—a bill for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia, was passed over. I ask unanimous consent to return to it. It has been heretofore objected to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I understand that he has looked into the matter and no longer has any objection to the consideration of the bill; so I ask unanimous consent to return to it and that it be again taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 611) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$30,000," and, on page 2, line 5, after the words "shall meet the approval," to insert "of the Commission of Fine Arts and," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $30,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of erecting, on one of the public reservations of the city of Washington, a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia, to bear an inscription, with appropriate emblems and devices, such as shall commemorate the work of said Matthew Fontaine Maury during the period of his service as an officer of the United States Navy, connected with the Naval Observatory at Washington, and shall perpetuate his fame as a geographer, a meteorologist, and a discoverer of the laws governing the winds, currents, and routes of the ocean. The design for said monument and the contract for its erection shall be open to public competition, and that proposal shall be accepted which shall meet the approval of the commission of Fine Arts and of the Secretary of the Navy, who shall also select the public reservation in the city of Washington for the site thereof. The total cost of said monument, with foundations and pedestal, shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated; it shall be finished and dedicated on such day as shall be fixed upon by the Secretary of the Navy, on whose certificate that the work has been duly completed the contract price thereof shall be duly paid, not exceeding the amount appropriated by this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. I have collected the bills that have been offered in this Congress providing for the erection of monuments to different persons in the United States. I have in my desk 67 such bills that have already been offered during this Congress.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what the amounts aggregate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not figured up the total, but it runs into the millions, without a question of doubt.

One of the reasons why I have objected to the consideration of this bill in the past was that I thought there ought to be some kind of a policy adopted by Congress as to the erection of monuments to the memory of distinguished men of our country. I am fully aware of the wonderful work accomplished by this distinguished Virginian. He was a very learned man, perhaps more so than men to whose memory we have already erected monuments; but in order that I may be consistent with a number of letters that I have written to citizens of Virginia and other places that have written me in relation to the bill now under consideration I want to say that I thought the letter that was written by M. F. Maury, commander, Confederate States Navy, dated October 29, 1861, to his imperial highness the Grand Duke Constantine, grand admiral of Russia, of St. Petersburg, was an unpatriotic letter and an unjust statement against the Federal Government. I am not going to take the time to read it, nor do I want it placed in the RECORD. I want to say to the Senator from Virginia that I have referred to the Maury letter in answering letters that have been directed to me by citizens of Virginia asking me what my reasons were for objecting to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, I shall say no more; but I do believe that we ought at a very early date, if not now, to agree upon some system in regard to the erection by the Government of the United States of monuments to distinguished citizens.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Is this a lengthy letter to this titled gentleman on the other side?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not very lengthy; but I will say to the Senator——

Mr. PENROSE. I should be interested in having it read, I think, or put in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I prefer not to do so now, as I am going to allow the bill to be voted upon, as far as I am concerned. I prefer not to do so at this time.

Mr. President, I will say nothing further at this time. If the Senate wants to vote $30,000 for the erection of a monument to Maury, well and good; but I want to say again that there are 66 other bills of a similar character to be considered at this session of Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I send to the desk an article taken from Collier's Weekly, dated the 25th of November, 1916, and ask that it be read. It is very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary read as follows:

It may be said that Maury laid the foundation for our modern Weather Bureau, and that the science of meteorology began with him. He founded the National Nautical Observatory and the Hydrographic Office in Washington, and discovered, among other things, the cause of the Gulf Stream, and the existence of that plateau in the North Atlantic Ocean, which, if I am not mistaken, made possible the laying of the first Atlantic cable. Cyrus W. Field said, with reference to this, "Maury furnished the brains, England the money, and I did the work." Further than this, the charts of the North Atlantic which Maury made years ago are to-day the basis upon which that ocean is navigated by all nations. I am informed that though he was decorated by many foreign Governments, he was never given so much as a cheap little medal by that of the United States, and that his name has not been kept alive by any memorial or other token of his country's gratitude.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I had that read in lieu of making any comment myself on the career of this great scientist. There may be 60 other bills here, but there are not 60 others with regard to men of equal distinction with Commodore Maury. He was one of the great men of this country, a great scientist, and a great naval officer. He was a man who conferred immense benefits on the people of the country.

I will say, furthermore, that the pendency of this bill in Congress has attracted wide attention all over the State of Virginia. It is a matter in which the people feel the deepest interest, and I feel that it is but a very small token of appreciation of a man who rendered the service that I know he rendered.

I hope the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill nor oppose its passage, out of deference to the senior Senator from Virginia. I know that he is very anxious to secure its passage, and has a very deep personal interest in it. Hence, I shall respect his wish, which is grounded upon a conviction of duty to a distinguished Virginian. When the bill was reached at former calls of the calendar I took identically the position of the Senator from Utah with regard to it, as with similar bills. It is always disagreeable to object to the consideration of bills in which other Senators have strong personal interest; and yet if we are to put a check upon our expenditures we must do so, and do so frequently.

The Senator from Utah has referred to a large number of other bills of similar character which have been introduced in this Congress, some of which, I presume, have been reported out, and others may be.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Not one has been reported at this session.

Mr. THOMAS. There is a similar bill immediately preceding this on the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That came over from the last session.

Mr. THOMAS. Both came over from the last session, so far as that is concerned. I have no doubt that those who introduced them are as interested in securing their passage as the Senator from Virginia regarding this one. And the aggregate amount of their required appropriations, which are in themselves comparatively small, would be a considerable drain upon the Treasury.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me, I will say right here that the other bill to which he refers, which is just before the Maury bill, was introduced by me, and I shall not expect two monuments to Virginians. I will not press that bill if the Maury bill is passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let us carry it under Rule IX.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; I shall be very willing to have that done.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not refer to it upon the assumption that it would be pressed, but merely as a bill which belongs to the class of bills to which the Senator from Utah referred, and which has been reported out upon the calendar. It is the aggregate of the amount of these comparatively small bills that tends to produce deficits in the Treasury such as we are now confronting.

Mr. President, during the last session we appropriated a great deal of money for which there was no immediate need; and if we are to judge from the number of bills that have been introduced in both Houses at this session we may be called upon to appropriate a great deal more, notwithstanding the fact that the condition of the Treasury is not such as to warrant it. Until our revenues shall equal, if not exceed, the amount of fixed expenditures that we must meet and provide for, we should not increase our appropriations except where it is absolutely necessary.

But my immediate purpose in speaking upon this matter at all is to outline what I think should be the course of the dominant party and therefore of its members during the next fiscal period, and perhaps indefinitely. There is no doubt but that we are confronting a deficit. What the amount of it is perhaps is not definitely known. If my recollection serves me aright, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates it at something like $190,000,000. We have another large naval and military program, which the preparedness influences of the country are behind, the adoption of which is confidently anticipated at the present session of Congress, and which, together with our previous Army and Navy appropriations, will increase the amount of that deficiency unless we enact further revenue legislation, which may or may not be contemplated. I do not know. At any rate, we are now face to face with the necessity either of issuing bonds for the purpose of financing some of our running expenses or of increasing taxation which is already burdensome.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will the Senator from Texas allow this bill to be temporarily laid aside that we may finish the bill which has been under consideration?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the Senator from Texas tell us with any certainty when we can reach a vote on this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There has been no agreement as to a time for a vote to be taken.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it to come up to-morrow?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill will come up to-morrow. I hope we may vote upon it at some time to-morrow, but I am not sure that we will be able to do so. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. By temporarily laying the bill aside it will remain the unfinished business upon the calendar to-morrow. In addition to that, I think we have had practically an agreement that immediately at the closing of the morning business to-morrow, before this bill is reached as the unfinished business, we will take it up for consideration. So that means that to-morrow is to be devoted to the consideration of the prohibition bill for the District of Columbia, unless something is done by the Senate to displace it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was going to ask further that the calendar be proceeded with without prejudicing the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That will be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has already been ordered this morning. The calendar will be proceeded with.

MONUMENT TO MATTHEW FONTAINE MAURY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 611) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I did not observe when I was speaking that the hour of 2 o'clock was approaching, and I assure the Senator from Virginia that I had no purpose of consuming the morning hour so as to prevent favorable action upon the bill.

I was about to say, Mr. President, when interrupted, that it was necessary either to provide a bond issue for the purpose of covering existing and future deficiencies or of increasing our rates of taxation, together, unquestionably, with the enlargement of the objects of taxation that are immediately before us, and for my part I do not like that situation. I am absolutely opposed to a bond issue under any circumstances unless it becomes absolutely unavoidable, and I do not think it is. I believe in the old-fashioned doctrine that we should pay as we go, and that the imposition of direct taxes is one of the best ways of insuring economy of administration, not only because legislators will under that system shrink from extravagances which otherwise they easily assume, but because also under that system the discontent of the people will be aroused and prompt them to observe how their money is expended, a condition which must lead to economies otherwise impossible.

So at the next session—possibly at this session—the Congress must determine whether it will continue our present method of expenditures and meet deficiencies by a bond issue or by increased taxation, which, to my mind, is one of the most serious situations that confronts the party in power, or practice that strict frugality in public administration which good government always demands.

I am sorry that I am unable to observe any evidence of an economical spirit in either House or on either side of either House. I noticed on the first day of the session that about 213 private bills were introduced in the House of Representatives, all but two or three of which were for pensions or for increase of pensions, whose aggregate amount, like that of other small appropriations, will impose a very considerable added burden upon the Treasury.

But I have noticed that while we are all here ostensibly in favor of economy, when it comes to pension bills nobody seems to want either to reduce their number or to confine the applicants to general laws or to oppose the enactment of any special bill whatever.

I believe that the retrenchment to which I have directed my remarks should apply all along the line, and that we should not make exceptions in any direction if we are to accomplish what must be accomplished, if we are to prevent an increase, and a very serious increase, of taxation, or the enlargement of our national indebtedness. So after this session shall have expired, if I should live so long, it is only fair to say now that I shall feel it my duty to interpose, as far as I can, such objections as may be tenable and as may be consistent with the procedure of the Senate to the promiscuous and needless appropriation of the public revenues to objects which are private in character or not essential to the due administration of public affairs. And I sincerely trust and confidently expect to have the cordial cooperation of my fellow Democratic Senators at least.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I was on the point of rising just as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] rose for the purpose of expressing very much the same line of thought as that which he has presented to the Senate. The time has come when it is absolutely essential that we should appropriate no money for any purpose that we are not compelled at this time to provide for. Our naval appropriations for 1917, already made, our plans for a naval expenditure, coupled with our military plans for expenditure, will necessitate a large amount of increased revenue or else a bond issue. Our present revenue laws will not meet the tax upon the Treasury for the fiscal year 1916 unless we curtail expenditures, and even then it will be necessary to raise some additional revenue.

I think the way to begin to economize is to stop appropriating money anywhere for anything that is not necessary now. The responsibility will be on the Finance Committee to help raise the revenue. The responsibility is on the Appropriations Committee to cut off every increased appropriation and lessen some which we have already made where it can be done.

I do not believe that any such important problem will be in front of us in the near future as the curtailment of expenditures, and the increase of revenue for our plans of military preparedness will require substantially more money than our present plan of revenue will raise.

I would not vote for even this $30,000. I am in favor of putting under Rule IX the bill just above it and each other provision for a statue as we reach it. Of course, it looks like a small matter, but unless we begin in small matters we will not save in large ones. I am in favor of appropriating no money at this session that is not absolutely necessary.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not think I am unreasonable or inaccurate when I say that I think I have done as much to keep down useless appropriations as any Senator in this body. I have been in a continuous conflict since I have been the chairman of the Appropriations Committee with efforts that are from time to time made to put extravagant appropriations on the statute books. I will continue my efforts on that line, and I will be very much surprised if this session passes without my finding it necessary to take issue with the two Senators who have seen fit to oppose a little $30,000 appropriation to do honor to one of the greatest men who ever lived in the United States. I am in full accord——

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I think I stated distinctly that I was not opposed to the bill of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I stated also that I would not oppose it, but wished——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I thought the Senator from Georgia opposed it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I stated that I was opposed to all such bills. I did not intend to oppose this one, although I did not intend to vote for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows my position.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand the Senator from Utah, and I will not prolong my remarks. I was under a misapprehension. This is a very small matter and it is doing some honor to one of the great men of the country. I am glad to hear that the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Georgia will unite with me in having it passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that in my remarks I said I would vote against this measure. I must have expressed myself unfortunately. I meant to say I would not vote for the measure, but did not intend seriously to oppose it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO POCAHONTAS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 609 to aid in the erection of a monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va., be transferred to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF FREIGHT BLOCKADE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that Order of Business 63, Senate resolution 43, for the appointment of a committee to investigate and inquire into the causes of the existing freight blockade and embargoes on the trunk-line railroads entering into the port of New York, should be gotten off this calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that that be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has it been done?

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that it be transferred to Rule IX and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] objected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Putting it on the calendar under Rule IX simply gets it off this calendar. By motion it can still be taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that not only has the object passed but the Interstate Commerce Commission made a most thorough and exhaustive investigation of this very subject matter, and we have that investigation now printed much more fully than the committee of the Senate would do; and it would be perfect nonsense to consider the resolution at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let us put it on the calendar under Rule IX by motion. I move that it be placed under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia movies that Order of Business 63 be placed on the calendar under Rule IX. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 7, providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 20, for the appointment of a committee of Senators to examine into questions relating to the acquisition or construction of manufacturing plants to supply the Army and Navy with arms, armament, etc.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

RELIEF OF FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The bill (S. 1428) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $85,975 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the Trans-Atlantic Fire Insurance Co., $9,500; Prussian National Fire Insurance Co., $2,850; North German Fire Insurance Co., $8,000; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Co., $10,450; Royal Insurance Co., $25,100; Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Co., $6,900; New Zealand Insurance Co., $6,025; Fireman's Fund Insurance Co., $9,250; National Fire Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., $4,150; Caledonian Insurance Co., of Edinburgh, Scotland, $750; North British Mercantile Insurance Co., $3,000; the aforesaid sums being the amounts paid by each of the said companies on account of insurance against fire on property in the Territory of Hawaii, which property was destroyed by the Government in the suppression of the bubonic plague in said Territory in the years 1899 and 1900.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROCEDURE IN COURTS.

The bill (S. 3551) relating to the procedure in the United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOLLIS. There has been some disagreement among the friends of this bill, but those disagreements have been reconciled. I think, however, the bill should not be passed in the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I therefore ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

STATUE OF JAMES BUCHANAN.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

The bill (S. 1107) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be impossible to consider that bill under the five-minute rule, but I want to give notice now that at the first opportunity, if the chairman of the committee does not do it, I am going to move to take up the bill for consideration. This is a bill that will save to the Government of the United States $800,000 a year in its printing. The whole object of the resolution that was passed by the Senate this morning, offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], can be attained by the passage of this bill. I hope when the time comes Senators will take up this bill and pass it. It ought to be done, and it should have been done before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 645) to provide for the closing of barber shops in the District of Columbia on Sunday was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 107, relative to leasing of Osage oil lands.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1100) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on February 16, 1903, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1096) to provide for carrying into effect of the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, and other laws and treaties with said tribe of Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

RELIEF OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The bill (S. 3927) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Busch, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. There are some 12 or 14 relief bills, beginning with this Order of Business 234, reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. There is a general bill here covering all these individual bills, which is Order of Business 638, the bill (H. R. 11150) for the relief of mail contractors. That bill was reported by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

I remember 14 years ago going over all these individual bills. The general bill to which I have referred, I think, has passed the Senate once. I want to say frankly I do not believe the bill ought to pass, but the department has reported favorably upon it. These bills were introduced in the Senate years and years before I came to this body. I think all these individual bills ought to be indefinitely postponed, and House bill 11150 ought to be considered by the Senate, for House bill 11150 covers them all. I will ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], the chairman of the Committee on Claims, if he will not make that motion now?

Mr. BRYAN. The bills came from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that the bills have been before the Committee on Claims so many times I was thinking of them at the moment as being still there. However, the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is not present. Therefore I will ask that all these relief bills be passed over, and in the meantime I shall see the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ask him to have them indefinitely postponed and allow the Senate to pass upon House bill 11150, for the relief of mail contractors.

Mr. PENROSE. That does not deprive any Senator of his rights to object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there are the same names in the omnibus bill that are enumerated in these private-claims bills.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that fully. I agree with the Senator from Utah that none of them ought to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, then, Order of Business 234, Senate bill 3927, will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4418) to establish game sanctuaries in national forests, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4884) for the relief of the estate of A. B. Denton was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that this bill and the following bills, House bill 8592, House bill 9291, House bill 9458, House bill 9459, House bill 9555, House bill 9556, House bill 9635, House bill 5986, House bill 10933, and House bill 3447, be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why not put them on the calendar under Rule IX?

Mr. SMOOT. I think they ought to be indefinitely postponed, because they are all included in House bill 11150, to which I referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bills will go over.

The bill (S. 1065) to provide for summer residence homesteads, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 5126) giving the consent of the United States for the bringing of certain suits in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WORKS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in China was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4086) to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have tried on many an occasion to secure a consideration of this bill. I have tried to do it without delaying the action of the Senate. I have been willing at all times to take a vote on it without discussion. It has been on the calendar for several years. Therefore I move, notwithstanding the objection, to take up the bill, and pending that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Oliver	Smoot
Bankhead	Hughes	Overman	Sterling
Borah	Husting	Page	Sutherland
Brady	James	Penrose	Thomas
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Poindexter	Thompson
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Tillman
Clapp	Jones	Robinson	Townsend
Clark	Kenyon	Shafroth	Underwood
Culberson	La Follette	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Fernald	Lee, Md.	Shields	Warren
Gallinger	Lodge	Simmons	Watson
Gore	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.	Works
Hitchcock	Norris	Smith, Md.

Mr. POMERENE. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] because of official business, and of the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] because of illness.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have been requested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to state that he is absent on official business and is paired.

Mr. CHILTON. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] are absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am under the impression that this motion is in order, because I believe we are proceeding under Rule VIII, without any unanimous consent that the call should be limited to unobjected cases. Is that not true?

Mr. SMOOT. That was not the request, I will say to the Senator. The calendar came up in regular order when the unfinished business was temporarily laid aside, and the Presiding Officer said, "The calendar under Rule VIII is in order." Therefore, the motion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was my view of it. For that reason I made no point that the motion was out of order, because I was under the impression that we had proceeded generally under Rule VIII without limitation, which makes the motion in order.

I wish very much that the Senator from Michigan would not press his motion. I suggest that it would not be possible to reach any result from the motion if the bill be taken up to-day. I do not believe we could possibly complete the discussion of the matter to-day. I have quite a large amount of material which I desire to present to the Senate in connection with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that a few days ago when the Senator from Georgia had a bill on the calendar which he desired very much to have considered he was very insistent on proceeding with its consideration. Why not proceed with the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly, if the Senate desires to do so, it can.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I would be very glad to accommodate the Senator from Georgia. I have never asked anything unreasonable for this bill. I think the Senator understands that about a half dozen Senators—not to exceed that—are opposing this bill and preventing a vote, and they have been doing so for years. I think that is unfair and unjust. If the Senate to-day will agree upon a date in the future when this bill may be taken up and voted upon, I am perfectly willing to fix that date to-day. I am very willing, indeed, that we shall fix a date upon which to vote. I certainly do not want to deprive the Senator from Georgia of making any argument against the bill which he may desire to make.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan misunderstood me if he thought I supposed he would try to prevent me. What I meant to say was that a little later on I should leave the Senate and go and get the material that I prepared at the last session of Congress to use against this measure. I think I have that material within reach. I shall then return to the Senate a little later on, if the bill is taken up. I believe I can procure my material; I think I know where it is; and I think I can quite promptly get the material that I desire to present to the Senate against this measure.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does the Senator from Georgia object to fixing a date to vote on this bill in the near future?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would, of course, rather the bill should not be voted upon at all. I will be frank with the Senator. I do not think it is right to spend this $10,000,000. I look upon it practically as a bounty to these gentlemen, without any excuse.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is no proposition for even the expenditure of a third of $10,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But if the Senate want to do it and if the House of Representatives want to do it, they have the right to do it. I have made up my mind that, after presenting the reasons which influenced me against the measure, I shall not resort to any dilatory means to try to keep the bill from being voted upon. I do not believe it is right; but if the Senate wants to vote for the bill I shall not try to obstruct it. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to let the Senator name a time when we shall vote on the bill. The Senator put it to me, and I act upon it without reflection, but the responsibility is on the Senate and the House of Representatives. If they want to vote this money, I do not think the opposition of a dozen men who differ from the balance of the Senate, if they can not convert the balance, ought to stop the bill from becoming a law. However earnestly I may desire the bill defeated, if I am in a small minority, I am unwilling by obstructive measures to check it. I shall not be in the way of preventing this measure coming to a vote after I have presented such reasons as I have against it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that this motion is not debatable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A motion to take up a bill after 2 o'clock is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After 2 o'clock such a motion is debatable.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not propose to debate the merits of this bill, but I merely wish to say that I think the Senator moving its consideration is entitled to have its present consideration or to have a time named when the bill shall be considered.

The bill is one which has been repeatedly reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs. The amount involved is not, in my judgment, anywhere near half what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has stated. It is a bill which should have the right of way for consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think perhaps we had better vote to take up this bill if we are going to take it up. When that shall have been done, I shall make a proposition immediately to the Senator from Georgia as to a day when it shall be considered and voted upon. Therefore I ask for a vote on my motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to take up Senate bill 392, which is known as the volunteer officers' retired-list bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. He being absent, I withhold my vote. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. That pair, however, has not been a hard-and-fast agreement, and while I ordinarily observe it, I feel at liberty to vote on this motion, and I vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], but I understand that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], but as that Senator reported the bill, which it is now moved to take up, and presented a very able statement in its favor, I feel free to assume that I am entitled to vote on this motion notwithstanding the pair. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and, as that Senator is absent, I will withhold my vote. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote in favor of the pending motion.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the affirmative). When my name was called, because of the absence of my pair, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I transferred the pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. Subsequently the Senator from North Dakota came into the Chamber, which would have necessitated the withdrawal of my vote, but subsequent to that the senior Senator from North Carolina appeared and voted. I therefore allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is unavoidably absent on the business of the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have been requested to state that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is absent on account of sickness to-day. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], which I transfer to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and vote "yea."

While on my feet I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I also announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 12, as follows:

So, the motion of Mr. TOWNSEND was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, which had been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that he desires more time than will be afforded this afternoon to discuss this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not occupy that much time. I said I thought more time would be taken, but I may be mistaken about that. I do not know what time will be taken.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like very much to proceed this afternoon if we can do so. At the same time I would like to accommodate the Senator by fixing a day certain to vote, if that would be an accommodation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, I think I can speak a while until the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] gets ready, and I think I can complete my preparation while he is occupying the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk a letter which I received a day or two ago with reference to this matter and ask to have it read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

1302 TAYLOR STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.,
December 4, 1916.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: There is now before Congress a bill (S. 392) (H. R. 386) known as the "Retired volunteer officers' bill," on which a vote is now pending in the United States Senate, but which has been postponed from time to time, by reason of objection of Senators.

I am writing to you to ask that if this bill ever comes up for passage, you will vote against it. I ask this as an old soldier, who is vitally interested, and therefore has a right to a candid hearing.

I am opposed to this bill; so vehemently opposed to it that I can hardly speak calmly about it; nor can I understand how it is that the great body of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the greater body of veterans of the Civil War, can be so silent, or apathetic—unless, indeed, they do not understand.

Up to the time that this stupendous piece of treachery was concocted, all veterans "stood together" and were loyal to each other, seeking legislation for the common good. Now, the comparatively small percentage who wore shoulder straps have thrown down their comrades and are seeking to make laws greatly to their own advantage, which is "class legislation."

Most of them are already receiving the highest pensions paid under present laws, viz, $30 per month. Not content with this, which is often double what humbler comrades of the rank and file are getting, they have the hardihood to project a scheme, the logic and language of which is: "To h——l with the old soldier, let him go to the home and eat beans, so we can get a retired officers' pay of $100 to $150 per month—live like retired gentlemen and throw bouquets at ourselves for our astuteness." A dastardly desertion and betrayal of the men they once honorably stood with.

As a basis and proof of my premises and prayer, I offer the following facts:

The present pension bill (Sherwood) takes into account two things—age and service—and these are, and must be, the only true foundation for all claims. Let us examine.

Have the proponents of this bill any advantage, or disadvantage in years, which needs special compensation?

None whatever. This is obvious to everybody, without argument.

Their claim, then, must rest on the assumption of "superior service." Let us see.

The company to which they belonged was recruited in the neighborhood or town where they had been schoolboys and had grown up together. When the company was full an election of officers was held. Always two or more tickets, but one successful candidate for each position—a captain and two lieutenants—not more than a shade smarter than the defeated candidates.

Being promoted to these positions they now enjoy the distinction, the honors, the authority, which accompany them.

What did they bring to these positions?

Any superior education or preparation? None whatever.

Any acquaintance with tactics? None.

Any knowledge of strategy? None.

Any familiarity with military engineering? None.

Any understanding of problems of transportation? None.

Anything about subsistence? Nothing.

Anything about clothing or sanitation? Nothing.

Anything about the school of the soldier? Nothing.

No years, or even days, were ever spent in study at a military school.

Not a dollar was ever paid as the price of qualification.

We each bought "Hardee" and began the "School of the Soldier" together.

Did they march farther or faster than their neighbor boys? They did not.

Did they endure hardships more severe than their schoolmates? They did not?

Did their counsels overcome the mighty combinations of treason? They were not asked.

Like the rest of us, they simply obeyed orders.

We stood in line while we could and ran when we had to.

As sprinters they were a good company average. When taken prisoners they were first to be exchanged.

What, then, did they do during the war which justifies this claim? Nothing.

They were abundantly paid; they thought so themselves, then.

What have they done since? Nothing.

They have enjoyed the savings of those years. They followed their own interests untroubled by "orders" or "service," and 90 per cent of them have for 50 years occupied the best positions in civil life.

On what, then, in God's name, are they resting their preposterous claims?

On the ghost of an old service, exhumed after 50 years, dusted off and revalued by a committee of interests and pressed with insulting effrontery upon a patient and long-suffering Congress.

The weapons are untrue assumptions, illogical arguments, specious reasoning clouding the real issue, and astounding and impudent persistence.

The retired Army officer spent his whole life, until his years retired him, in the service of his country.

The Volunteer officer never gave his years to the service of his country; he never was "retired"; he was mustered out with the rest of us and has followed his own sweet will as a civilian for 50 years, untrammeled by "orders," and has been at the "pie counter" most of the time.

Honorable sir, I carried, when fully equipped, about 45 pounds; the captain about one-ninth as much, and had a trunk and transportation for the rest.

My Belgian rifle weighed 14 pounds, exclusive of ammunition; his beautiful sword, one-ninth as much.

For this service I received $13 per month; he received nine times that amount and garnered the honors—and feminine smiles—"When knighthood was in flower."

He was fully paid when in service; when that ceased his claim ceased as completely and permanently as mine.

If he has further claim, so have I, and not in ratio of 1 to 9 but equal.

Let me beseech you, in the name of fair dealing, to vote against and defeat this bill.

H. B. WORCESTER,
Company B, Eighteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I must admit that this letter from this private soldier appeals to me, and I should think it would appeal to every fair-minded man and unprejudiced Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if this letter was addressed to the Senator, or is it a general letter?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it is addressed to me. I have not the pleasure of knowing this citizen of Wisconsin. This letter came to me through the mail unsolicited and unexpected. At first I thought I should perhaps hand it to one of the Senators from Wisconsin.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did it ever occur to the Senator that the writer must have been very ignorant, if he had any doubts about the position of the Senator from Georgia on this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, he was right in thinking that he need have no doubt about my position. He probably supposed I was not able to present a strong enough argument, and he certainly has given a most excellent one himself. I finally did not hand it to a Senator from Wisconsin, because I saw that the letter came from San Francisco. This brave and patriotic citizen has moved farther West; but I should like to commend to the Senate the argument he makes.

I understand how difficult it is for a Senator to vote against an organization that exists in his State. It is a formidable thing to do when a considerable sized organization exists in your State of a semipolitical character. When you vote against it the people in whose interest you vote say you have done your duty and do not care, but the organization holds you up forever afterwards. You simply "go up against it" politically, and it is not a very inviting position to occupy from the standpoint of personal political interest to vote against an organization of this kind.

These officers, no doubt, are men of influence in their communities; they have a following, and they can line up against a Senator or a Member of the House who votes against them, and make their political influence a serious hindrance to his political preferment; but if anyone had—I started to say the courage to go to the balance of the people and expose this measure—if he would go to the balance of the people and use the letter from this private and show the almost inexcusable discrimination that is being made in favor of these officers by this enormous bounty proposed to be taken from the Treasury by this bill and given them practically for nothing, I would have no fear that the better judgment and the real patriotism of a constituency would silence such clamors.

I know that at first it is troublesome. I have had a little experience with it myself, and I know these old men are not reasonable. During my first term as governor I found that the Confederate veterans, to whom we paid pensions out of the State treasury of Georgia, were paid their pensions in advance in February. That was not a time when the treasury was full, and it was quite embarrassing to do it. So I recommended, and succeeded in having passed, a bill dividing up the payments, thus making it easier for the State. Well, hundreds of those old fellows marched up and voted against me at the next election, charging me with having kept them out of their money. It was unreasonable conduct on their part; but they have reached such an age that many of them do not listen, as they would when younger, to reason. The best information that I could get was that this bill would cost the Treasury about $10,000,000 a year. To pension men without regard to the length of their service, as I understand the bill——

Mr. TOWNSEND. They must have served at least six months. They must have served two years or more if they get the maximum provided under the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the maximum?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The highest possible pay that any officer could receive, whatever his rank may be, would be three-fourths of the pay of a captain. A captain's pay is $2,400 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Eighteen hundred dollars a year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the highest possible pay that could be obtained by any officer; and there are very, very few of those.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And what is the lowest?

Mr. TOWNSEND. One-half of the pay accorded the rank that such officer receives to-day. For instance, the maximum pay of a second lieutenant would be one-half of the pay of a second lieutenant in the Regular Army to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would be about $1,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Eight hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the amount of the pay per person been reduced since the bill was first introduced?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not the amount to be paid to each officer, no; but the total amount carried by the bill has been reduced at least one-half on account of deaths.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; it would be reduced somewhat, of course, naturally. I do not like to put myself in the attitude of opposing pay to these men, as I know I have not anything but the kindliest feelings for them; but probably each one of them has already received three or four thousand dollars in pensions. I made an estimate, I think a couple of years ago, when this bill was pending, and the best information I could work out was that these men had averaged over $4,000 apiece from the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think it can be possible that that is true, Mr. President. As the Senator knows, since the act of 1890 there has been no additional pay or pension granted to a soldier because he was an officer. Congress then reduced to a level all of the pensions granted to the soldiers under the age-limit system, and most of these pensions have been very small up to the present time. Of course, the officers now are averaging probably 78 to 80 years old. I think that is probably true. They would therefore be getting under the present age law from twenty-five to thirty dollars a month; but, of course, that amount will be deducted, or, rather, the total amount carried by this bill should be reduced by the amount of pensions now received by the officers, in order to determine the additional appropriation required.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can the Senator give me the average pension that a captain receives?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He gets the same pay as a private. It depends upon his age. If he is 75 years old, he gets $24, I believe—that is, if he served the maximum time prescribed in the law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Prior to 1890, the time they were put on the same level, what was it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not tell the Senator now. I am not familiar with the pensions that were drawn at that time by the officers. I have not the amount in mind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What does the Senator think is a fair estimate of the average amount that these men have already received by way of pension from the Treasury, even where there was no injury of service origin?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the Senator will find that they received no pension whatever unless for some disability occasioned by the war, until we adopted the service-pension system, and then they received exactly the same as the privates. There is no difference between a private soldier and a sergeant, a corporal, a captain, or even a colonel, unless by special act of Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I understand the question of the Senator, I should say that in the case of an officer having served the maximum time required to obtain the maximum pension who went on the rolls under the act of 1890, the service-pension law, if he went on the roll then and is still alive, he probably has received about $2,500 during the 26 years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And they are now receiving about what—about $400 a year or about $350 a year?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the soldier is getting the $30 a month, it is the most that he can obtain.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Three hundred and sixty dollars a year is the maximum?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If he has reached the maximum age, and is drawing $30 a month, he could draw $360 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Three hundred and sixty dollars a year would be the maximum.

Mr. WARREN. He has to be 80 years old to get that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does this bill in any way treat of the necessities of the soldiers, or is it just a flat bill without regard to that?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just a flat bill without regard to their physical or financial condition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If a man had been a private, and had been advanced to the status of an officer, his service as private inures also to his benefit and helps make the count for him, does it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He must have been in the Army two years to have received the full pay or six months for the partial pay?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And his promotion might have been at any period during those two years or six months, and his salary would follow the length of service, not simply the promotion?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is suggested to me that he might have been made a captain just a week before the close of the war and receive the full compensation. The reply that occurs to me is that I am not sure, because he is a captain, that he ought to have any more than because he was a private; and I do not find special fault with giving him credit for his service in the ranks as private to help add to his compensation as an officer, for I think the privates have about as hard a time as the officers, if not harder. I wish we had plenty to give them all a great deal—I mean, the really deserving ones.

This writer, from Company B, Eighteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, Mr. H. B. Worcester, says:

Most of the officers are already receiving the highest pensions paid under present laws, viz, $30 per month.

I suppose this would be true, because I suppose there were very few officers who had not been in the Army the full two years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The majority of them were in the Army for that length of time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should take it for granted that to reach, in the latter part of the service, the position of an officer, they must have been officers for some time, or must have had experience in the ranks and have been promoted from the ranks, most of them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Their service as officers does not make any difference about their present pensionable status. It depends upon their age and service to some extent, but their age under the present law would give practically all of them, at least the majority of them, $30 a month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This writer says:

The present pension bill takes into account two things, age and service, and these are, and must be, the only true foundation for all claims. Let us examine.

On the ghost of an old service, exhumed after 50 years, dusted off and revalued by a committee of interests and pressed with insulting effrontery upon a patient and long-suffering Congress.

* * * * * * *

The retired Army officer spent his whole life until his years retired him in the service of his country.

The volunteer officer never gave his years to the service of his country; he never was "retired," he was mustered out with the rest of us and has followed his own sweet will as a civilian for 50 years, untrammeled by "orders" and has been at the "pie counter" most of the time.

Now, they do not occupy the position of retired officers. They do not in any sense occupy that position; and to give them one-half the amount that a retired officer gets, or three-fourths—a retired officer gets three-fourths pay, I think; does he not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. A retired officer of the Regular Army gets three-fourths pay, and if he served one day as a volunteer he is retired of a rank one grade in advance of his actual rank at the time of his retirement, and he gets retired pay of the advance rank. That is the way we treat the Regular Army officer to-day. We are not keeping faith with the volunteer officers in view of the promise that our Government made during the Civil War; but Congress has passed measure after measure recognizing the service of a Regular Army officer as a volunteer during the Civil War. I repeat, the law to-day retires a Regular Army office at a pay one rank in advance of that at which he served in the Army if he served a single day in the Civil War as a volunteer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, when did we add that provision? Did it go through at the last session?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no, no. Congress passed acts in 1905 and in 1912 and at several other periods since the war closed, recognizing the service of the volunteer if he entered the Regular Army. But it has failed to recognize the great mass of volunteer officers who led 90 per cent of the men who fought the battles of the North and saved the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I asked the Senator the question because I heard that there was some bill pending at the last session of Congress to advance substantially retired Army officers if they had been in the Spanish-American War or had served anywhere as volunteers, and I was watching it to resist it, and I was just wondering if it had passed through when I did not notice it, for I really enjoy resisting a measure of that sort much more when I am sure that there are just as many of my own people concerned in it in my own State as there are in anybody else's State.

This old soldier concludes his letter by saying:

> I carried, when fully equipped, about 45 pounds; the captain about one-ninth as much, and had a trunk and transportation for the rest.
> My Belgian rifle weighed 14 pounds, exclusive of ammunition; his beautiful sword one-ninth as much.
> For this service I received $13 per month; he received nine times that amount and garnered the honors and feminine smiles "When Knighthood was in Flower."

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator recognizes the inaccuracy of some of those statements. An officer has to pay for his living expenses; a private does not. And as to the privates electing the officers, that was not done generally, only in some communities where the State law or where the governor gave that privilege, as they did in Massachusetts at one time. But in the case of most of them the officers were those who went out and spent their money in recruiting companies, regiments, and so forth, in the Civil War.

I do not wish to attack the argument of the correspondent, but in his zeal he has rather gone beyond the facts.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will state again that I can not claim him as a correspondent. I was surprised two or three days ago to find this letter, dated December 4, on my desk. I suppose I drew the letter by having expressed myself in some previous Congress as opposed to this bill, and this gentleman wrote me for that reason. I have had quite a number of letters, not quite so elaborate or so argumentative, from privates protesting against this officers' bill, and insisting that the measure was discriminatory as to them. I can not vote for it. Although the Senator from Michigan does not think so, my conclusion was that it would cost something like $10,000,000 a year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not mean to assert that positively, however.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The best information we can obtain—that from the Pension Department itself—together with facts that have been compiled by a committee that has had the matter in charge, and which has submitted its findings to the department, makes the amount that this bill carries less than $4,000,000 the first year, and after that it would be materially less; that is, the net additional cost over and above what is now paid in pensions will be considerably less than $4,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there any report from the Pension Office recently giving such an estimate?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The last report we have from the Pension Office is on October 31 of this year, in which it is stated that there are now living on the invalid rolls of the Civil War 353,034 soldiers, including officers. From well-established calculation it has been shown that from the beginning of the pension lists or records not to exceed 1 out of 54 is an officer. The officers are older than the men. They average much older than the men. The death rate is much greater among the officers than it is among the men. With that ratio applied—1 in 54—there would now be 6,537 officers, or there were on October 31 last.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Sixty-five hundred at $1,800 a year would be about $11,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, well, Mr. President, there is no $1,800 a year average.

Mr. TOWNSEND. One thousand eight hundred dollars is the highest pay that any officer could receive, and that must be an officer superior to the rank of captain. There are not 2,500 among the officers who would receive $1,800 a year each. A little less than a year ago it was estimated that there were 7,200 officers, of whom 144 were generals and colonels, 216 lieutenant colonels, 360 majors, and 2,520 captains. All the balance were first and second lieutenants, who would receive not to exceed one-half the pay of their rank, which, of course, would be much less than three-fourths the pay of a captain. So I can say to the Senator that the total amount, estimated carefully and I think very conservatively, would be for the first year $3,642,000. Of course, I have deducted the pensions that they are now receiving. I am talking about the extra amount of pension that this bill would carry.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am afraid the Senator very much underestimates it; and yet——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to give him a statement of what I understand this bill is? In the first place, this bill carries only a rate, at the very largest, which amounts to three-quarters the active pay of a captain; but that applies to only the colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, and so forth. Now, the captain can get only half of his active pay, which would be $1,250. A first lieutenant, whose initial pay is $2,000, could get $1,000. The second lieutenant's initial pay is $1,700, and he would get half of that; and these amounts only if the officer served two years or more.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator says the bill gives the captain only half of his pay as a captain?

Mr. WARREN. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If he has served two years?

Mr. WARREN. He must have served two years to get that, and if he served six months he only gets a quarter of that, and if he served half of that time he only gets half. He must, in the first place, have served six months, anyway. He then gets the proportion that the number of months served bears to the amount for two years, so that the maximum for a captain is $1,250, and that will only be for those that were in the service two years, except those that have lost an arm or a leg or their eyes, who are specially provided for here. They get the regular three-fourths pay.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is that an increase to them also? I am just figuring how much the increased tax on the Treasury will be.

Mr. WARREN. The tax on the Treasury, as I said, would be, commencing with a second lieutenant, at the rate of one-half of $1,700, a first lieutenant one-half of $2,000, and a captain one-half of $2,500. The only ones who would get above the half of $2,500 would be majors, colonels, brigadier generals, and so forth. They would then get not over three-quarters of a captain's initial pay. That is the limit under the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The figures given by the Senator from Michigan should, I believe, be something like 2,500 who were captains or higher than captains.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think about 2,500.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And 500 of those were higher than captain. Then about 2,000 were captains?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is probably a fair statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would be $900,000, and the 2,000 would be $2,500,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Two million four hundred thousand dollars. I will say to the Senator you must deduct from this the total amount of pensions they are receiving to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One may take about $360 yearly as an average for each one.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is in some cases more than that. Some are receiving for total disabilities $72 a month. Some of them are receiving pensions under special acts for a larger amount than this bill would carry, and they would not obtain anything under this measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me—I just came into the Chamber—as the Senator knows, a large class of them get $100 a month for the loss of an arm and eyesight.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I simply made the statement that whatever pension they are receiving now will, of course, be deducted from the amount carried in the bill in order to determine the extra amount that we propose to appropriate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is an increased amount in the bill to go to those who were wounded, as the Senator from New Hampshire suggested. The Senator from Wyoming or the Senator from New Hampshire stated that under the act there was increased pay to those who were suffering from any disability, as I gathered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Special disability.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, so far as I can figure it out, under the Senator's suggestion it is very difficult to make an estimate of what it will be, it is largely conjectural; but instead of being $11,000,000, possibly it could not be over $5,000,000, or less.

I do not think I have anything further to say at this time, Mr. President. I think when I go to my office I can lay my hand on some memoranda I prepared at the last session. If I can I will refer to it later.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill if it is his purpose to explain it to us and let us know what it contains, or does the Senator intend to make an argument in support of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I beg pardon, I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. I inquire of the Senator from Michigan in charge of the bill if he intends to make an argument in support of it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have not intended to make any argument on the bill because it is thoroughly understood. The Senator from Florida understands it. It has been understood for some years. I do not wish to take any time of the Senate in discussing a matter upon which it is fully informed now and for which Senators are waiting to vote. We have discussed it in time past. The Senator himself has discussed it.

I did present an argument in favor of the measure and to which Senators honored me by giving attention the first time it came up, and I have arguments for it now. I do not care to answer the slanderous tirade which was presented by the writer of the letter which was read by the Secretary. It is unbecoming a soldier of the Civil War; it answers itself. Therefore, I say I do not care to dignify the statements which have been presented by him, and I hope we may give the Senate an opportunity to vote on the measure soon. I am prepared, I think, to answer such questions as are asked for information.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if one would take the trouble to examine the bills introduced on the subject of pensions, long ago he would have come to the conclusion that human ingenuity had been exhausted in the attempt to create and add new classes that might receive gratuities from the Government. It would seem that after considering this question from every conceivable viewpoint we have about exhausted the classes of pensions.

I do not feel any embarrassment in opposing this bill or any other bill of this character. The fact that I come from a section of the country which furnished no soldiers to the Union Army does not make me feel it less my duty to oppose this legislation, as I have opposed, and will continue to oppose, legislation in favor of the veterans of the Spanish-American War, and all the States furnished soldiers in that war.

Mr. President, the evil of this thing is not so much in the money that is spent; it is in the tendency to provide men a living out of the Federal Treasury. These officers in the Union Army are not on the same level and plane as officers of the Regular Army. These officers in the Civil War did not go into the military service for a career; they went in at the call of their country, and when the war was over they went back and became a part of the civil population. I suppose it is necessary to make some provision for those who devote themselves for a lifetime to the military service, because they have no means of acquiring a livelihood or taking care of themselves when their days of service are over. But that is not true of this class.

Heretofore, Mr. President, there has not been any distinction made as between the officers and privates, and while the Senator from Michigan may think that the letter from this private ought not to be read or heard in the Senate of the United States it seems to me the writer of the letter has a right to complain. It has never been the policy of Congress to make distinctions between officers and privates. Indeed heretofore they have always come and asked to be treated alike. Now that human ingenuity has about exhausted itself in trying to discover a new plan to place persons upon the pension roll, the Senator from Michigan has found out a way by arguing that these men ought to be placed, as far as pensions are concerned, on an equality with officers of the Regular Army who devoted their lives to the military service.

The evil of this legislation, Mr. President, is that it is not for men who served in the war. The evil tendency is to create a class of pensions by this bill, and by other bills that are presented from time to time, that does not regard service in the war. Then you are coming to old-age pensions. What objection are you going to make to it? Are you going to say they have not served in any war? They will turn upon you and say, "Neither did these people ever serve in any war."

Mr. Gardner, from Michigan, who served in the House of Representatives so long, was a soldier in the Civil War. Here is what he said about the late enlistments in this war—and he is a distinguished gentleman from the State of the Senator who proposes this bill:

There were over 800,000 men that were called into service by Mr. Lincoln for nine months and less—

Bear in mind there were 2,200,000 altogether—

There were over 600,000, as I recall—I could refer to it specifically, if necessary—that served three months or less—90-day militia. When the forts that girdled this city during the Civil War had the three-year men in them and the battles were going on at the front and the regiments were being decimated and the commands greatly reduced, what did Mr. Lincoln do? He called out the 90-day or 100-day militia. They were hurried to the front and manned these forts.

Senator DU PONT. Were not many of those men regularly mustered into the service as Volunteers?

Mr. GARDNER. I only speak of those that were mustered into the 90-day service.

Senator DU PONT. They were not militia; they were Volunteers.

Mr. GARDNER. If you will pardon me, I copied the very words in the call, which were "State militia"; but they were serving in the United States Army. They were regularly mustered. If I am wrong, I should like to be corrected.

Senator DU PONT. There were some Volunteers called—not militia at all—for less than three years. In the State of Delaware, for instance, there were two regiments that were called for nine months, and regularly mustered in, that were not members of the State militia. There did not then exist in our State any State militia. It is true that those people did not serve the nine months; but why? Because they were mustered out by order of the Government before the expiration of that time. But they were not militia in any sense.

Mr. GARDNER. That is likewise true of troops from other States; but I speak of the word "militia" as it enters into the call. Ohio had thirty-odd thousand of the 100-day militia in one call. Those were not the "Squirrel Hunters."

I pause here to say, Mr. President, that the Squirrel Hunters have not been overlooked. By the way, there is a bill introduced, pending now before the same committee, to pension the Squirrel Hunters, of Ohio.

They are not on the pension rolls—

Says Mr. Gardner. But I predict they will be.

They are not on the pension rolls. They are not eligible for the pension rolls—not yet.

I do not know that they ever will be. But they were the men who were mustered into the United States service and served 100 days.

I say to you what I know to be a fact. While many of these men fought, and fought well, the great body of them simply went to man the forts, to release the three-year men that went to the front and did the shooting. That is a fact, gentlemen. Lots of these men never got the polish off their shoes. It is no disparagement to them. They did all they were called upon to do. They wore paper collars and ate soft bread. It was no fault of theirs. Ohio had how many regiments of that kind, Col. McElroy, that never lost a man?

Mr. MCELROY—

Col. McElroy was sitting in the committee room—

Mr. MCELROY. Oh, quite a number of them never saw any fighting and never heard a cannon.

Mr. GARDNER. Many of them never fired a gun.

I say to you, gentlemen—and I am willing to defend this proposition before any Grand Army gathering in the country—that the man who went to war and served only 90 days, and received no permanent disability from wounds or anything resulting from his service, is not entitled to rank with the man who served two, three, or four years at the front.

That was the language of a man who served four years in the war.

Now, this bill provides that if a man became an officer in his six months' service or at the end of it, he is entitled to have this unusual privilege extended to him and be paid as if he were a retired Regular Army officer.

Mr. President, that will inevitably lead to pensions in civil life. Let me read to you a bill that was introduced into this Congress:

Be it enacted, etc., That immediately after the passage of this act an Army corps shall be organized in the Department of War, under the direction of the President, to be known as the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army.

I have the bill here. I am reading it out of the book because the print is better.

SEC. 2. The Old Age Home Guard of the United States shall be composed of persons not less than 65 years of age.

SEC. 3. Any person who is 65 years of age or upward, and who has been a resident of the United States 25 consecutive years and a citizen of the United States 15 consecutive years next preceding the date of application, and who is not possessed of property amounting to more than $1,500 in value, free of all incumbrances, or an income of more than $240 per annum, and who has not sequestered or otherwise disposed of property or income for the purpose of qualifying for enlistment as hereinafter provided, may make application, in writing, to the Secretary of War for enlistment in the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army—

If they ever get in they ought to have the officers whom this bill provides for to command them—

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to enlist and enroll such applicant, for the term of his or her life, as a private in the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army without regard to the physical condition of the applicant, provided that persons related as husband and wife shall not both be eligible for enlistment, enrollment, and service therein at the same time, and in case of dispute as to whether husband or wife shall be enlisted and enrolled, as herein provided, the question shall be decided by the Secretary of War—

It will take a man with about his unlimited authority to pass upon it—

by and with the approval of the President.

SEC. 4. The pay of a private in the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army shall be $120 per annum, to be paid in quarterly installments, as pensions are now by law paid, provided, that $10 per annum shall be deducted from the pay of each private, and retained in the Treasury of the United States, for every $100 worth of property in excess of $300, and for every $10 per annum income in excess of $120 possessed by such private.

SEC. 5. Arms and ammunition shall be furnished to privates in the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army at the discretion of the Secretary of War, but no sustenance shall be furnished to them except the pay herein provided.

SEC. 6. No private, or applicant for enlistment as private, shall be required to leave his or her home for the purpose of enlistment, enrollment, or service in the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army, nor shall they be required to assemble, drill, or perform any other maneuvers, nor be subject to any of the regulations of the United States Army, except as herein provided.

SEC. 7. Privates in the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army shall be required to report annually, in writing, to the Secretary of War, on blanks furnished by him for the purpose, the conditions of military and patriotic sentiment in the community where such private lives, but no private shall be discharged, disciplined, or otherwise punished for failure to make such report.

SEC. 8. The number of persons enlisted in the Old Age Home Guard of the United States Army shall be in addition to the number of officers and privates now required by law in the United States Army.

Mr. President, a bill of that kind should arouse our curiosity. What was the purpose of it? Senators smile at a bill which would require the Secretary of War to decide as to whether a husband or wife, both of them over 65 years of age, should be admitted into the Army. What Army is this bill speaking about? It is speaking about an Army that would have just as much right to be supported out of the tax funds of the people of this country as many of those now upon the pension roll.

This bill was introduced in Congress by the present Secretary of Labor. It was introduced into the House of Representatives and has been since then continuously in every Congress. How did he happen to introduce it, and why is it introduced? Because, Mr. President, the American Federation of Labor at their meeting in Denver, Colo., in their annual convention, decided that they had as much right to be supported by the people who have grown old making an honest living and had as much right to be supported by this Government as men who never smelled gunpowder in any war. A committee was appointed by the convention of the American Federation of Labor at Denver to draft a bill that would be constitutional, and this is the bill reported at the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor. Senators say it will never pass. I question no man's motives, but, Mr. President, the power of organization behind legislation of this kind is felt even in the Congress of the United States. When I see 44,000 rural carriers make Congress turn right about face and grant them an increase of pay demanded because of the power of their organization I ask, How long before you will be voting for old-age pension bills? That is what that is.

Here is a book entitled "Old Age Dependency in the United States." It shows that the pension roll to-day is not made up of soldiers. You know they do not have to go far, they do not have much trouble to prove it; it is apparent at once that more than half of the rolls are made up not by men who ever enlisted in any war but by their dependents, widows, sisters, uncles, aunts, children.

Then the Spanish-American War soldiers, seeing the tendency, come to Congress to have their widows provided for. What widows? Widows of volunteer officers and privates who came from private life and fought our battles in Cuba, lost their lives, had their health injured? It would be right to pay them; but they were not there. They were not in Cuba. The Regular Army fought that battle with the assistance of Col. Roosevelt and the Rough Riders, or they assisted him, I do not know which. [Laughter.]

Yet the terms of that bill will command the same vote as this bill, because all bills for pension legislation get the same vote. They will get that vote, to do what? To put the widow of every man in that war on the pension roll.

So it can not be because of any injury he received in his enlistment, because of any injury to his health, but because he enlisted at the call of the country. That is all. He may come to this city to-day under the terms of the bill now on the calendar on his wedding trip and sit up in the gallery here for a few minutes, as so many of them do, and go down on his way back to town and get run over by a street car, and his widow gets a pension.

Do you think you can keep up that kind of legislation and turn a deaf ear to old-age pensions? If you are going to be powerful enough to resist the united demand of nearly 2,000,000 people, why do you not resist the organized demand of less than 50,000 of them to-day?

Mr. President, it has never seemed to me that we could stop. I can not see the distinction between a widow whose husband enlisted in the Spanish-American War and served his enlistment at Chickamauga and the widow of any other worthy dependent citizen of the country. I say there is none, and when you go that far then you can not, it seems to me, resist taking the next step.

Now, what else is there? Civil pensions. Employees of the Government are to be pensioned. They are demanding it now. Bills are on the calendar to pension them. I never could understand why a young man who enters into the Government service and gets more money for less work than the young man across the street working for a private employer should have a civil pension. The latter has to look out for himself for old age ahead of him, at less pay, with fewer holidays, harder work, longer hours, and then when he gets old he is discharged. Are you going to pension him? I am opposed to it. I think we must devise some scheme to get rid of them, to let them out of the service.

Let us see, Mr. President, if I have overstated anything. The author of this book is Mr. Squier. In chapter 7 he says:

The system of pensions established by the enactment of Congress for the relief of disabled and aged men retired from the Army and Navy is familiar to all intelligent citizens of the United States, because it is of such long standing and so universal in its operation.

Few people realize the immensity of the sums paid out by the United States Government, since its foundation, in pensions to soldiers, sailors, and marines, their widows, minor children, and dependent relatives. The annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, contains the aggregates.

They amount to $4,230,381,730.16. It is now between five thousand and six thousand million dollars. This Government has paid out more for pensions, and it is now paying out more every year for pensions, than the combined expenditures of all the military powers of Europe, with Japan added.

It must be remarked that the acknowledgment of the obligation of the Nation to provide for its worn-out, disabled, and aged defenders has been increasingly apparent in the past few years.

Then the author illustrates that. He says:

This fact is significant if there is borne in mind this thought: That the great majority of all the United States pensioners are above 65 years of age. The people of the United States, therefore, in the administration of the National Government's pension system, are perhaps unconsciously, but none the less truly, recognizing the moral obligations of the State to make provision for the relief of its aged dependent citizens.

There it is; there is the statement that you have already done it; therefore, it is but carrying out a part of the same plan to give to anybody 65 years old the largess of the Government.

That is why I am opposed to this legislation, Mr. President. I do not believe in it. I believe we are abandoning the old policy of asking people to live under just laws and to make their own living, and that we are entering upon a plan of saying to everybody that will not do so that this Government will be so paternal as that it will do it for him. It is going to be a different sort of Government. Heretofore we have admired the man who, in spite of obstacles, worked his own way, fought his own battles without the aid of the Government and by himself, making of himself an independent citizen.

I have no sort of feeling of antipathy against any officer or soldier who served in the Civil War. If I represented them, or could assume to do so, I would never introduce any such bill as this. It is not fair to them. The idea of combining together in an organization to see if we can not get some money out of the State treasury or out of the Federal Treasury is not commendable in anybody, and I am afraid there is too much of that.

I heard one Senator, who has gone away from here now, but who had a very honorable career in this body, and who had served as governor in a Southern State, say that his State refused to grant pensions, except in very deserving cases, to those who had served in the Confederate Army, and they got along all right. Those old fellows said they did not need anybody's help. Finally some politician came along proposing to give all of them a living without any work. He got them on the roll and then they quit trying to do anything. They said, "The State is going to take care of us; the Government is going to take care of its soldiers; and we do not have to work."

The private soldier from Wisconsin whose letter was read here, Mr. President, truly said that these officers did no harder work in the war than did the privates; that when it was over they went back home and they enjoyed a superior distinction to the privates; that they filled the offices in the county, in the State, and in the Nation.

Now comes the proposition to commercialize the whole thing and to put it upon a question of "How much?" "The jingle of the coin" appeals to them. The average pay of every officer in the Civil War upon the Union side has been $2,500 and more. Now we are asked to take them out of the usual class that they have always been in, along with the privates and to retire every volunteer officer as if he had devoted his life to the profession of arms and to treat him just exactly as we treat a man in the Regular Army. They were appointed officers and commissioned by the governors of their States. They enjoyed that honor; they have had the distinction since. Even in this body to-day there are four Confederates and four or five Union soldiers—most of them officers, I presume, during the war.

This proposed legislation has not been placed, it seems, upon the proper basis. For instance, here is a petition by the Illinois and Chicago Volunteer retired-list committee. The committees have worked this up and not the men. Here is a committee now. One of the members connected with it in some way happens to live in my city, and he sends this to me to enlist my support of this bill:

At a meeting of the Volunteer Officers' Association of the Civil War held in Memorial Hall, Chicago, on Saturday, the 21st day of February, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the surviving volunteer officers of the Union Army have patiently, loyally, and anxiously waited for many years for the enactment of a law that shall give to them what under precedents, promises, and laws they believe is justly their due, and to restore them the rank and emoluments of which they have been improperly deprived; and

"Whereas the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on February 13 passed out Senate bill 392"—

Which is this bill—

"with the recommendation that it pass with certain amendments, which amendments we deem objectionable and unjust: Be it

"Resolved, That we are opposed to the amendment disqualifying officers from participation in the proposed legislation because of ability to earn an income or because of frugality in having secured an income even with their wives' help of $2,400 per annum."

Let me ask the Senator from Michigan, who is giving me his very close attention, if that provision is still in the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Florida seems to be conserving his energy for some reason or other, so that he does not speak very loudly, and it is therefore impossible for me to follow him.

Mr. BRYAN. That is not the trouble, Mr. President. The Senator from Michigan was otherwise engaged just at the time. I desire now to ask him has the committee corrected that error of denying the benefit of participation in this legislation if a man has an income of $2,400 a year?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That has been eliminated from the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. They have asked that that be done, and I now learn the committee has done it. This resolution continues:

Such an exemption will give the color of charity or benevolence to this act, for which the officers have not asked, and which they do not desire from Congress.

They say they have a right to it, but they do not want any charity or benevolence bestowed by this Government; that they have a right to the retired pay of Regular Army officers, or a part of it. There is where they plant themselves. I say they have no such right. So the Senator from Michigan has been mistaken when he has appealed for this act of justice, this act of benevolence to these people, for they say they have a right to have it.

This resolution continues:

We most respectfully pray for what we believe is properly our due, and that the surviving officers of the Volunteer Army and Navy shall be treated with the same consideration that has been so freely accorded to the other creditors of the Government during the years of the Civil War, and with the same consideration which Congress, 40 years after the close of the Revolutionary War, gave to the officers of that war. We have waited for this act of appreciation and justice for 50 years.

They look back to some precedent in the Revolutionary War. So every time you pass a bill to add somebody else to the pension roll, it will be cited as a precedent hereafter.

The whole of the pensions paid on account of the Revolutionary War did not amount to as much as an annual bill for the survivors of the Civil War 50 years after that war is over. But I grant you that there was legislation that should not have been passed then. I think it is a strange thing, yet it is true, that in 1911 or 1912 there was still a pensioner of the Revolutionary War upon the pension rolls of this Government.

The committee which drafted these resolutions asked for some other things to be done, but they are not so important, and I presume they have been attended to.

I want to read a litle moré from the book from which I have already quoted. The author says:

The solution of the old-age dependency problem in the United States will not soon be reached by any plan thus far put forward by the annuity class of economists. Indeed, in the face of such points as are marshaled against it, the annuity proposition, predicated upon any thrift scheme, may be considered a lost cause in this country; especially is this true when the advantages urged by the pension class, for the solution they offer, are carefully weighed.

In its essence the old-age pension scheme is nothing more or less than the Nation's acknowledgment of the debt which the present generation owes the survivors of the past generation.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who is here present, worries occasionally about debts and appropriations for things tangible, for salaries, for the Army, and for the Navy, but here is a new kind of debt that is claimed against this Government.

I contrast with that declaration the statement of Mr. Gardner, of Michigan, when he was before our committee, who said that no matter whether the McCumber bill should be passed or not, even if no bill were passed, no soldier of the Civil War could ever to-day or on any to-morrow charge this Government with being ungrateful to its soldiers. I contrast that spirit with the spirit of "you owe me this money, and I want you to pay it to me"; and I say that if we yield to this bill and to other bills of like character we can not resist the old-age claimants for pensions or the claims of those in the civil service of the Government.

Let us glance at some of the measures which are pending. Here is a bill "to pension remarried widows." That is one. Here is another "granting pensions to members of the military organization of 1862, known as the 'Squirrel Hunters.'" Here is a bill, "to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, to the officers and enlisted men of all State militia and other State organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil War for the period of 90 days or more, and providing for their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and for other purposes."

That is not the old-age home guard, but that is the home guard that it is proposed to pension.

Here is another bill, introduced by no less a personage than the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], "granting a pension to teamsters, bridge builders, and railroad repairers who were in the service of the United States during the Civil War."

Here is a bill "in aid of pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the War of the Rebellion and the War with Spain." I read from that bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in construing the pension laws all soldiers and sailors shall be considered as physically sound at the time of their enlistment, and the enlistment or enrollment of such soldier or sailor shall be sufficient proof of the fact that he was physically sound at such time.

They are to be considered sound whether that was the fact or not. It is like these bills to—well, I forget what they call them; but, anyhow, they are to straighten out the crooked records of deserters and put them on the pension list——

Mr. THOMAS. Bills to correct military records.

Mr. BRYAN. And which provide they shall hereafter be assumed, and that nobody shall deny the assumption upon the penalty of death, that such and such a man did not desert, and that he is entitled to a pension.

Here is the old-age pension bill [exhibiting], which I read to the Senate, introduced in the Sixty-third Congress.

Here is another, entitled "A bill to provide old-age and cripples' pensions," by Mr. DOOLITTLE.

Let me pause here to say, Mr. President, that there is no need of any legislation to benefit anybody who ever served in any war who suffered by reason of that service.

The bills that have been coming in here for the last 25 years have been designed to place upon the pension roll men who could not get there because of any injuries received in service. I am not against all pensions, but I think they ought to be based upon meritorious service and upon injury and upon need. I believe that the citizen of this Republic owes a duty to his Government no less than the duty the Government owes to the citizen; and I think we are engaged in a poor business when we undertake to commercialize the service of the men who went to war in time of peril. There are always men ready to go into any war for their country when their country is attacked, whether it is right or wrong. I think it would be a poor sort of government that would not take care of them and their dependents in case of injury or death; but I can not understand what higher right a man who simply enlisted and received no injury has to be supported out of the taxes of the people of this country than any other deserving citizen.

Take the illustration I gave a while ago, Mr. President, of a veteran of the Spanish-American War. He is here to-day with his bride and unfortunately is killed or otherwise loses his life. Now, I ask you, How is it that yesterday she had no claim upon the Government, but to-day she has? It is simply for the reason that she married him; that is all. And yet our legislation is full of instances of that kind.

Here [exhibiting] is another bill to provide for old-age pensions, and here is a bill "to pension widow and minor children of any soldier who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection" and the Boxer troubles. That bill is upon the calendar and its passage is being urged.

I was criticized at the last session of the Senate because I would not agree to a vote on that bill and because I argued against it. The Senator from Colorado also argued against it. Senators say a majority of the Senate want to pass these bills, and why not let them do so? Why, Mr. President, they can pass these bills and they will pass them when they come to a vote; but I have made up my mind that I am going to object and to oppose this character of legislation, and I have no apology to offer to anybody for doing so.

Here is a bill entitled "A bill to grant pensions to certain persons for certain injuries sustained in dangerous employment in the United States"—not in any work done for the United States, but to give pensions to men who in private employment are unfortunate and are hurt. What do they base that on? Upon the theory that they are a part of the great industrial army; they are a part of the citizens of this Republic who do not ask favors at the hands of the Government; but they see this lavish and unjust appropriation of public funds, and they feel that they, too, have a right to a share of them.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that the action of Congress at the last session in placing $400,000,000, in round numbers—a little short of that—upon the backs of the American people for the Army and Navy in a time of profound peace might not also serve as an incentive to others to think that possibly they ought to get some pecuniary benefit from this organization which we call the Government?

Mr. BRYAN. I rather think the Senator is right, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. They will all take it. They would not apply for it; their pride would not let them apply for it in the first place, but if it is provided by law they will take it. There is a sort of feeling that it is all right to get anything one can get out of the Government. If a private individual would offer it to them, they would say, "No"; but, unfortunately, it is true that too many people think that the money in the Treasury, especially in the Federal Treasury, ought to be taken whenever it can be gotten hold of. They feel that if the Government erects a public building in their town, it is a gift to them. They do not realize, I believe, that they help pay the taxes of the country because of the indirect manner in which they are levied.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon another interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in one respect, at least, I think, without intending it to be so, his criticism has been altogether too far-reaching and too sweeping. I refer to his criticism of the bills introduced to secure pensions for men who are unable under existing laws to establish their claim to a pension by their hospital record in connection with their service. The Union Army in the Civil War was made up of a great many young men—and I have no doubt whatever that, if we had the records of those who were engaged on the other side, we would find the same fact—in the prime and strength of their youth, thousands of whom would have been perfectly entitled to have gone to hospitals, but kept out of the hospitals, and consequently have no hospital record to establish their claims. I know from my own experience in helping to get pensions for some of these men, who I believed were deserving, that many of them were justly entitled to pensions, but because of their pride and manhood at the time they kept out of hospitals when they would have been perfectly justified in having gone to them.

Then I want to call the Senator's attention to another thing that I think ought to modify a somewhat sweeping suggestion of his with reference to this charge of desertion.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have not come to that part of my speech yet, dealing with deserters.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, the Senator was on it a moment ago.

Mr. BRYAN. I just referred to it in passing, but I am willing to have the Senator make his point clear. I should like to understand just exactly what it is.

Mr. CLAPP. It is this—that because a young man did not always report at a time when his sole purpose was to serve, and not to make a record, that is no sign to-day that he should be classed indiscriminately as a deserter.

Mr. BRYAN. But does not the Senator think all of that could have been found out in a shorter time than 50 years? What were they doing all this time?

Mr. CLAPP. No; I do not. I say no for this reason: They came home from that war. I have had cases where I know the facts. They got through fighting, and they started home. They did not care to be mustered out. The fighting was over. They were young. They were not thinking of pensions. But, in my judgment, no man can go through three or fours years of military service without more or less weakening that something which we call constitution. The years passed by, and finally old age comes to that man, and he is absolutely justified, if he can establish his claim, in doing away with what was a mere technical record, and a record that at the time he never dreamed he was making against himself. He is justified in doing away with that, so far as that may be a criticism or an embarrassment to his family and posterity; and the fact that he did not think of doing that in the prime of his manhood is no reason why it should be insisted that because he did not do it then he ought not to do it in his latter years.

I think that both those kinds of cases should modify the criticism that the Senator made a few moments ago, when he was dealing with this general class of bills to relieve men from the charge of desertion and to enable them to secure pensions where they were unable to secure them by the hospital records.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, of course the Senator is correct in the statement that sometimes, because of misunderstanding or because of sickness, the charge of desertion was entered up when it should not have been. But that was not true in all cases.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, not in all cases, of course.

Mr. BRYAN. There were 125,000 desertions on the Union side in the Civil War. The cases to which the Senator refers were the exceptions, and the general legislation was very generous to those. If they had served to May 1, 1865, no charge of desertion would be made against them, although they did not show up to be mustered out; or if they had deserted earlier than that, and within a reasonable time voluntarily returned to the service, even after the war was over.

There is a little more I want to read from this book. Its author proceeds:

> Any man or woman who has lived for 65 or 70 years, doing the best possible under all circumstances, even making due allowance for mental, physical, or moral frailties, has contributed by life and work to the making of the world a better place to live in. Every civilized community feels the obligation to provide such an one with shelter, food, and raiment; that is to say, threescore years or more of life and service are as so many duebills which the superannuated person presents to the working generation and which that generation can not deny or repudiate. What the pension class of economists urge is that the duebills of the old shall not be paid grudgingly and by a charity that suggests a beggarly condition, but in a manner that preserves and exalts that dignity of the old, sustains his self-respect, and enables him to move among the younger generation as a patriarch honored for having lived and served.
> The points to which attention may be called in the solution of the problem offered by the pension class may be summarized as follows:
> First. It is manifestly no greater burden on the community as a whole to operate a Government pension system than to support the aged dependents on the present system of public and private charity—

And sometimes I have felt that the pension roll was used for that purpose; that there are people—I submit it to the Senator from Minnesota—who get upon the pension rolls by private pensions whose claims appeal to the sympathy of any man; but if there is any right, it is a mere technical right to get upon the roll. It is not even a technical right, because if it were they would not have to come to the committee. Senators and Members of the House are human. They hear these pitiful stories asking a raise from ten to twenty or twenty-five dollars or thirty dollars a month for "this poor old decrepit widow," and she gets it. It is easy to be generous with other people's money; yet in the aggregate that amounts to considerable. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] here to-day, discussing another bill not connected with pensions, pointed out that all but two bills introduced in the House of Representatives on the first day of this session were private pension bills. So we are making a sort of a poorhouse contribution by the Federal Government for duties that ought to be performed by the cities and the counties where the people live. It is nothing but a claim by the unfortunate. It ought to be treated so. These claims ought to be paid by the communities in which the people live out of the general tax money.

> Second. The community as a whole owes the disabled soldiers of the Nation's industrial army as tender consideration and ample rewards for service as are recognized to be due the veterans of the Nation's military service.
> Third. A pension scheme established by Congress and operated by the National Government would encourage the mobility of labor, destroy the spirit of servility and fear that now so often dominates the wage earner, and would enhance the stability and beauty of home life, in that the aged veteran would be welcome to a place of counsel and honor in the family circle, now too often denied him because his support is too heavy a draft on the scant earnings of his children and grandchildren.

We are going to take him away from his children and his grandchildren, who are willing to take care of him, whose love and affection for him ought to lead them to take care of him, and place the burden of his support on the Federal Government. That is where all this legislation is leading.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. While, of course, that phase of the pension matter is not before the Senate, yet, if the man's children will not take care of him, the fact that he has children who ought to take care of him would not lessen his claim upon the support of the public.

Mr. BRYAN. That is true.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, while this is not directly involved in this argument, I submit to the Senator—I am not, however, submitting a view that I have yet reached myself—what difference it makes, if the amount is the same, what treasury the money comes out of? There is no such thing as the Government having any money. It is simply trustee for the people's money, whether it is the Federal Government or the government of the State, city, county, or township; and if the amount is the same, it has sometimes occurred to me that there was no more equitable distribution of the burden, if it is justified at all, than out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, I have the other view, Mr. President. It seems to me that in cases such as the Senator has mentioned the best way is to let those people be taken care of in the counties where they live, where the officials can find out that their case is meritorious and understand their needs better than they can be understood by the representatives of the Federal Government, unless we are to have an army of people to carry out these Federal laws. Why, in every one of the nearly 3,000 counties in this country there is that problem. There are five times that many county commissioners, perhaps, who give their attention to it. That is 15,000 men. Would you stop that system and set up another army of 15,000 clerks radiating from this Capital to find out about the poor people in the country?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. It would not require any such army. This Congress last year voted I forget how many millions upon an alleged highway bill. Already we recognize the fact that some localities are less able to pay than others, and it is a question—I simply suggest it—if it is right to spend a dollar of the money of the taxpayer, whether it might not just as well be spent out of the Federal Treasury as anywhere else. It is only a dollar, anyhow.

Mr. BRYAN. I did not vote for that bill. I think the States ought to have taken care of the road question under a plan differing from the plan adopted; but I am afraid the Senator is trying to lead me away from this discussion, although I have no objection to discussing the road proposition with him.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, I was not trying to lead the Senator away. He had left the subject and gone into a sort of philosophical zone of debate that always attracts me, and I was just making these suggestions.

Mr. BRYAN. I am very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. CLAPP. And I drew my inspiration from what the preceding session of Congress had done.

Mr. BRYAN. That is a dangerous source.

Mr. CLAPP. I think so. I quite agree with the Senator on that point.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, we hear—in fact, it is too often so—that everybody is an economist until it comes to something he wants. I heard a very violent speech from the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] at the last session on economy, on how wasteful the Democrats had been in spending the public money, and that is always charged, I suppose, and yet in that total bill are included these enormous sums of money. Two-thirds of the money collected at the customhouses of this country is being paid out now for pensions 50 years after we have had any war at all. Here comes the Senator now with this bill. Nobody knows what it is going to cost. They do not even take the trouble to find out from the Bureau of Pensions what this bill will cost. We passed one here last summer. Somebody said it would cost $8,000,000 or $10,000,000. Nobody knows. We were in such a hurry that we could not find out approximately what it would cost. I saw a criticism in one of the magazines of this country taking Congress to task for that sort of legislation. Where is any report here as to what this bill will cost? We have this man's guess and that man's guess, and none of them have ever heretofore estimated an amount as great as the facts showed the appropriations to meet the demands to be.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to inquire of the Senator if that same magazine criticized Congress for spending a portion of four hundred millions for eight more battleships at a time when a German merchant submarine was defying the greatest navy on earth? Did the magazine attack that expenditure?

Mr. BRYAN. I did not read all the magazine; but what is the Senator's idea about that?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think the magazine did attack that expenditure. I venture that belief.

Mr. BRYAN. No, but what is the Senator's opinion about that appropriation—the Navy and the Army appropriation?

Mr. CLAPP. Why, I think any such vast sum was absolutely unwarranted, and I voted against it.

Mr. BRYAN. I am very glad to have that statement placed in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not cared to interrupt the Senator from Florida, and shall not do so further than to say generally that the statements which he makes in reference to the estimated cost and relative to extravagance do not apply to this bill at all. I have not taken the time of the Senate to discuss this bill, although I should be very glad to do it if any Senator does not understand it; but if a Senator simply wishes to use the time of the Senate to prevent a vote, I do not care to contribute to his purpose.

I wish to state generally, however, that I am opposed to extravagance, whether that extravagance is of Republican or Democratic origin. I regard this measure as a sacred obligation of our Government. I have so regarded it from the beginning—an obligation which has too long been delayed. A majority of this Senate believes it is a sacred obligation. I have voted with the Senator from Florida in the Committee on Claims to pay claims which perhaps the North would object to, as the Senator very well understands, because I have felt that they were valid obligations which the Government owed, and I have been willing to pay such obligations. This bill is the very least the Government owes to a class of patriots which is too rapidly disappearing, and if the Senator from Florida and one or two others will permit us to vote it, the Senate will so decide.

Mr. BRYAN. I am very much obliged to my friend from Michigan, Mr. President, for his interruption. I do not know what license the Senator has to say that I am filibustering against this bill. That is a charge easily made. I assume that I have a right to state my objections to it. Nobody has yet stood up, and nobody will stand up, to show the merits of it, and the Senate does not know anything about it. That is the truth about the whole thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The report on this bill was made by a Democratic Senator, and it seems to show very clearly the merits of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I have read the report on it. It does not show anything. It shows somebody's guess as to about how much it would cost. I have read the report. It makes a guess of less than four millions, but it could be found out. Somebody guessed last summer, when another bill on this subject was passed, that it would cost $10,000,000. It was a pure guess. I venture to say that it will cost twice that much. The Senator from Michigan is mistaken, and assumes a little too much when he undertakes to lecture me for arguing against this bill. The Senator seems to think that when he is ready to vote, a vote ought to be taken. I asked him before I began if he intended to show the merits of this bill, if it had any, and he then said that everybody wanted to vote for it. It would seem to me, from looking around over this Chamber, as if not many people are enough interested in it to be present, either to vote for it or against it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In answer to the last suggestion first, if the Senator will give us an opportunity to do it, there will be sufficient interest. I am not objecting to the Senator's discussing this bill. I am not objecting to any Senator discussing it. If it can not stand upon its merits, it ought to fail. I have never argued anything else. Inasmuch, however, as the Senator has suggested that the criticism I offered was not, perhaps, made in good faith, I should like to ask the Senator now, if he will permit a vote upon this bill after full discussion on both sides? Is the Senator determined to defeat this bill under any conditions or by all means possible, even if it is necessary to occupy the time until the adjournment of Congress, and has he so stated?

Mr. BRYAN. I did not understand that I was under cross-examination.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, I withdraw that question; but I am sorry the Senator brought it up.

Mr. BRYAN. No; the Senator need not withdraw it. I am going to do everything that I think is legitimate to defeat this bill, and all bills of the same kind. I am not going to stand here and filibuster for days, however.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Would the Senator be willing that a day be fixed upon which we shall vote?

Mr. BRYAN. I would not.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Would he be willing that we should vote at the end of a week?

Mr. BRYAN. I think I have stated enough for the Senator to know my position about it. If I see a good chance to beat this bill, I am going to try to do it. I am not going to stand up and filibuster by the day against it. I never have done that. I believe that if Senators would come in and understand just exactly what this bill contains, instead of saying, "Oh, well, it is a pension bill, and when they call the roll I will vote for it," there would be some doubt about its being passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let me suggest to the Senator that it is more than a pension bill. I think he so understands it.

Mr. BRYAN. No; I understand it. That is what it is, Mr. President. It is to increase the pensions of these men from three or four hundred dollars, or, if they are injured, from eight or nine hundred dollars to twelve or eighteen hundred dollars a year. That is what it is. If it were not for the money in it, there would not be any bill pending here. If that is not true, let us strike out any provision to pay them anything and put them without any increase of salary on the retired list of the United States Army. Would that be satisfactory? It is because of the appropriation the bill carries that its passage is desired. The retired volunteer officers are to be put on the retired list for the same purpose. This bill that I read undertook to create an old-age army of the United States. That is what it is. It is for the money in it; and I do not believe they show a case that authorizes Congress to place them above the ordinary soldier in the Civil War.

Mr. President, perhaps the Senator from Michigan can not understand it, but it is not the money involved that is the most important part of this legislation. I think it is a dangerous thing to continue to agitate and to add new classes to these rolls. There is no necessity for it. If any one of these officers was injured, he gets ample pay now to live in comfort. If he was not injured, then what higher claim has he than a private soldier who was injured? Why should the uninjured officer receive five or six times as much as an injured private who saw real service?

The trouble with this whole pension legislation is that you mix up the meritorious classes with the unmeritorious classes. You take the old war widow of a veteran who fought four years in the Civil War and put her on an equality with the widow of some holiday home guardsman. That is the injustice in it. Now you are going to make a special class of these officers upon the pretext that they ought to be treated on an equality, as far as pay is concerned, with an officer in the Regular Army who has to devote a lifetime to service in the Army, and who has no other means of accumulating a competence. Whether that is right or wrong, it does not make this legislation defensible or tolerable, it seems to me, to anybody who is considering justice to the men or to the officers, or, most important of all, to the duties which devolve upon us here.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado proceeds will he allow me to have placed in the RECORD a letter I have received?

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator from Georgia desires the floor I will yield it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not want to do that, but I should like to get a letter into the RECORD at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to have inserted in the RECORD this afternoon the two letters which I send to the desk. I should like to have them read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At present?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the first of the two letters.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, for the purpose of saving the time of the Senate I will ask that the two letters may be printed in the RECORD. I wanted to put into the RECORD the statement I received two years ago to the effect that the probable charge would be nine and one-half million dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letters will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, December 12, 1914.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of the 9th instant, in which you make reference to bill (S. 392) to create a Civil War officers' retired list and ask to be furnished information as follows:

First. A list showing the total number of such officers coming under the classification of the bill.

Second. A list showing the number of such officers now on the pension roll and the amounts they have received or are receiving.

Third. A statement showing the amounts that the first-mentioned list would be entitled to receive under the provisions of the bill.

In reply I beg to inform you that this bureau has no record of officers of the Civil War now surviving who are not pensioners, and the names of those who are in receipt of pension are not borne separately on the pension roll but are entered in alphabetical order with the names of privates and noncommissioned officers. Furthermore, the roll entries do not show length of service in any case, and such information, as essential to determine the benefits intended to be conferred by the bill, may be obtained only by an examination of the War Department report in each claim.

The information you ask is therefore not available and could be obtained—as far as relates to the officers referred to who are now pensioners—only by an examination of nearly one-half million roll entries of Civil War survivors of the several classes and tabulation of the list thus obtained by rank, length of service, rate of pension, etc., from data partly to be secured by reference to the papers in the claims.

A number of estimates have been made for Senators and Members of the House, upon the above and similar bills, on the basis of a tabulation prepared from a list of officers taken from the pension roll in 1908. A copy of the last estimate given Hon. JAMES HAY, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, under date of April 4, 1914, is herewith inclosed.

Very truly, yours,

G. M. SALTZGABER,
Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 4, 1914.

Hon. JAMES HAY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HAY: I am in receipt of a communication from the clerk of your committee, dated the 31st ultimo, submitting by your direction a copy of bill H. R. 1851, to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "The Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," etc., with request for an estimate of the probable annual cost to the Government should it be enacted into law.

Said bill is identical in terms with bill S. 392 as introduced on April 8, 1913, by Mr. TOWNSEND, to whom an estimate thereon was given under date of June 9, 1913, placing the net cost for the first year at $10,283,122. The factors used in ascertaining this amount were 16,472 officers then surviving—as determined by deduction on account of percentages of loss by death from a number theretofore found by actual count to be living and borne on the pension rolls, and a net annual cost per officer of $624.27+ after deduction of average annual pension of $240.

A deduction of 8 per cent from the above number of officers on account of deaths since said estimate was made leaves a total of 15,154 now surviving, and deduction of the higher average annual pension per officer of $256.64 gives the net cost per officer as $607.63+. On this basis it is estimated that the cost to the Government for the first year, should the bill be enacted into law in its present form, would be about nine and one-fourth millions of dollars—the exact amount with the factors used being $9,208,159.89.

Cordially, yours,

LEWIS C. LAYLIN,
Assistant Secretary.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 16, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 15, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Let Thy blessing, O God our Heavenly Father, descend upon us to quicken our activities, strengthen our good resolutions, and further our earnest endeavors, that the issues of our earthly existence may add to the sum of human happiness, and thus leave the world a little better that we have lived and wrought. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18542, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SISSON moves to strike out, at the bottom of page 59, the following paragraph:

"Cincinnati, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,250; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $1,800; vault clerk, $1,600; clerks—2 at $1,300 each, 4 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each; clerk and stenographer, $1,000; chief watchman, $840; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $24,830."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, the pending motion by Mr. SISSON is to strike out the paragraph at the bottom of page 59; in other words, to abolish the Subtreasury at Cincinnati.

The act of Congress approved May 10 last provided, among other things, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session which of the Subtreasuries, if any, should be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued, the reasons in full for such continuance; also if any or all of said Subtreasuries may be discontinued, what legislation will be necessary in order to transfer their duties and functions to some other branch of the public service or to the Federal reserve banks.

Now, every Member is familiar with the new legislation which Congress has recently enacted, very greatly increasing the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury; that in the multitude of affairs it is no wonder he has not been able to report by the very first day of the session. Any time within the next month would be a reasonable compliance.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] in March last, during debate on the legislative bill, made this statement:

The Treasury officials have been giving some attention to the question of whether or not the duties of these Subtreasuries can be transferred or devolved upon the Federal reserve banks, at least to a certain extent. But the gentleman is no doubt aware of the fact that in order to do this it would be necessary to pass some legislation and make provision for some of the duties now performed by the Subtreasuries. While most of the members of the committee are in accord with the idea of the gentleman from Illinois, that there might be an elimination of much, if not all, of the work done by these Independent Treasuries, we were unwilling to arbitrarily cut off all the appropriations until there had been some consideration given to the question of what particular agency was to perform the service now performed by them, and proper legislation passed in order to make it possible to transfer the duties.

Cincinnati is not a Federal reserve city, but the Subtreasury there is of supreme importance to the business interests of eight or nine adjoining States.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman state the public functions that the Subtreasury at Cincinnati performs?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. The operations of Subtreasuries consist of the following transactions:

First. Receiving from United States depository banks excess deposits of internal revenue, income tax, and customs duties.

Second. Receiving deposits for interest on Government funds and postal-savings funds that are held by banks.

Third. Receiving deposits of money-order funds, direct and indirect.

Fourth. Receiving deposits of lawful moneys from Federal reserve banks and all national banks for credit of their 5 per cent redemption fund.

Fifth. Receiving from postmasters daily deposits of surplus postal funds, and disbursing the same in payment of checks issued to postal employees, Rural Free Delivery carriers, and for transportation of mails.

Sixth. Receiving deposits belonging to disbursing officers, also their unexpended balances at the end of each fiscal year, or whenever their services are terminated.

Seventh. Receiving funds deposited for telegraphic transfer to and payment at some other Subtreasury city for use of individuals and banks to relieve emergencies. Notable example: Chicago fire, Boston fire, Baltimore fire, San Francisco earthquake and fire, 1913 floods in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, and at the breaking out of the great European war in August, 1914.

Eighth. Acceptance of gold coins for redemption and exchange; also, purchase of lightweight and uncurrent gold coins.

Ninth. Acceptance of standard silver dollars for exchange and redemption.

Tenth. Acceptance of subsidiary silver coins for redemption and exchange.

Eleventh. Acceptance of minor coins for redemption and exchange.

Twelfth. Acceptance of United States notes for redemption and exchange.

Thirteenth. Acceptance of Treasury notes for redemption and exchange.

Fourteenth. Acceptance of gold and silver certificates for redemption and exchange.

Fifteenth. Counting and canceling unfit currency, and shipping same to Washington by registered mail.

Sixteenth. Issuance of $10,000 gold certificates, payable to order, when requested upon deposit of a like amount of gold coin, a very valuable service and much used.

Seventeenth. Exchange of various kinds of money for other kinds and denominations that the banks, stores, shops, and the public in general may require. This is a valuable service to the public, as the Subtreasury is the only sure place to obtain such moneys.

Notwithstanding the changes in financial policy which have increased the number of United States depositories for Government funds, the receipts of the Cincinnati Subtreasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, were $92,614,073.30, and the disbursements, $90,433,926.31; total volume of business, $182,447,999.61. This business was transacted with 2,105 banks in 1,076 cities and towns, as follows:

States.	Number of cities and towns.	Number of banks.
Ohio	549	1,023
Indiana	169	315
Kentucky	239	413
Tennessee	60	160
West Virginia	21	103
Alabama	17	33
Georgia	11	20
Virginia	5	16
Illinois	3	9
Pennsylvania	2	13
Total	1,076	2,105

SERVICES.

Among the most important services rendered by the Subtreasury are those connected with—

First. Receipts and disbursements of gold, silver, and minor coin.

Second. Receipts and disbursements of currency.

Third. The transfer of funds.

Fourth. The 5 per cent redemption fund.

Fifth. Redemption and exchanges.

1. Coin receipts and shipments during the fiscal year 1915–16 were as follows:

Months.	Receipts.	Shipments.	Total.
July	$550,052	$342,425	$892,477
August	421,186	311,575	732,761
September	423,694	360,520	784,214
October	344,593	330,602	675,195
November	413,184	398,625	811,809
December	444,989	417,280	862,269
January	681,827	95,165	776,992
February	427,181	181,675	608,856
March	409,402	508,760	918,162
April	444,755	315,099	759,854
May	403,013	518,670	921,683
June	412,577	443,409	855,986

2. Currency receipts and shipments for the year each totaled $1,623,565.

3. TRANSFER OF FUNDS.

Funds were transferred to the Subtreasury in 1915–16, as follows:

July	$758,430
August	402,508
September	537,147
October	808,711
November	945,276
December	1,023,637
January	1,797,187
February	727,105
March	824,063
April	1,401,411
May	1,536,813
June	1,965,043
Total	12,727,331

The principal points from which these transfers were received are:

Ohio: Cincinnati, Chillicothe, Coshocton, and Wilmington.
Indiana: Terre Haute and New Albany.
Virginia: Staunton and Richmond.
Alabama: Birmingham.
Kentucky: Louisville, Maysville, Somerset, Lawrenceburg, and Cattlettsburg.
Tennessee: Chattanooga.
West Virginia: Charleston.
Georgia: Rome.

4. FIVE PER CENT REDEMPTION FUND.

The Subtreasury received the following deposits from Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, and Alabama for credit to the 5 per cent redemption fund:

July	$629,382
August	582,115
September	450,667
October	530,260
November	644,634
December	573,793
January	973,765
February	895,983
March	673,183
April	931,695
May	1,521,377
June	926,930
Total	9,333,784

5. REDEMPTIONS.

Currency	$11,265,660
Gold and silver coin	565,424
Minor coin	4,811,234
Exchanges	12,119,910
Unfit currency shipped to Washington	34,921,000
Gold shipped to New York Subtreasury	2,400,000
Telegraphic transfers to local banks	2,409,400

The removal or discontinuance of the Subtreasury at Cincinnati would be a distinct loss to Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Alabama, and Georgia.

Most of the banks in these States are directly or indirectly benefited by the Cincinnati Subtreasury. Banks within a radius of 300 miles from the city receive weekly shipments of coin and currency from this Subtreasury, to meet the demands for ready money of the kinds and denominations most needed.

The abandonment of this Subtreasury, which is located almost at the center of population, would be a burden placed upon the great business, agricultural, commercial, mining, and manufacturing interests of three northern and six southern States. These nine States can be served most advantageously from Cincinnati. The cotton interests, the tobacco interests, all crop movements, all the coal and mining interests of Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia depend upon Cincinnati banks and the inexhaustible supply of moneys in the Cincinnati Subtreasury to carry them through all seasons and other active periods, and to oblige these States to transact business elsewhere would work a hardship to all their business interests by reason of the greater distances, causing loss of time, delays, and added expense.

The maintenance of the Subtreasury at Cincinnati costs about $25,000 a year. There is no other branch of the Government service that directly and indirectly serves so large a territory at so small a cost as the Cincinnati Subtreasury. Its discontinuance for the sake of saving $25,000 would be classed by the public as false economy, and rightly so.

To hand over the millions of trust funds, gold reserve fund, 5 per cent redemption fund, to any class of banks, without interest and without security, would be putting the stamp of approval on the long-worked scheme of certain big interests and their kindred alliances, which have been markedly diligent in divers ways to take away from the Government and its control its Independent Treasury, which has proved by its 70 years of existence to be the safest custodian of the Government funds.

No steps should be taken which would make it easier for those who wish to divorce the Government from control of its finances to accomplish their purpose.

The Subtreasuries perform valuable functions at very slight expense. They are great conveniences to the localities that they serve. Most of their functions can not be performed by the Federal reserve banks.

They are convenient and safe depositories for the gold coins and standard silver dollars that are held by the Government to secure its gold and silver certificates.

The Government should have its gold in different and widely separate parts of the country, so that it may be ready for use in case of disasters and emergencies and under its immediate control.

In case of war the safest places are those far removed from the borders or the sea.

The business of the Cincinnati Subtreasury has increased since the establishment of the Federal Reserve System, and its usefulness to the large territory it serves yearly becomes greater, and it is ideally located to serve this territory.

If the Subtreasuries did not exist, it would be a statesmanlike act to establish them.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DAVIS of Texas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 1788. An act for the relief of Thomas M. Jones.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10384) entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," and had asked for a conference with the House of Representatives on said bill and amendments thereto, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, unless there has been a substantial change of sentiment, as I hope there has, I realize the practical futility of appealing to the judgment and logic of this committee when I remember that logic and judgment yesterday afternoon on this proposition were conspicuous by their absence. I must, however, take this opportunity to say a word in supplement to the remarks of my colleague. The two reasons most prominently urged by the proponent of this amendment to abolish the Subtreasuries in Boston and Baltimore are absent in the case of Cincinnati. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] laid special stress on the fact that the balance at the Baltimore Subtreasury was very small—sixteen millions, I believe—and that Baltimore was within one hour of Washington. He urged these as the principal reasons for the abolition of the Subtreasury in Baltimore. In the case of Boston, while the balance was large, he stated that the clearing house had been abolished, and that Boston had a regional bank. As I say, in the case of Cincinnati both of these things are absent. The balance in the Subtreasury at Cincinnati is more than twice as large as Baltimore's. We are far distant from Washington, and we have no regional bank.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state to my good friend from Ohio that it was the chairman of the committee that made those very strong arguments.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say that the majority members of the Committee on Appropriations are acting in substantial accord on this proposition, and their arguments, while not convincing, are the same. Now, I frankly admit that I am not entirely convinced as to the wisdom of retaining these Subtreasuries or as to the wisdom of abolishing them; but before I vote to abolish all of them I must be able to rely on higher authority than has thus far been cited. The authority upon which we are proceeding at present rests alone upon that of the gentleman from Mississippi. He confided to us yesterday that he had entertained the belief for the past two years that all of the Subtreasuries should be abolished. Now, I have the greatest respect for the opinion of my friend from Mississippi. I have no doubt that his reputation as a financier is probably second to that of no man in the great State of Mississippi. And yet I must for the moment, with all due respect to his great abilities, decline to accept the two years' belief of the gentleman from Mississippi as one of the eternal verities. The authority upon which we would have the right to rely as Members of this House is absent on this occasion.

Although not only requested but directed to report the facts to this Congress at the beginning of the session in the case of these Subtreasuries, and his recommendation as to whether they should be continued or discontinued, the Secretary of the Treasury has failed to make any report. I shall not say that he has treated the mandate of this House with contemptuous disregard; certainly, however, he has not responded to our request and direction. Of course, the Secretary of the Treasury is a very busy man. It is possible that he may be especially busy at this time in inventing new methods of padding the alleged Treasury balance in order to conceal from the public the true condition of the financial affairs of the country. [Applause on the Republican side.] At any rate, no report from the Secretary of the Treasury has appeared here, and, failing that, I am not prepared to vote to abolish the Subtreasuries of the country.

Mr. Chairman, the course which this committee seems determined to adopt with relation to the city of Cincinnati is not different from that heretofore pursued by the majority party of this Nation. At the time the Federal reserve bank law was passed it was conceded practically universally that the city of Cincinnati was to be the headquarters of one of the regional banks, and it was logic and reason that actuated that belief. The city of Cincinnati was the center, practically the exact center, of the region this bank was designed to serve. It was the hub of that financial district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Cleveland, great and important as she is—and nobody recognizes that more than I—was geographically unsuited to have a regional bank. It is on the outer rim of this financial district; north of Cleveland there is nothing but water. Unfortunately, however, reason and justice were forced to yield to politics in this instance. A number of gentlemen high in the councils of the dominant party met here in Washington on the last day before the announcement was made of the location of the regional bank, and it was transferred—and I use the word advisedly—from Cincinnati to Cleveland.

The effect of this proposition is to transfer the Subtreasury now in Cincinnati to Cleveland, and I do not wonder at the smiling ardor with which my Democratic colleagues from the city of Cleveland participate in this slaughter when they realize that the effect will probably be to have more places to be filled by deserving Democrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to participate in this wrecking proposition, nor am I willing to assist the Committee on Appropriations in the mangling and undoing of its own handiwork. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have never posed as an expert either as a legislator or as a financier, and I do not believe it takes an expert in finance to know that these Subtreasuries are not needed. On the contrary, many Members of the House have repeatedly stated that they were needed. Nor have I ever asked any Member of the House to follow me in anything. I only ask that every man exercise his own judgment, because as a rule I do not think Members of the House are in a habit of following many people, but usually follow their own convictions. I do not believe that that indirect charge against the membership of the House by my good friend from Cincinnati is a just one. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] stated the services which the Subtreasuries are now performing. None of us deny that the Subtreasuries perform some function now, but we contend that that function can be performed by the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In a moment. It was stated at the time that the bill was passed that all of the duties now devolving upon the Subtreasuries of the country would be performed by these regional banks, and that they would be the depositories of the United States Government funds, but no step has been taken as yet, until this action of Congress, toward bringing about that very much needed saving of money, and that very much needed reform of placing the money to the credit of the Federal reserve banks, where it can become a reserve against which, in time of need and stress and storm, they may issue Federal currency. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Aside from the financial aspect which has just been mentioned, are there not many functions that pertain merely to the Treasury Department that are discharged by the Subtreasuries now, and that would not be discharged by the Federal reserve banks without additional legislation transferring those functions?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think the abolishing of the Subtreasuries would in any wise change the duties of the Treasurer of the United States or the Treasury Department. I do not believe that the functions now performed by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Treasury of the United States would in any wise be changed. For example, one thing that would be needed would be vaultage capacity for the purpose of storing the gold held by the Federal Government against the gold notes or the silver which may be held against the silver certificates, because all of the other currency and all of the other money would not have to be cared for, but would continue to circulate as it does now.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. One more question, and I am asking purely for my own information and not in criticism of the measure. Is it not true that there are many things done by the Subtreasuries practically the same as if transacted with the Treasurer's office at Washington that could not be done at all by the Federal reserve bank?

Mr. SISSON. It may necessitate a great deal of business being transacted directly through the Treasury Department, correspondence and otherwise, which is now transacted through the Subtreasuries. But at last the Treasury officials at Washington control all of these deposits, and they are absolutely under their control and direction, so it is immaterial as to whether the money is kept in the Federal reserve bank or in the Subtreasury. There are only 9 Subtreasuries now and there are 12 regional banks, and for that reason you had better distribute the depositories, because the banks themselves voted on the location of these various regional reserve banks, and the Subtreasuries were located many years ago and the business of the country has grown, changed, and shifted.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. ALLEN. Will it not require some additional legislation, even where reserve cities have a Subtreasury, to transfer the functions of the Subtreasury to the reserve banks?

Mr. SISSON. I believe if these Subtreasuries are abolished that we will instantly get from the Banking and Currency Committee, after you have abolished these Subtreasuries, whatever legislation will be needed to have these regional reserve banks perform the duties of the Subtreasury——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi that he have two more minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON (continuing). To have them perform the duties performed by the Subtreasuries. Now, as the gentleman is aware—because he read from our request—it was our request of the Secretary of the Treasury that if there was any legislation needed to do this to suggest to us what it was. Now, in view of the fact there was no suggestion, in view of the fact, as has been stated on the floor repeatedly during the discussion of the Federal Reserve System, in view of the fact this action was contemplated last year, and in view of the fact the Secretary of the Treasury has given us no information, therefore we can conclude that there is no serious reason or he certainly would have notified us of what that serious reason was.

Mr. ALLEN. I will say this to the gentleman, that never in the history of this House, so far as I can recall since I have been here, has a committee acted where it has asked for a report from the department upon as important a matter as this without a report one way or the other.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say this to the gentleman: That if he will serve a while on the Committee on Appropriations, if he waits for reports to come from departments for reforms, he will wait a very long time. Now, the departments justify themselves in making estimates for an item solely because that appropriation is authorized by law, and, being authorized by law, it is their duty to make them until Congress shall change the law, and they assume no responsibility on earth for it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You do not save any money by transferring this to the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; because you get rid of the vast machinery and vast number of employees whom you have here.

Mr. LINTHICUM. These men are working all the time, and they would have to do the same when they are transferred to the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. SISSON. No; because those Federal reserve banks are transacting business every day and every morning with all the banks throughout the country, and this is putting only a little additional burden upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi may be extended two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the clerks of the Federal reserve banks are working all the time and the clerks in these Subtreasuries are working all the time.

Mr. SISSON. At this time you may have to have a few more clerks in transferring this function to the Federal reserve banks, but nothing like the amount carried here, and no man will contend it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Let me say one other thing—the Federal reserve banks are not at this time prepared to take over this work. They have not the vault capacity. You have provided some buildings, but they have not yet been——

Mr. SISSON. There is no reason on earth why those cities where the Federal reserve banks have vaults should not have time to prepare themselves to receive these funds.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But they are not prepared with the vaults they have now.

Mr. SISSON. Take New York, for instance. There is a Subtreasury there where they keep a great amount of money in their vaults, some of it to redeem notes, which vaults were especially prepared to take care of that. Now, there is no reason on earth why the duty performed by the Subtreasury in New York might not be performed by the reserve bank.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Allow me to say that in our district Congress has provided for the erection of a building in which there has to be an increased vault capacity because we have not the vault capacity, and now the gentleman wants to turn that over from Baltimore to Richmond, which is not prepared to take care of it.

Mr. SISSON. That is an additional reason why at this time we ought to take action rather than in enlarging the capacity of the vaults in all of the nine cities that do not have Federal reserve banks. Now, another thing. There are hundreds of cities in the United States whose business might be better served and not at the expense of the balance of the people. I grant you it might be a little more convenient for the city of Baltimore. I am absolutely impartial with respect to the city of Baltimore, because my own personal position has always been to have a universal plan in reference to dealing with this matter and not to take any one particular city, and, indeed, the gentleman will take notice I did not say a word in reference to the Baltimore matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is recognized.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is perfectly evident, Mr. Chairman, that if Members wish to have an opportunity to take a recess for the holidays of even a few days, it will be necessary to speed up with this bill, and certainly I am sure we do not wish to take all of to-day in consideration of these Subtreasury items in this rather lengthy bill. I want to submit a request for unanimous consent, and that is that the Clerk now proceed to read without interruption the paragraphs on pages 60 and 61 relative to the New Orleans, the New York, the Philadelphia, the St. Louis, and San Francisco Subtreasuries, and that after he shall have concluded the reading it shall be in order to offer amendments to any of the paragraphs so read, and that debate upon all the amendments and all of the paragraphs be limited to 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Clerk proceed to read on pages 60 and 61 the paragraphs relative to the New Orleans, the New York, the Philadelphia, the St. Louis, and San Franciso offices, and that the time for debate be limited on all of those paragraphs to 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. You had better make it an hour, 30 minutes to be used by those in favor of the propositions in the bill and 30 minutes by those opposed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then I will amend my request to make it one hour, 30 minutes to be used by those in favor and 30 minutes to be used by those against.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee amends his motion by moving to extend the time to one hour, 30 minutes to be used by those in favor of the proposition and 30 minutes by those against.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Upon all the amendments in their order.

Mr. IGOE. Who is to control the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the Chair would recognize those in favor of and those opposed to the amendments.

Mr. IGOE. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me this matter ought to be disposed of, and some of us from these cities would like to have the privilege of a few minutes.

Mr. GORDON. You have had three-fourths of a day.

Mr. IGOE. Oh, no; I have not taken any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that he will have an opportunity.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, when the particular places will be reached or can it all be used at one place?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The request was that the Clerk proceed to read all the paragraphs on pages 60 and 61, and then amendments can be offered to any paragraphs, and the debate to be confined to one hour on all the paragraphs, and at the conclusion the vote be taken on all of the amendments.

Mr. RAKER. It may all be used on the first amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I take it the same question is involved to all intents and purposes in every one of these paragraphs, and whether or not the debate is exhausted upon the first amendment or otherwise the whole range of the proposition will be covered.

Mr. RAKER. What I want to ask the chairman of the committee is, Will this be one motion to strike out the whole subject matter to be read by the Clerk so that all will be taken up as one amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is with the Chair. I do not know whether under the rules a motion like that will prevail or not.

Mr. RAKER. They can move to strike out all of the lines commencing with line 21 down to and including line 59.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question if I can have his attention.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am not through yet. I would like to know whether or not it is the purpose of the chairman to make one motion to strike out all this matter.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman to whom the gentleman from California is addressing his remarks does not propose to make any motion. Of course, I do not know what any other gentleman may do.

Mr. RAKER. I see.

Mr. BENNET. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] what his plan is as to voting on any amendments to be offered, and where they will be offered?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My request was that the paragraphs which I have enumerated be read without interruption by the Clerk, and at the conclusion of the reading that amendments shall be in order to any of the paragraphs so read and debate upon all the paragraphs and all amendments to all the paragraphs be confined to 1 hour, 30 minutes to be consumed by those in opposition to any amendments that are offered and 30 minutes by those in favor thereof.

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, the situation, then, would be this, as I understand it: These paragraphs would all be read, and then there would be an hour's debate. And then after the debate any amendments could be offered, and when offered would immediately be voted on, which would leave us in a somewhat rather singular position——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The amendments would not necessarily have to be delayed until after the debate was concluded. They could be offered after the reading.

Mr. BENNET. That ought to be in the agreement.

Mr. MANN. Why not arrange to have an amendment in order to strike out all the paragraphs? That is the question.

Mr. BENNET. I do not quite concede that. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] seemed yesterday to make some distinction in reference to the Subtreasury at New York. My idea is that the principle relating to all of them is the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I will say to the committee there is good ground, even though the Members vote for the elimination of all the others.

Mr. BENNET. That is what I thought. That is what the gentleman from Tennessee said.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that under this arrangement each State undertaking to defend its Subtreasury would be limited to five minutes in this debate, which would not be fair in any instance. If you allowed only a half hour, there being six paragraphs to be debated, it would mean five minutes to a side, which, on a question as important as this one, would be unfair.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that several of the States have had pretty liberal representation on this question. I think the gentleman consumed 15 minutes himself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And never reached the merits of the question at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was not the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; it was simply a call to arms to all those interested in these propositions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman confesses that it was a call to arms, and it was absolutely necessary to save the day; and, inasmuch as it saved the day, the gentleman is willing to pass by the humorous suggestions of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] about "pork." I shall object to this motion unless more time is granted. I would not desire to have the fate of the Philadelphia Subtreasury settled in a five-minute discussion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How much time does the gentleman think would be necessary?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Bear in mind that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has already indicated that the New York proposition ought to remain, and remember, too, that the Baltimore item is already in. That leaves the Members from the other places under the necessity of looking out for themselves. Baltimore is not included in this. There are nine propositions in the bill and at least six of them are in doubt.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any suggestion as to the amount of time that would be proper?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think there should be at least 15 or 20 minutes allowed to a State.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman understands that it is very important to pass this bill as quickly as possible, and also other bills, if we are to have a holiday recess.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that; but it is also equally important that some or all of these Subtreasuries be retained. If the gentleman and his committee had given fair notice to the business interests involved that they proposed to take so radical a step as the abolition of all these Subtreasuries in the United States, it would be a different proposition. I contended yesterday, and I contend now, that it is snap judgment on the business men of this country to take action like this, I care not whether the opposition to these establishments comes from the Republicans or the Democrats.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Chairman, to this debate until the time shall have been fixed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I can see how the chairman of the Appropriations Committee might object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman indicates that he thinks there ought to be 15 minutes allowed to a State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there will be any particular objection to 15 minutes to a State if the gentleman is willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield 15 minutes to Pennsylvania, when the time comes I am sure we can protect ourselves and divide the time equally.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that you make it 45 minutes on a side. That would be right.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I count to make out an hour and a half, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the paragraphs on pages 60 and 61, including New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco be read, and that at the conclusion of the reading of those paragraphs by the Clerk there shall be one and one-half hours of discussion, one-half of which time shall be utilized by those in favor of the motion to strike out and half the time by those opposed to it, and that at the expiration of that time there shall be a vote taken on all the paragraphs and all amendments to the paragraphs.

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman conclude from the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois that amendments could be offered at any time within the hour and a half and be read without being taken from the time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; that was the spirit of the request which I submitted.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; but it was not so stated by the Chair. I suggest that amendments may be offered at any time during the hour and a half, but the time consumed in offering and reading them should not be taken from the hour and a half.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it also understood that 15 minutes of this time shall be occupied by Representatives of Pennsylvania?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That rests with the Chair. Of course he has, under this request, if it is granted, the distribution of the time. That rests with the Chair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have had a gentlemen's understanding already that 15 minutes shall go to Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. That is easily arranged.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But if we are not to keep that understanding I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there are five items here, New Orleans, New York, St. Louis, Philadelphia, and San Francisco, and that time would not give more than 15 minutes on each for those who are against the motion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My understanding is that six items are to be covered.

Mr. MANN. That would give 15 minutes apiece for six items.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If each item has 15 minutes, that would be in accordance with my proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

New Orleans, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, what action has been taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]?

The CHAIRMAN. None. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DYER. A division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is requested.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SISSON: Beginning with line 21, page 59, strike out the paragraph beginning with line 21 and ending on line 2 of page 60.

The CHAIRMAN. On this a division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

New Orleans, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,250; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $2,000; vault clerk, $1,800; assorting teller, $1,200; clerks—one $1,500, five at $1,200 each, one $1,000; typewriter and stenographer, $1,000; day watchman, $720; night watchman, $720; messenger, $600; in all, $25,290.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not finished reading.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet to make a motion to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the Clerk was to read all these paragraphs without interruption, and then the motion to be made at the expiration of the reading of the paragraphs. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

New Orleans, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,250; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $2,000; vault clerk, $1,800; assorting teller, $1,200; clerks—one $1,500, five at $1,200 each, one $1,000; typewriter and stenographer, $1,000; day watchman, $720; night watchman, $720; messenger, $600; in all, $25,290.

New York, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $8,000; cashier, $4,200; assistant cashier, $3,600; chief clerk, $3,000; check pay division—chief $3,000, assistant chief $2,000, bond clerk and assistant vault clerk $2,800, paying teller $3,000, assistant paying teller $2,250; receiving teller $2,800; redemption division—chief $2,700, assistant chief $2,250, vault and authorities clerk $2,500; coin division—chief $2,700, assistant chief $2,000, paying teller $2,100; bookkeepers—chief $2,400, 2 at $2,000 each; clerks—1 $2,300, 2 at $2,000 each, 1 $1,900, 1 $1,800, 1 $1,700, 4 at $1,600 each, 7 at $1,500 each, 9 at $1,400 each, 5 at $1,300 each, 10 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,000; messengers—2 at $1,200 each, 5 at $900 each, 2 at $800 each; guards—chief $1,500, 1 $1,200, 2 at $1,000 each; superintendent of building, $1,800; engineers—chief $1,200; 2 at $1,050 each; 8 watchmen, at $720 each; 16 money counters and handlers for money laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $154,460.

Philadelphia, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,250; coin teller, $2,000; vault clerk, $1,900; bookkeeper, $1,800; assorting teller, $1,800; receiving teller, $1,700; redemption teller, $1,600; clerks—1 $1,600, 2 at $1,500 each, 2 at $1,400 each, 1 $1,300, 5 at $1,200 each; 1 $1,000; chief guard, $1,100; 5 counters, at $900 each; 6 watchmen, at $720 each; 4 money counters and handlers for money laundry machines, at $900 each; in all, $49,770.

St. Louis, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $1,800; change teller, $1,600; coin teller, $1,200; clerks—2 at $1,500 each, 5 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,100 each, 3 at $1,000 each, 3 at $900 each; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; 2 janitors, at $600 each; guard, $720; in all, $33,860.

San Francisco, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, who also acts as vault clerk, $2,800; bookkeeper, $2,000; paying teller, $2,400; receiving teller, $2,000; clerks—1 $2,000, 2 at $1,800 each, 1 $1,500; stenographer and typewriter, $1,200; messenger, $840; 4 watchmen at $720 each; in all, $25,720.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that under the unanimous-consent agreement a motion will lie to strike out all of these.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of the remaining Subtreasuries.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all beginning with line 3, on page 60, down to and including line 26, on page 61.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will consume only a very few minutes of time, for I do not desire to take up the time of those who stand for these various Subtreasuries.

As I stated on yesterday, the committee has been endeavoring for a year or two to obtain some information as to why all of these Subtreasuries should not be abolished and their duties transferred to the Federal reserve banks. In hearings conducted over a period of two or three years the matter has been very elaborately discussed and inquired into, and finally, being unable to secure any such information, the committee recommended to Congress the adoption of a provision asking the Secretary of the Treasury to submit information upon the subject at the beginning of this session of Congress. We failed to receive that information. In making this statement I am not criticizing the Secretary of the Treasury for his failure to promptly follow the mandate of Congress, because I have been informed that he was at that time and for some weeks prior thereto away from Washington, engaged in a very important official duty in connection with the farm-loan law, with reference to the location of the districts and the location of the farm-loan banks.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not now; in a moment I will. Now, not having the information that we expected to get from the Treasury Department, the committee felt that they could very safely recommend the abolition of at least one of these Subtreasuries, feeling that if that was done it would not inconvenience anyone, and that it would at least bring forth some statement as to whether or not any of these Subtreasuries were necessary to be carried in the future. For that reason, as I stated upon yesterday, the committee selected Baltimore, for reasons which I then gave. It was the smallest one of the number. It carried only about 50 per cent of the funds carried by the smallest of the other Subtreasuries. In addition to that, it is within 40 miles of the city of Washington, and it seemed to the committee that there could be no serious inconvenience to which the bankers and business men of Baltimore could be subjected if it was abolished, because they were within an hour's ride of the city of Washington.

But I rose to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we had better go a little slow about abolishing all of these Subtreasuries in the absence of direct information from the Treasury Department as to what will be necessary in order to take care of the duties performed by some of them; and I want to call your attention to this report submitted by the Treasurer of the United States. I believe that some of them, probably most of them, can be eliminated now with perfect safety, but we should not hastily abolish all of them in the absence of information as to the steps necessary to provide for the taking over of their deposits and duties by the reserve banks.

I read to you on yesterday a statement as to the amount of funds carried by these various Subtreasuries upon November 29 of this year. In that statement as printed in the RECORD Philadelphia is shown as having $225,000,000, whereas as a matter of fact it was $25,000,000. Now, the Treasurer reports that on June 30, 1916, there was in gold coin in the Baltimore Subtreasury $3,500,000 in round numbers; in the New York Subtreasury, $155,500,000; in Philadelphia, $14,000,000; in Boston, nearly $24,500,000; in Cincinnati, $19,300,000; in Chicago, $77,000,000; in St. Louis, $40,000,000; in New Orleans, nearly $9,500,000; and in San Francisco, $72,000,000. In standard silver dollars there was on that date in the Subtreasury in Baltimore $5,000,000; in New York, $85,500,000; in Philadelphia, $6,000,000; in Boston, $1,500,000; in Cincinnati, $3,800,000; in Chicago, $9,500,000; in St. Louis, $1,500,000; in New Orleans, $16,000,000; and in San Francisco, $23,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hate to ask for more time, but I would like one more minute to complete my statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have the minute which he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In closing I simply want to submit this to the committee, whether or not, with this large volume of gold and silver coin in these various Subtreasuries, we can afford now at this time, with the little information we have, to abolish all of these Subtreasuries, in the absence of information as to whether there are proper vaults and proper storage facilities here in the city of Washington. It seems to me that the question answers itself, and I do not think we should go so far as to abolish all of them until we know that proper arrangements have been made to take care of the coin and that the reserve banks are fully equipped to take over their functions.

Mr. IGOE rose and was recognized.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri is on the same side as the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Which side is he on?

Mr. GORDON. He is with you.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he will endeavor to be perfectly fair in the division of time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I spoke in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. GORDON. And the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] is about to speak in opposition to it, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] and will take account of that in the division of the time.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the chairman of the subcommittee has stated that he is opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. I do not know whether this Government will be able to dispense with these Subtreasuries eventually or not, but it seems to me it would show a lack of business sense for this House now, in the absence of a recommendation from the Treasury Department, to proceed to abolish them at this time.

As far as the gentleman from Mississippi is concerned, I would not want to rely much on his knowledge as to what was necessary for the financial business of the world, in view of the statement he made here yesterday that there were $500,000,000 in the Subtreasuries which could be put into commerce. There is not more than $125,000,000 in Washington and the Subtreasuries available for the business purposes of the Government. The gentleman talks about $500,000,000—those are trust funds. There is not vault room enough in Washington for any more of this money, and there is not vault room in the Federal reserve banks. In St. Louis alone it would cost somebody more money for vault rent than the Government is now paying in salaries to men connected with the Subtreasuries. If you abolish the Subtreasury, you not only handicap the banks in St. Louis but in Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kentucky, Indiana, and practically every State east of the Rocky Mountains that does business with St. Louis. The little banks in the country send their money to St. Louis for redemption. The banks take it to the Subtreasury, and it is redeemed. If the Subtreasury is abolished, the little banks will have to send their money to Washington or some other depository selected by the Government, at an expense to somebody.

Now, there are some people who do not want to do anything for the banking institutions of the country. But we have branches of other agencies of the Government, and why should we not have branches of the Treasury Department scattered through the country in order to accommodate the financial interests of this country? It will cost somebody money to do the work that the Subtreasuries are now doing. I am informed, in addition to that, that if the money is sent to Washington for redemption it will take from 10 days to several weeks for the banks to get the accommodation they get now in 24 hours. The Subtreasury in St. Louis is costing this Government only the salaries which it pays.

Now, you can not take the gold and silver out of the Treasury and put it in the Federal reserve bank without some warrant of law, because it is a trust fund held by the Treasurer of the United States. Furthermore, the Government does not own the Federal reserve banks. We can tell the subtreasurer what to do, and it is my guess that the Federal reserve bank of St. Louis, when it came to do all this work, would want some compensation from the Government for doing it. I do not believe you can save a single penny. I want to call attention to the fact that when the accounting work was transferred to Washington some years ago it was said that we would save money. I want to ask any Member if the Government has saved a single penny by the transfer of that work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, at the opening of the discussion the distinguished leader of the Republicans and some other Members challenged the advocates of the different Subtreasury cities to give one public reason for the maintenance of these Subtreasuries. Not one has been given up to this minute, not a single public reason. They say the Government will keep on paying these express charges on the money that they send for at Washington, as it has been doing for over 40 years.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. No; I will not yield. They say they can exchange their old and mutilated money for new bills without paying the express charges, as the rest of the country has to do. Are those public reasons? Certainly not. This thing has developed and concentrated into a mere fight for "pork." I leave it to any intelligent Member of the House if a single public reason has been given for the maintenance of the Subtreasuries; nothing but private reasons.

Now, this matter is not new. The Congress of the United States passed, and the President of the United States approved, a law a year ago calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to present to the Congress any public reasons that existed for the longer maintenance of these Subtreasuries. Presumably if any public reason had existed we would have been advised by the Treasury Department of those reasons. Nearly a year has elapsed, and we have the right to assume from his silence that no public reason exists, especially in view of the fact that nobody here has undertaken or pretended to give any public reason.

Now, there may be some way devised by the leaders of this House to obtain an answer to this enactment which was embodied into law. If there is it ought to be resorted to.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not true that the Secretary of the Treasury sent in estimates calling for appropriations for these Subtreasuries?

Mr. GORDON. Of course, he did; that is the law. There is nothing in that; he has to recommend estimates for the conduct of the Treasury Department. He is required to do that. That illustrates the kind of argument that has been presented here.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GORDON. No; I will not. Let me call attention to this foolish argument that because the Treasury Department has asked for the salaries of these men—and, of course, the salary graft is about all there is in it aside from making the Government pay the express charges on the money—because the Secretary of the Treasury, an executive officer of the Government, has estimated for the salaries provided by law for these officers, therefore he is approving the Subtreasuries. Of course, that is a violent inference, but it illustrates the character of the argument that has been presented here by Representatives of the different localities in order to maintain these institutions for the purpose of having a few high-salaried men in their cities and compelling the people of the United States to pay the express charges for the banks on money from the National Capital. If any public reason exists for the longer maintenance of the Subtreasuries, I wish some one would state it. We have not had any up to date.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to have the opportunity of speaking now, because I want to deal with this matter in a purely public way. I come from a State which has no Subtreasury, and I am not interested in the matter except for public reasons. I belong to a party which was not the party of the originator of the Subtreasury scheme, Andrew Jackson, when he was President of the United States, and who said that the Government funds, small as they were then, ought to be held by the Government itself, and not be subject to banking deposits and loans. I see that we now have $897,000,000 of gold coin and $1,192,000,000 of gold bullion, assets of the Government, of which $1,835,000,000 are represented by gold certificates outstanding, and some hundred millions are held for the Government itself.

December 13, 1916.

ASSETS.

Gold coin	$897,061,769.21
Gold bullion	1,192,494,960.51
	2,089,556,729.72

LIABILITIES.

Gold certificates	1,835,898,509.00
Reserve fund	152,979,025.63
General fund	100,679,195.09
	2,089,556,729.72

It has perhaps become entirely too much the practice of the Government to keep all of these funds in Washington. They may be kept in the various Subtreasuries.

I submit to this membership, who remember that this Capitol was once burned, that New York was in the hands of Great Britain during all of the Revolution; that our coast towns are all more or less in danger. I submit that it is right that we should have various places in which to keep that large fund of two thousand millions of dollars in case of necessity, and that the Subtreasury scheme is therefore a matter of safety.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have only five minutes. I believe it to be also a matter of convenience, and that when large exports and imports of gold are going on at various ports it is better to keep a sufficient stock of gold in those ports to send backward and forward than it is always to send to Washington for the gold and pay the freight. We are doing that now, and it is quite unnecessary if we only kept fair deposits in these Subtreasuries. I believe that the Subtreasuries run a large part of the Treasury business as well as the pension business of this country, and while this last is diminishing to some extent, they are doing it very well, and it will make an upturn to move that business somewhere else. I believe that those Subtreasury buildings are of some importance and value. The one in New York City is on the site where Washington took his oath of office as the first President of the United States, in the very heart of the financial district. It is worth tens of millions of dollars, that site alone, and I have never yet seen a change in which Government property was sold where the Government got the best of it. Somebody else always gets the best of it. I do not know all about this matter, but I do know that when the supporters of this amendment say that they have no information but yet want to abolish the system of keeping our Government funds in our own hands where they will be at our disposal in case of panic and not subject to banking uncertainties or measures, when they ask me to change this system without information I refuse to do it, for I refuse to take a leap in the dark. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the view expressed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] to this extent, that it seems to me that when proper legislation is adopted there ought to be no public necessity for a Subtreasury and a Federal reserve bank in the same city. Until that proper legislation is adopted, basing my knowledge only upon the Subtreasury in New York City, there are some public functions which must be discharged by the Subtreasuries. I clipped from some newspaper last night this item which I hold in my hand, to the effect that $10,000,000 more gold has arrived here, and which goes on to say that there have been shipped to the United States, every dollar of it to New York City, $602,000,000 in gold since the 1st of January, and that the shipments are now coming in at the rate of eight and nine and ten million dollars a day, making a total of $27,000,000 in three days. If there was proper legislation, the Federal reserve bank could take care of that; but until they are authorized by law to do it, until they have been given vaults to do it, which can not be done if you abolish the Subtreasury at New York by this bill, you must do one of two things, you will either have to provide a substitute before the 4th of March or you will have to have an extra session of Congress to provide some substitute there to take care of the nine or ten million dollars of gold that is coming into the city of New York every day, and that is going out in part to other places.

Then you have to do another thing. Under the Walker Act of August 8, 1846, a great Democratic measure—and I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio, Democrat though he is, that it has no merit—all customs duties are payable in gold or Treasury notes. Of course, that has been modified since the Walker Act, but it has been modified through the agency of the Subtreasuries, and the Subtreasury in New York, for the convenience not so much of New York as for other parts of the country, has by law been made a member of the clearing house in New York City, so that a concern in Nashville or Memphis or any other place that wants to pay customs duties in New York City—and 70 per cent of the customs duties are paid there—can arrange with the local banks in their own communities for a New York draft, and through the medium of a New York draft they can pay their customs duties in New York City. That could be arranged by the Federal reserve bank, but we have not passed the legislation yet to do that. That is another public function.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, what becomes of the customs that are collected in Seattle and Portland, Oreg., Galveston, and places where there are no Subtreasuries or Federal reserve banks?

Mr. BENNET. That has nothing to do with what I am discussing. It is the first irrelevant question that I have ever heard my colleague ask.

Mr. PLATT. But the gentleman was talking about the collection of customs.

Mr. BENNET. I was not.

Mr. PLATT. That is what I understood him to be talking about.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, the gentleman was standing in the aisle talking to some one.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I recognize the force of what the gentleman says in reference to the New York Subtreasury, but I do not see that that would apply at all to Cincinnati, in my own State.

Mr. BENNET. I do not say that it would apply to Cincinnati. Cincinnati is safely under the blanket and out of the question. I am a practical man.

Mr. FESS. Not by my vote.

Mr. BENNET. By the vote of the committee. I am not familiar with the arguments, pro and con, in respect to the other Subtreasuries as I am in relation to the Subtreasury in New York City.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute remaining.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that I may have my time extended half a minute, so that I can have a full minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for half a minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say this, that I do not think that this House, knowing that the Senate will put these things back anyway, because we have not done a workmanlike job, ought to do anything more to lower this House in the estimation of the people as compared with the other body than we have already done. Bring out some legislation that is germane and good, and I will vote to abolish the Subtreasury in New York and transfer its functions to the Federal reserve bank, but I am not going to vote for any crude, coarse work that does not substitute anything that is workable in the place of the necessary governmental functions of the Subtreasury at New York. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, in view of what has taken place on the floor, I am prepared for a vote at the present time, but as something has been said in respect to other Subtreasuries, I feel it my duty to say just this much about the Philadelphia Subtreasury. It happens to be housed in the building of the original Bank of the United States, which was crushed by Andrew Jackson, who was opposed to a centralized banking system in this country. It seems to me, whether we think we are doing so or not, we are gradually returning to a centralized banking system, and that if we were to put all the money of the Government, currency and coin, in one receptacle in Washington, or in any one building here, it would be a dangerous thing. We should not keep all our eggs in one basket. The fact with regard to the Subtreasury at Philadelphia, which has been in successful operation for upward of half a century, is, that at the present time it does a distinct service to the people of three States in the matter of the housing of funds, the transfer of funds, redemptions, and exchanges—Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware. Those three States are directly served by the Subtreasury at Philadelphia. So far as the banking interests are concerned they say that to remove or abolish the Subtreasury would be a distinct disadvantage or loss to business men generally. At that Subtreasury they now cash warrants that are presented through the various banks of those three States, pay all checks of pensioners of the Government which come in through the banks, redeem various kinds of money offered for redemption, and circulate throughout the country the small money that is coined at the United States Mint. At present the United States Mint is running full tilt day and night to produce the subsidiary coin that is needed to meet the increased demand of people all over the land. That money is passed over to the Subtreasury in bulk for distribution. Distribution might be had from here in Washington, but it would be at much additional expense.

I hope my colleague [Mr. McFADDEN] from Pennsylvania, who is more familiar with the expense side of this question, will show what it means to transfer this Subtreasury system to the system organized under the Federal reserve bank. So far as the Federal reserve bank is concerned, it has an office in Philadelphia, a central office, and it does its business through the Subtreasury of Philadelphia, where its funds are housed. Now, some gentlemen have been facetious since this discussion arose, and instead of dealing with the proposition on its merits have suggested that to retain these Subtreasuries would simply be to dispense more "pork" to somebody. Well, that charge can not lie against the party to which I belong just now, because those holding office in the Subtreasuries of the United States belong to another party. I have no special reason for seeking to hold them in place as a matter of "pork." They do not belong to the party to which I belong.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret I can not yield. Now, if there is any "pork" in this transaction, it is not Republican "pork"; it is not business men's "pork." It is the "pork" of certain appointees of the President of the United States whom he has not yet indicated to the Secretary of the Treasury he desires to remove. There are 36 men employed in the Subtreasury of the United States besides the Subtreasurer who would be affected if we were to abolish the Subtreasury. Even if we transfer its functions to the Federal Reserve System at such enormous expense as it would entail, we would still have to provide for a subtreasury system. I assume there would simply be a transfer of men from the Subtreasury, or the appointment of new men to take the place of men discharged, hence the cry of "pork" does not lie, even against the Democratic Party. I have received a number of telegrams this morning from business men, bankers, and others in my city, indicating that to remove the Subtreasury, in view of its proximity to the mint, would be a retrograde movement. It would, in their judgment, be a backward step. I trust this House will not permit it to be done, in view of the scant information we have from the officials of the Government on the subject. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what a subtreasury exists for. I have no more idea than the man in the moon what a subtreasury does, and most of you have not any idea, either, and still you are all voting on what you know nothing about. Yet knowledge is right at our doors if we want to seek it. Last year when we passed the legislative bill we adopted this provision of law:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session which of the Subtreasuries, if any, should be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued the reasons in full for such continuance; also if any or all of said Subtreasuries may be discontinued what legislation will be necessary in order to transfer their duties and functions to some other branch of the public service or to Federal reserve banks.

Now, a few minutes ago I telephoned down to the Treasury Department and got into communication with Mr. Malburn, one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, and I asked him where that report is and whether it has been prepared. He said he did not know whether the report has been finally passed on, but that he himself had been asked by the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare his views, inasmuch as he is in charge of the Subtreasury branch of the service, and that he had prepared his views and had submitted them to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury has been out West. He returned on the 9th of December, but apparently nothing has been done toward finishing this report. Here we are legislating without the information which we asked for nearly a year ago. Here at our doors is the department charged with the duty of reporting to us, and yet no one until this morning, so far as I know, has made the slightest effort to find out what the Secretary of the Treasury actually thinks about the whole business.

Now, gentlemen, you are going ahead legislating in the dark. You have only one indication of what the Secretary of the Treasury thinks about it all, and that indication comes to us as a sidelight. Instead of promptly sending you, as he ought to have done, an answer to the question which you asked last year, he has ignored your wishes. Instead of sending you information he has sent you estimates of the amount necessary to pay for the continuance of these Subtreasuries. If all that does not constitute a prima facie case either of negligence on the part of the Secretary or else of a desire to have those offices continued, I do not know what significance is to be attributed to his actions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], in a way answers the matter clearly to the effect that this amendment should not be agreed to. I am strongly opposed to this amendment. The whole matter should be voted down. These Subtreasuries have been doing splendid work and are necessary. I think the one in San Francisco, contained in the neighborhood, as stated, of $72,000,000 in gold; of silver dollars, in the neighborhood of $22,000,000; and subsidiary silver coin, $1,157,000, on June 30, 1916. That, with all other moneys or certificates, amounts to the round sum of $99,321,070.70.

The Subtreasury is housed in a new building erected by the Government. It is for business purposes, the scope of which covers the entire western portion of the United States, the Rocky Mountain and intermountain regions, and the Pacific coast. The reasons have been already stated here in other cases, and there is no use to restate them. I can not see how my friend can see "pork" in a legitimate Government enterprise for the purpose of building up the business of the country. One gentleman who suggested "pork" has not studied the bill or he would not make any such statement. If the last gentleman speaking had read the hearings before the committee he would have recognized the fact that this matter has been in process of investigation by the Treasury Department, and they told the committee clearly and fully that the report was not completed, that investigations were being made, and that the Secretary was giving his personal attention to it; that other business was so great that he could not have it completed. And in the final part of their hearings he makes the same statement.

As to holding administrative appointees in office, one only has to read the estimates and notice there is only from one to two in each one of these Subtreasuries who are appointees. Ninety-five per cent are those under civil service, have been there for years, giving efficient service in behalf of the Government and in behalf of legitimate enterprise in order that the money may be scattered over the United States at places where it is most needed and where it is necessary for legitimate enterprises. These are Government functionaries, proper and necessary.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question which I attempted to ask my colleague from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. RAKER. I do not know whether I can answer it, but I will submit to the question.

Mr. PLATT. In places where there are no Subtreasuries, like Seattle, do they not get along just as well as they do in San Francisco, where there is one, or Portland, or at other places?

Mr. RAKER. They send money at times to the Subtreasury at San Francisco from Seattle; and would you send it from San Francisco or the Pacific coast States to Washington? This subtreasury in San Francisco has been necessary and has been an efficient agent of the Government. It has been one of vital financial importance and is one of much assistance; and, of course, there has not any possible reason or possible excuse been given here, except that some one stated we ought to strike it out; not that, I believe, they are in favor of striking it out, but sometimes some people, somewhere, want to make a show of pretended economy. That is about all.

Mr. PLATT. Do not the banks do exactly the same thing where there is no Subtreasury?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the elimination of the Subtreasury at Baltimore, also at Boston, also at Cincinnati, and at Chicago. That did not mean I would necessarily vote for the elimination of all of them, because I thought there might be an exception in the case of New York on the ground of its being the chief port of the United States, to which such a mass of the gold would come in the course of trade. So that a position against the Subtreasury does not mean that every single one of them ought to be eliminated. The reason I voted to eliminate the Subtreasury eventually is because when we passed the Federal reserve act two years ago it was argued that one of the functions of the Federal reserve act was to unify the financial operations from the standpoint of the General Government, and not have them so diversified under various heads, requiring double overhead charges, and for that reason I allude to the time when the functions of the Subtreasury will be taken over by the Federal Reserve Board.

In the city of Cincinnati we do not have either a regional bank or a branch of the bank. We will not have, I take it, as long as the Subtreasury exists there. If we want to operate through the General Government at Cincinnati and be a part of the Federal Reserve System, the first step will be to eliminate the Subtreasury as a condition to having that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. And for that reason, to unify, I voted to eliminate the Subtreasury there.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The city of St. Louis, as I understand it, has both a Subtreasury and a branch bank.

Mr. FESS. I would say to my friend that the regional bank was not located at St. Louis because the Subtreasury was there or absent, but rather because of the region to be served. I was as active as possible to locate the regional bank of Ohio at Cincinnati. I did all I could, believing, as my friend does, who so well restated the reasons a moment ago, that there is the point where it ought to have been located. It was not located there; but it was not because there was a Subtreasury, however, so far as I know, but for reasons entertained by the authorities which I do not have.

Now, my point is that the Subtreasury in St. Louis did not locate the regional bank there and had not very much to do with it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman argues that the mere fact that there is now a Subtreasury in Cincinnati necessarily prevents the establishment of a branch bank there?

Mr. FESS. I do not think the initiation for a branch bank will be taken up while the Subtreasury exists there. Why not unify it, unless the Subtreasury performs necessary functions not within the purview of the Federal reserve act.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, in all probability, I think he will admit, additional legislation will have to be passed before the functions of the Subtreasury can be given over. We have called upon the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish us with that information. We have directed him to do it, and he has failed to do it. Therefore, is not this a bad time to start legislating in the dark, when we do not know that further legislation will be necessary?

Mr. FESS. The fact that the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to give reasons for continuing any of these Subtreasuries, and in case of no reason for so doing to give Congress the necessary legislation in case of discontinuance, and no such information nor reasons have been given, would appear to me to be tantamount to an absence of reasons because they do not exist. The difficulty of discontinuing enactment here is but another evidence of the reluctance of Members to vote out an institution once established, no matter whether important or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask this question: On what side is the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised the gentleman is opposed to the motion.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether any gentleman on this side desires to speak or not, but, if so, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] is asking for recognition. I do not know on which side he is going to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who favored the motion. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN], who is on the opposite side. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, no doubt in this plan to abolish the Subtreasuries of the United States the framers of the Federal Reserve Banking System had in mind eventually to take over all the functions of the present Subtreasuries. However, in that connection, it seems to me, that if the Federal Reserve Banking System is to take over the functions of these various Federal Subtreasuries, the 12 Federal reserve banks must be provided with the necessary equipment, such as vaults and employees, and so forth. That would mean additional expense and burden to the Federal Reserve Banking System.

This plan as it is now being operated costs the Government of the United States probably a round half million dollars; to be exact, $431,920 this bill provides, without the appropriation for the Subtreasury at Baltimore, Md., which is dropped in this appropriation bill, and no appropriation provided for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Which plan—the Federal Reserve Banking System?

Mr. McFADDEN. To run the present system of Subtreasuries. If these functions are to be assumed by the Federal Reserve Banking System, I believe there should be a corresponding arrangement made so that the burden of carrying on these functions, which are now being paid for out of the Treasury of the United States, will, and should not be placed upon the Federal Reserve Banking System.

It is well known that the stockholders of the Federal Reserve Banking System have not been receiving returns in the way of dividends on the stock invested in the Federal Reserve System, and the member banks are also compelled to segregate their reserves in the regional banks of the Federal Reserve System on which they are not receiving any interest. If under this plan they are to be still further burdened with the expense of carrying on the business now being conducted under the present Subtreasury system, it seems to me there should be a corresponding remuneration to the Federal Reserve Banking System for this service.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that the reason why the banks are not receiving dividends on their stock in these Federal reserve banks is the fact that the Federal reserve banks are doing very little business? This added business would not be a burden to them, so that they could carry it on with their present equipment and help without any great additional expense, and thus save this half million dollars which we are now paying out to carry on our Subtreasury system.

Mr. McFADDEN. These Federal reserve banks would have to have additional equipment, including vaults and employees, to carry this burden.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. It is a totally erroneous assumption that the Federal reserve banks are not paying dividends, because they are.

Mr. McFADDEN. In regard to that, I will say that I am the president of a bank in Pennsylvania which is a member of group 3 of the Federal Reserve Banking System, and up to this time they have not paid any dividends to the stockholders.

Mr. GLASS. Two of them have not paid dividends, but 10 of them have.

Mr. McFADDEN. It is a fact, however, that the member banks, "particularly the country member banks," of the Federal Reserve System feel that they are burdened beyond what they ought to be in the operation of the Federal Reserve System, and with this additional Subtreasury burden placed upon them I am one who believes that there should be remuneration for it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in abolishing this system of Subtreasuries throughout the United States, which Subtreasuries have for many years, and are now serving a very useful purpose, that if they are to be abolished, as is contemplated by the sponsors of the Federal reserve act, and the functions of these Subtreasuries assumed and performed by the Federal Reserve Banking System, that a complete and definite working plan should first be proposed and presented to this House. As has been stated here, the last Congress requested the Secretary of the Treasury to make a report to this Congress on the question of abolishing the present Subtreasury system. This the Secretary has failed to do. The adjustment of this matter now comes before the House in the present appropriation bill. While we have the tentative assurance that the business conducted by the Subtreasuries in the cities of Baltimore and Boston could probably be assumed by the Federal Reserve System, we have no definite information, however, on this subject. The only alternative left to us, then, if the appropriation is not made by this Congress to continue the Subtreasuries at Baltimore and Boston, is that they will simply be compelled to discontinue operations, with no definite arrangements made for the carrying on of the business formerly conducted at these two Subtreasuries.

The taking over by the Federal Reserve System of the functions of the present system of Subtreasuries brings up for consideration several important questions in connection with these various duties. The United States Treasury and these Sub-treasuries are acting as trustees of trust funds, of gold and other coins upon which certificates or warehouse receipts are issued, and a vast amount of gold coin and bullion is being stored in these institutions; and the discontinuance of these vast sums and the continual increase of the same owing to the influx of foreign gold into this country is a matter which deserves very careful consideration and thought as to where these large sums of gold, and reserves are to be stored; and Congress in considering this should give very careful consideration as to the geographical location of these vast amounts of gold reserves. This, to my mind, is a preparedness proposition, and the practice of storing these gold reserves at easily accessible points of attack is a vital source of weakness. Suppose, for instance, that it was a fact that there were 30 carloads of gold stored in the vaults of the Subtreasury in the city of New York at the present time, might it not be a temptation to some foreign country whose gold reserves are being fast depleted to attempt to seize any one of the easily accessible unprotected storage points, and might it not be a serious menace to this country if these gold reserves were suddenly withdrawn or seized, and the gold certificates which are in circulation in this country be immediately transformed into Treasury notes with simply the straight I. O. U. of the United States back of them?

Mr. Chairman, these are serious thoughts to consider; but I believe that this is a serious matter and that this Congress should formulate a definite plan of segregating into the safest zones of the United States these vast gold reserves, and that the plan should contemplate a definite and concrete form of law covering the handling of the vast amount of business which these Subtreasuries have been doing.

The banks of the country are lessening their responsibilities in the caring for, of these large gold reserves by taking to the Federal reserve banks, gold coin and getting Federal reserve notes, in lieu thereof, and are thus shifting the responsibility of the caring for of these vast amounts of gold coin to the Federal Reserve Banking System, which system is accepting the added responsibility by stretching, I believe, the intent of the Federal reserve law, which, in my judgment, is a dangerous function and should be discouraged rather than encouraged.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I have thought and have said to the members of the Committee on Appropriations that it would be a most inexpedient and unwise thing, without adequate information, or any information at all, indeed, for Congress to abolish all of these Subtreasuries, and therefore I shall not vote for the proposition to abolish them indiscriminately. [Applause.]

It was in contemplation when we established the Federal Reserve System that, ultimately, we would dispense with the various Subtreasuries. But to do it in this ill-considered and haphazard way—merely by expunging appropriations for their maintenance—would be both unbusinesslike and harmful. In the first place, the Federal reserve banks, most of which have not homes of their own, have not the facilities now to transact this business. They have not the storage capacity for the coin; they have not an organized clerical force sufficient for the work; it is not certain how much or what part of the work the banks can do; and therefore to undertake the indiscriminate abolition of the Subtreasuries would to my mind be folly.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. MEEKER. At the present time have we such a law as would make it possible to transfer now the Federal business from the Subtreasuries to the banks?

Mr. GLASS. I think we have ample legal warrant for it, for the reason that the Federal reserve act expressly provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may constitute the Federal reserve banks the fiscal agents of the United States Government, and under that authorization of law, in my judgment, the greater part of the business of the Subtreasuries could legally be transferred to the Federal reserve banks. The details would have to be devised either by a carefully prepared statute or by equally carefully prepared regulations. But I do not believe that the Federal reserve banks are in position now to take over all of the business of the Subtreasuries. In fact, I know that such is not the case; and to attempt the transfer by the elimination of all these items from this appropriation bill is not the way to go about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask if there is any provision now whereby the physical property of the Subtreasuries shall be transferred for the use of the Federal reserve banks?

Mr. GLASS. The whole authority, whatever there may be, is embraced in the authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute the Federal reserve banks the business agents of the United States Government. I think that power is broad and ample enough to transfer the greater part of the business of the Subtreasuries; and I believe that, eventually, that will be done. But to undertake to do it without any sort of enlightenment on the subject, without any knowledge, really, of the effect of what we are doing right now, seems to me most ill-considered.

Mr. KENT. Are not the Subtreasuries now really acting as a kind of cold-storage warehouse for coin, and if so, why can not all that function be transferred to the people who can make use of the coin?

Mr. GLASS. I think that some time it will be done, and should be done. But it should not be done in this haphazard way. I voted to abolish the Subtreasury at Baltimore, within an hour's ride of Washington, because I thought it could safely be done. And I voted to abolish the Subtreasury at Boston because I thought it might safely be done. And I was prepared to ravish my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and vote to abolish the Subtreasury at Philadelphia. But I proposed to draw the line at that point, and I would not have done that without taking for granted, from my limited information, that it might safely be done.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman kindly explain what particular damage would be done to the situation if the Subtreasuries were abolished?

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, the Federal reserve banks have not the necessary storage facilities; they have not now the clerical facilities. In this proposal is involved no scheme of transfer; there is nothing as to when or how the thing is to be done. It would amount to a disorganization of that whole bureau of the Government to do this thing now without any preparation, or without any prior notice to the Treasury or the Federal reserve banks that it is to be done.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. GLASS. I ask for just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say this in justice to the Secretary of the Treasury. I happen to know that he has had all of his time and attention absorbed recently in an effort to put into effect as speedily as possible the rural credit system provided by Congress at its last session, and I have reason to believe that he did not take the statute quoted here as a mandatory order upon the Secretary of the Treasury to apprise Congress on the first day, or within the first week of its assembling, of what should be done with respect to the Subtreasuries, but that he hoped to furnish the desired information in ample time; and, as a preliminary step, he commissioned one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury to examine into the question and to prepare a report on the subject, which has been done. The Secretary of the Treasury returned to the city only a few days ago and has not yet examined the report. But in due season the report will be presented to Congress.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Was not the report as a matter of fact prepared some time before the Secretary went to California?

Mr. GLASS. I do not know as to that; but before the Secretary of the Treasury went to California he went to various other parts of the country in prosecution of the work of establishing the new rural credit system. He has taken three trips with the Farm Loan Board, having in view the speedy establishment of this rural credit system; and I happen to know that nearly the whole of his time has been taken up with that laborious matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, for the past three years I have been making or supporting a motion to strike out the Subtreasuries, and I have not done it entirely in the dark. I went to the legislative reference bureau in the Congressional Library, and had the reference bureau prepare a statement citing every statute passed on the subject of the Subtreasuries from 1846 down. There is a world of information on this subject. Economic writers have written on it, Treasury officials have reported on it, and the best thought of the country has for a long time been against the Subtreasury system. No other civilized country, so far as I know, has such a system as this. If I am wrong in that statement, Dr. FESS, or some other historian, will correct me. This system, as indicated by the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT], is practically a "cold-storage" system for taking in coin and locking it up. Of course the Subtreasuries do make change for the people. Of course they receive clipped coin for redemption, and things of that kind. Of course they receive Government notes that are worn out and redeem them, and do some work for the Government that is some accommodation to the people; but it can all be done by the banks, and is done by the banks where there is no Subtreasury.

Mr. KENT. I will ask the gentleman if he understands the system under which these cold-storage warehouses take gold coin? Does he understand that they take it by weight? As a matter of fact they take the gold coin by weight, and therefore the bank that takes in this coin at its par value, when it turns it over to these Subtreasuries, has to accept a discount on that coin.

Mr. PLATT. I think that is true.

Mr. KENT. I do not see where the Subtreasuries are performing any functions whatever, except that of ordinary cold storage of something that the people do not want to use.

Mr. PLATT. That is practically what they are doing. They are simply storage warehouses, that take in the money received for customs, internal revenue, and so forth, and lock it up. It should go into the banks and form a basis of credit. If the Subtreasuries were abolished it would go into the banks. Of course, a part of the fund now held in the Subtreasuries is a trust fund that could be taken care of. The Federal reserve banks are authorized to take care of it and the Treasury here in Washington can take care of it. There is no reason why the work they are doing should not be taken up and cared for by the banks if the Subtreasuries were abolished. There might be some additional legislation needed, but there is time enough between now and June 30 to perfect this legislation. If we strike out these appropriations for the Subtreasuries now, the Treasury Department will have to obey our command and make a report and arrange some way of doing the work. Even if no way were arranged, I believe there is law enough to enable the Federal reserve banks to go right on and do what the Subtreasuries are doing and that there would be no hiatus in the matter whatever.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to ask the gentleman what authority is given anywhere by which the Secretary of the Treasury can deposit the trust funds of the United States in Federal reserve banks? And by trust funds I mean, for example, the gold that is held behind gold certificates. I should like to have him point out that authority to me.

Mr. PLATT. They are to act as fiscal agents of the Government, and the Secretary of the Treasury can require them to care for this fund if he wants to, or he can store the gold coin anywhere, here in Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. PHELAN. The giving authority to somebody to act as fiscal agent does not permit the United States Government to transfer its trust to somebody else.

Mr. GLASS. It does not involve the transfer of a trust. It merely involves the custody of the coin. That is all there is to it.

Mr. PLATT. That is all there is to it.

Mr. GLASS. But I will say further to my colleague that the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks have been occupied with tremendous problems since the establishment of the Federal Reserve System, and I do not believe that system is yet prepared to take over the business of the Subtreasuries without any previous notice of the intention of Congress to make the transfer. The Federal Reserve System is occupied right up to the hilt on current problems of a grave nature, and I do not think it would be politic—in fact, I am authorized to say for the Secretary of the Treasury that he thinks it would be very impolitic—to abolish all these Subtreasuries at this time.

Mr. PLATT. What are the Subtreasuries doing that the banks are not doing, except storing the coin? The banks are doing all the other things.

Mr. GLASS. It is not so much what the Subtreasuries are doing. It is what the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board are doing. Their whole time is occupied with grave problems, and the board has not the time now to take over the entire clerical establishment of these Subtreasuries and reorganize them at this moment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, one of these Subtreasuries is located in the district which I have the honor to represent in this House. I have been in hopes that the Federal reserve banks would be able to take over the work and business of the Subtreasuries, but I am not willing at this time, in view of the report of the Committee on Appropriations, and in view of no opinion from the Secretary of the Treasury except as we have received it just now through the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], to vote to abolish them at this time.

However, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the debate upon this provision is going to be of great benefit, in that the Treasury Department will no doubt seek provisions to amend existing law with reference to the Federal reserve banks for the purpose of taking over the work of the Subtreasuries. But at this time, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought not to do it. In fact, it would be exercising poor judgment to vote them out at this time, while we are not able to give the matter the consideration to which it is entitled. Then, it is evident that they would be put back in the Senate, agreed to in conference, and, of course, would finally be a part of the law anyway.

In this situation, therefore, I am of the opinion that we should follow the Appropriation Committee in their recommendations, and I believe you gentlemen of the committee feel the same way. The debate of yesterday nevertheless, as well as the call to the colors by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], has resulted in getting some action from the Secretary of the Treasury, which we have sought but did not get until to-day. In the next Congress perhaps we will feel it our duty to do away with all the Subtreasuries.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Texas in favor of the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. No; I am opposed to the abolition of the Subtreasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time on that side is exhausted. The Chair will recognize some gentleman opposed to the amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may correct a statement that I made in debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for one minute to correct a misstatement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, in making my remarks a little while ago I said that I had had a conversation with Assistant Secretary Newton. I made a mistake; it was Assistant Secretary Malburn.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, there have been so many misstatements of fact made on the floor in regard to the Subtreasury that it is surprising how little some Members know as to the duties of the Subtreasury. For instance, we are told that they are necessary at certain ports to receive the foreign gold that comes in through the customhouses. Now, the foreign gold received as customs receipts does not go to the Subtreasury until it has passed through the assay offices and has been tested. It then may go to the Subtreasury as the storehouse in which to keep it, or it may go to the Treasury or may be kept in the assay office. Other gentlemen say that they will have no vault room. There is nothing proposed here to destroy a single vault, and the authority given in the law creating the Federal reserve banks is ample to take over these storehouses and vaults and use them for governmental purposes wherever necessary.

But, Mr. Chairman, this proposition involves an expenditure of $500,000 a year. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that one or two of them ought to be retained; so when we come to vote on the proposition I shall ask for a division of items, so that we may have a vote on them separately. If any should be retained, which I deny, we can retain them, for there is absolutely no reason why the office at St. Louis, for example, should be continued, except to make a raid on the Treasury to the extent that we appropriate money for that purpose.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. How will the gentleman get a separate vote on the Cincinnati item?

Mr. GOOD. The Cincinnati item has been passed. We had a separate vote on that.

Mr. GARDNER. How will the gentleman get it in the House?

Mr. GOOD. We can not get it in the House; I was talking about the committee. Now, the echo of the speeches made by Members on this side of the House not more than six weeks ago has hardly died out in regard to extravagance, in regard to pork, and yet you propose by your vote to-day to vote out of the Treasury about $500,000 a year to accomplish no good purpose. No one can point to a single reason why we should retain these Subtreasuries, especially those in cities where we have a Federal reserve bank.

The Secretary of the Treasury was asked not to point out which ones should be abolished, but the direction of Congress was that he should report to Congress which ones should be retained and the reason why they should be retained. He knows that there is no reason why a single one should be retained, especially if it is in a city that has a Federal reserve bank, and that is the reason for his silence. I was surprised at the distinguished gentleman from Virginia making such a weak and lame excuse for the Secretary of the Treasury. This law requiring him to report on this matter was passed on the 10th of May, signed by the President on the 10th of May, and it commanded and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress which ones we should retain, which ones we should appropriate for, and to this date he has not reported to Congress. Yet that direction was that he should report at the beginning of this session of Congress. My friends, if it takes the Secretary of the Treasury that long to make a report, how long will it take to abolish these useless offices?

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I have made no lame or impotent excuse in regard to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. If I said the gentleman from Virginia, I was in error. I intended to say the gentleman from Tennessee, and not the gentleman from Virginia. I referred to our honored chairman. It is the gentleman from Tennessee that made the lame and weak excuse in regard to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wish to say that the gentleman from Tennessee made no lame and weak excuse. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. Was it a strong excuse?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What I stated was that the Secretary of the Treasury, as we all know, has for many weeks been engaged on official duties with the Farm Loan Board in the designation of districts.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; but this law was passed on the 10th of May, 1916. Has he been out of his office all the time interviewing and investigating the question of the Farm Loan Board, and if he has, how long is it going to take him to finish his investigation and make a report?

And now I shall ask the gentleman a question, Whether it was not before the committee, at least informally, that Mr. Malburn had reported to the Secretary of the Treasury in favor of abolishing these offices, and the Secretary of the Treasury had not acted upon his report?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. As I remember it, it was stated that Mr. Malburn had made a report to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the Secretary of the Treasury had that report under consideration, but that owing to the fact that he had been necessarily out of the city upon official business in connection with the Farm Loan Board, he had not had an opportunity to act upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What the report is I do not know.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the question is whether or not we ought to abolish these offices, especially where the Federal Reserve System has already established a bank. I feel somewhat sorry for Baltimore in a way, but Baltimore has not been injured by the action of this House. It was by the action of the board that violated the rules of common decency and made Baltimore go to Richmond to transact its business. Mr. Chairman, when we come to appropriate money here for these offices we are appropriating money for work that is done by another branch of the Government which we have created. It is easy apparently for the Democratic side of the House to create new offices, but when you commence to abolish those that are unnecessary, those useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people, it seems a very different thing. Here is an opportunity to lop off the useless offices which you promised to abolish.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this discussion will accomplish some good. Anyone who has listened to it must be convinced that these Subtreasuries are useless and unnecessary. They probably in their time served a purpose, but that purpose has ceased. Since the adoption of the Federal Reserve System there has not been any necessity for them. My colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, has informed the House that these Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board are overburdened with work. I take issue with that statement. The Federal Reserve Board may be exceedingly busy in devising ways and means of putting that law into effect in the best manner. That I have no doubt is true. But I do know that the Federal reserve banks throughout the country are doing but very little actual business. They are doing so little that their stockholders are getting no dividends. Those banks have beautiful buildings, magnificent offices, wise-looking and high-salaried officials, and large vaults, but very little funds in them, and very little actual business is being transacted by the Federal reserve banks. Moreover, it is not intended that there should be any business transacted by them that can be done by the member banks. Let us be honest. The main purpose of having the Federal reserve bank and the system is as a guaranty to our banking institutions—to the member banks. That is the purpose of it. We may as well face it now and admit it. The member banks do not want the Federal reserve bank to do any extensive business. It is not intended that these Federal reserve banks should. Therefore, I say, let us give them something to do, and save this $500,000 that we are paying for our Subtreasuries. We may not be just ready to do it, but it is not a bad plan to make a start. We will call the attention of the public to the fact that this House is in favor of taking some step in the interest of economy, and there never was a step that was any clearer or plainer than the step that we are taking toward abolishing Subtreasuries that are unnecessary and useless.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman said that the Federal reserve banks were useful only as a guaranty. Does he not think that it is a pretty expensive thing to go to all of that expense in order to get a guaranty?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. No; I do not. Every man who holds a dollar's worth of property has paid out vast sums in insurance to protect himself against loss of that property, and the Federal Reserve System is nothing more or less than an insurance system that guarantees to the banker that when he takes any paper over his counter in order to accommodate the business of the country, he can take that paper to the Federal reserve bank and exchange it for currency with which to pay his depositors. That is a fundamental function of the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not the gentleman think some system ought to be devised so that these banks can pay expenses?

Mr. GLASS. So that what banks shall pay expenses?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. They are not intended to be money-making institutions. Of course, we should run every institution on a paying basis if that be possible, and this will help to put this on a paying basis, and it will take away from the Treasury a burden which it is carrying, an unnecessary burden.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, my colleague knows that all of the banks are paying expenses.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Are they paying dividends?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; all but two of them.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is the Minneapolis bank paying dividends?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is only very recently that they have been paying expenses.

Mr. GLASS. Not very recently. When the statement was made a year ago that they were not paying expenses, they were paying expenses, and the statement was based on utter ignorance of the fact.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I will tell the gentleman how they are paying expenses. The member banks that own the Federal reserve banks see to it that there is just enough paper discounted at the Federal reserve banks to pay expenses, and a little more, so as to make a creditable record.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the time is about up, and in conclusion I want to say, in addition to what has been said for abolishing these Subtreasuries, just this:

I have not heard a reason assigned by anybody as to why any of these Subtreasuries should be retained. I have heard statements made that it is hasty legislation. The Federal Reserve Banking System has now been in operation in the neighborhood of three years. It was intended at that time that the Federal reserve banks should take over the funds of the Federal Government and was so stated and urged and argued as one of the reasons why that system should be adopted. Our system of currency and our system of conducting our finances was assailed on every side from every corner and by every political party, and it was not a political issue. This is no political issue now, and aside from the little advantage that is obtained by the banks in the particular city in which the Subtreasury is located not a single benefit inures to the benefit of the people of the United States by keeping these Subtreasuries. No gentleman has yet said that it would benefit anyone except to serve the convenience of the locality, and not a single function which is now performed by these Subtreasuries for the banks but can be performed by the Federal reserve banks. There is a duty which is performed now by these Subtreasuries which is not altogether performed by the Federal reserve banks in the deposit of gold coin as a reserve against gold notes. That is a fixed deposit of gold bar against the currency of the United States Government known as gold notes.

Now, the property of all the Subtreasuries belongs to the United States Government, and under the law referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which passed this great piece of legislation, who declared that the language is broad enough to take over the property, and, as was suggested by the gentleman from California, this physical property could be taken over with the gold bar that is locked up in the Treasury as a fixed guaranty against the gold notes, it need not be disturbed from year to year, but the floating currency that may be needed for redemption can just as easily be done by a department of the Federal Government in the Federal Reserve Banking System; and that was what was urged at the time this bill passed, and everybody inveighed against the old subtreasury system which we had at the time this law went into effect.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one moment?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. PHELAN. Can the gentleman point out any authority in any law that permits the gold that is held as a reserve against the gold certificates to be kept in any place except in the United States Treasury or a Subtreasury?

Mr. SISSON. No; and I will say that I do not want it kept in any place except in the United States Treasury. I do not ask that it be kept anywhere else, but I want it to be kept right there. But this is part of the Treasury system of the United States——

Mr. PHELAN. What is?

Mr. SISSON. By making these banks depositories; and, in addition to that, these Subtreasury vaults could be used by the Federal Reserve System as vaults are now used, without the enormous expense, and the gentleman from Boston knows it.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield for one moment?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Boston, like all gentlemen from those cities where they have these Subtreasuries, has not sufficient reasons for inveighing against any step in this direction.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman from Boston does not make the statement. I take it, the gentleman refers to me as the gentleman from Boston, but I do not come from Boston——

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman only comes from Massachusetts. I want to relieve him of the odium. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELAN. If the gentleman will wait one moment. I want the gentleman to point out by what authority he says this money can be kept in the Federal reserve banks. I dispute that statement, and I want him to point it out. He has not yet pointed it out except by assertion.

Mr. SISSON. I am not going to qualify here as an expert on the law which the gentleman himself helped to pass, but Government deposits——

Mr. PHELAN. This is not a Government deposit.

Mr. SISSON. Let me read the law to the gentleman. Will he sit down and be good?

SEC. 15. The moneys held in the general fund of the Treasury, except the 5 per cent fund for the redemption of outstanding national-bank notes and the funds provided in this act for the redemption of Federal reserve notes, may, upon the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be deposited in Federal reserve banks, which banks, when required by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall act as fiscal agents of the United States; and the revenues of the Government or any part thereof may be deposited in such banks, and disbursements may be made by checks drawn against such deposits.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. PHELAN. The point is that the fact that the law specifically provides that these funds shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury is not necessarily changed when we gave the Secretary of the Treasury power to make somebody his fiscal agent. If he did, it would permit these trust funds to be placed in national banks.

Mr. SISSON. The Secretary of the Treasury now has authority to put this money in these banks; that is all I have been asking for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. Now, they speak of this as being hasty legislation and illy considered legislation. Why, Mr. Chairman, we asked the Secretary of the Treasury to give us a reason why any of these should be retained, and there must be no great and overshadowing reason for not abolishing these Subtreasuries, for at the last session of Congress, after having hearings that extended over several days to have them assign a reason, they gave us as a reason then why we should not abolish these Subtreasuries at that time that it ought not to be hastily and ought not to be illy considered.

And yet all these months have intervened, and no word has come to this committee, no syllable, and no suggestion, and the only intimation that has come to this House was the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, that he had understood that it ought not to be done inadvisedly. I do not know why the Congress of the United States should not have had that information. And when I hear men make the statement on this floor that we ought to wait until we get the message and the recommendation—the permission, if you please, from these departments—that Congress may legislate, and that we should have the wheels of progress locked until we get recommendations from the departments, the servants of Congress and not their masters, I think it is high time, if Congress takes that position, that we adjourn sine die and let somebody else come who has capacity to legislate for the country. [Applause.] We were elected from our districts to legislate, and it was not the bureau chiefs or the head of any department appointed to office that have the right to say that you must remain silent and dumb until you hear from some mighty department in this case. Such things as that make me sick. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask the gentleman what his answer is to the statement of the gentleman from Virginia as to the capacity——

Mr. SISSON. You need not finish the question. I understand what it is.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. You are a mind reader?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; I am. Your mind is so bright that it shines out through your eyes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. What does the gentleman say as to the capacity of the Federal reserve banks who hold this money?

Mr. SISSON. The capacity is the same to the cubic inch now as it will be if you vote to retain these Subtreasuries. It will not shrink one iota. Every reserve bank shall have power to do, what? To deal in gold coin and bullion at home or abroad, to make loans thereon, exchange Federal reserve notes for gold coin or gold certificates, to contract for loans of gold and gold bullion, and so on, and giving therefor the necessary security, including hypothecation of United States bonds and other securities, and so on. Here the Federal reserve bank has the authority that gives them the right to hold the gold which they may have, just so they keep their——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. So with all that has been said and done I find there are two classes of people served here, and but two. Those are the people engaged in banking business in the fortunate city that enjoys this special privilege; and although the special privilege is now useless to the balance of the country, they want to continue to enjoy it. In addition to that, there are those men who happen to draw the salaries. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] seems to believe that it would be a crime to take an office away from a man when you have taken all the necessary duties from the office. My friend from California urged this as a reason why we should retain the Subtreasuries. Is it possible that this Congress will take the people's money and pay it out to men who perform no service to the Government? Has that gotten to be the policy of the Members of this House? Surely not. So, when they ask me if this is hasty and ill-timed, I will say, did we not discuss the Federal reserve-bank proposition here for almost a month? Were we not given to understand that immediately the Secretary of the Treasury would take all these over? Were we not given to understand about a year ago that they would be able to tell us what to do a year from then?

Your committee did not act hastily. We waited for them to assign to us some good reason why they should be retained, and to this hour we have heard no good reasons. And if we have no good reasons ought we not in justice to ourselves and our constituencies to abolish these institutions, the public use of which no man has been able to tell? When will it happen? Suppose immediately upon the passage of this act through the House the officials of the Treasury Department would get busy? Here is the very efficient, the magnificent chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Not a single Member on that side of the House would resist the passage of the necessary legislation, and I know that no Democrat would, to put into operation this system—not one. And it could be done in a few hours, because they would simply ask for whatever little additional legislation they might need. But I believe the chairman of the committee stated it fairly when he said he did not believe they needed any additional legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it wise to strike this provision out of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from New York will suspend a minute, the Chair would like to state that all time against the motion to strike out has been used. There are eight minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that some of the Subtreasuries can be abolished. I do not know which ones. The Treasury Department should furnish the information that Congress needs.

There are some things that can not be transferred to the Federal reserve banks. We have in the United States about $1,800,000,000 in gold. Against much of that gold is issued gold certificates, and that gold must be held in the Treasury of the United States. It can not be put in the Federal reserve banks.

We imported last year $494,000,000 in gold, and exported $90,000,000 in gold. The great bulk of it was through the port of New York. There is in the Subtreasury in the city of New York more than $113,000,000 gold coin and $500,000,000 in other form. If it is not kept there, it must be kept in Washington or in a Subtreasury at some other place. However, it must be kept in New York. The settlement of international balances of trade, international exchange, must be made in gold at the port of New York. If it is not kept there, it will have to be shipped back and forth, with the cost of doing so. That situation is not the same at all of the Subtreasuries. It may be true in some of the seaport cities. It may be true as to Philadelphia. I am not able to say.

It is possible that it may be necessary to maintain a Subtreasury at Chicago and one at San Francisco, not because the ordinary fiscal operations of the Government can not be performed by the Federal Reserve System, but because it may be absolutely essential for the transaction of the commerce of the country that a certain volume of gold should be held on the Pacific coast and in the interior of the country. It is not necessary to maintain one at Baltimore, because of its proximity to Washington. It is only a difference of 40 miles, and if it were not for the fact that the business interests of Baltimore believe—whether justifiably or not—that a great injustice has been done them, their protest should not be heeded for a minute. Yet it is not highly desirable to make a great element of the business world believe that it has been unjustly treated.

But whatever is done about some of the Subtreasuries, I repeat in my opinion some of them can be abolished. I say this, not because I come from the State of New York and the commercial transactions of the country make it imperative that there must be gold in New York——

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from New York may have the balance of the time. He is entertaining, if not instructive. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the allotted time, two minutes, be occupied by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. About ninety millions have been carried at San Francisco, and I forget how much in Chicago.

Although, in my opinion, some of these Subtreasuries can and should be abolished, and ought to be abolished as a matter of good administration; yet I do not believe that the House of Representatives, without the information that is imperative in order to act intelligently, should proceed to abolish them. I hope that the result of this discussion will be to produce from the Treasury Department what ought to be furnished—a comprehensive report upon the entire subject.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman states that some of them ought to be abolished. What ones ought to be abolished, in the opinion of the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said "in my opinion."

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In my opinion—and I do not know that I am justified in attempting to determine—I said that I had no doubt that there must be retained one on the Atlantic seaboard, one on the Pacific seaboard, and one in the interior of the country, and I assume that that would be Chicago, because it is the biggest industrial center. I know that it must be retained in New York.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman would not say that the one at Philadelphia should be retained, where we have a Federal reserve bank?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I do not know sufficiently about the settlement in international exchange at Philadelphia, although I assume that most of it is done in New York. Only a few years ago fifty millions of gold were shipped from Philadelphia to New York. Trade settlements can not be made in gold certificates or in any form of currency. They must be made in the basic metal, the money of the world. They must be made in gold. We ship gold from the port of New York just as we ship wheat, and it must be done not in the interest of New York but in order to enable the commerce of the United States to be transacted with foreign nations.

I hope we shall not do what undoubtedly would not be a wise thing at this time and in this way. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time is expired. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SISSON: Page 60, strike out all paragraphs beginning with line 3 on page 60 down to and including line 26 on page 61.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks for a division. The Clerk will report the first substantive proposition in the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, beginning with line 3, strike out the paragraph from line 3 to line 9, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to that part of the amendment that has just been read.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 94.

So that portion of the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next substantive proposition in the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, strike out from line 10 down to and including line 3 of page 61.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to that part of the amendment that has just been read.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SISSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 110.

So that portion of the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 4 and ending on line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SISSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 95.

So that portion of the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 14 and ending on line 20.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BORLAND. A division!

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 92.

So that portion of the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 21, and ending on line 26.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were—ayes 30, noes 84.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Subtreasuries which were stricken out, which were, I believe, Boston and Chicago, be restored to the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent for one minute to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I stated at the outset that I thought all these Subtreasuries ought to be dealt with just alike, and, having made that statement on the floor, I make the request now in good faith, that these Subtreasuries which were stricken out be restored to the bill, and I hope that the request will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the paragraph stricken out be reinstated. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. The House will have full control over the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the request is refused. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Philadelphia Mint: Superintendent, $4,500; engraver, $4,000; assayer, $3,000; superintendent melting and refining department, $3,000; superintendent coining department, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant assayer, $2,200; cashier, $2,500; bookkeeper, $2,500; assistant bookkeeper, $2,000; deposit weigh clerk, $2,000; assistant cashier, $1,800; curator, $1,800; clerks—1 $2,000, 1 $1,700, 8 at $1,600 each, 1 $1,500, 6 at $1,400 each, 1 $1,300, 3 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each; in all, $68,600.

For wages of workmen and other employees, $315,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] advise me whether the department estimated for an increase in the pay of the superintendent of the coining department, which is now $2,500?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; they ask for an increase of $250.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to say that my information is that the superintendent of the coining department, who has responsibilities equal with those of the superintendents of the melting and refining departments, who receive $3,000 each, is underpaid at $2,500, in view of the enormous increase of business that has come to the Philadelphia Mint recently to meet the demand for small coin throughout the country. If this matter appeals to the committee at all, and if they will accept an amendment for an increase of $250 as requested by the department, I will offer that amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the superintendents of coining in the Denver Mint and the San Francisco Mint receive only $2,500, and the committee felt that it was not a proper thing to discriminate as to positions involving the same kind of services and the same amount of responsibility.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have all these superintendents of coining been required to keep at work until midnight, as the one in Philadelphia has been and is?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Director of the Mint states, if my recollection serves me, that there has been more overtime possibly at Denver than in any other mint. They certainly have been working overtime, with two or three shifts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Evidently the committee have had the matter under consideration and would make a point of order if I should offer the amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it would be useless to offer the amendment at the present time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boise, Idaho, assay office: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $4,200.

For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,200.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GANDY: Page 64, after line 16, insert:

"Deadwood, S. Dak., assay office: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; clerk, $1,000; in all, $4,000.

"For wages of workmen and other employees, $2,000.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,500."

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment which I have just offered, I want to say to the Members of the House that the Deadwood assay office is an old-established one.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that in his amendment he has asked for a greater amount for contingent expenses than was actually estimated for the coming fiscal year. The estimate calls for $1,000, and his amendment would carry $1,500.

Mr. GANDY. I will state to the gentleman that I drew that in accordance with the law of last year. I have no objection to changing it, and I ask unanimous consent to change the allowance for contingent expenses in the amendment from $1,500 to $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, $1,000.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, this is an old-established assay office, right in the heart of one of the real gold-mining communities in this Nation. For a number of years this office stood first in the class of assay offices that were referred to as the smaller ones. There are four very large ones and seven that have been in a sort of smaller class. Up to 1913 or 1914 this office stood first of these seven. Then, because the appropriation in the bill of 1914 was reduced, a lot of the business from the larger companies out there was forced to be sent to other assay offices, and since that time has not been handled in the Deadwood office. In speaking of that proposition in his annual report for 1914 the Director of the Mint said:

The differences between the House of Representatives and the Senate over the policy of maintaining the western assay offices resulted last year in a compromise upon appropriations that was satisfactory to neither body and inconsistent with good administration.

But, even with the reduced appropriation, the office still is handling a wonderful business. We have just passed in this bill the office at Carson, and the Deadwood office does twice the business that is done by the office at Carson. We have passed the office at Boise, and the office at Deadwood does practically the same business as that at Boise.

Then, referring to another matter, there are the individual assays, where the little prospector brings in his piece of rock to have it assayed, to find out whether or not he has struck a "find," as they call it. These assays are known as dollar assays. In 1912 this office made 275 such assays; in 1913, 547; in 1914, 687; in 1915, 608. For that year the figures are available for the rest of the offices, and all of the other six offices in this class made 330 assays of individual ore for prospectors. So that this office at Deadwood made almost twice the number of the other six in its class combined. In 1916, in the year ending July 1, this office made 778 such assays, whereas the other six offices in this class made 898, or, in other words, the Deadwood office made practically as many individual assays as all the rest combined.

In this spot of country, relatively speaking, no larger than your hand as compared to the great Nation we have, since gold was discovered 40 years ago this year there has been taken out in gold alone the magnificent total of $192,693,945; and then to that should be added the silver, the tungsten, and other metals that are mined with the gold. To abolish this assay office would be a serious blow to this mining community, to the smaller companies that take their clean-up and their bricks over to the assay office close at hand, get their money on it to meet the pay roll. The larger concerns are not involved; they are to-day sending their business to the larger assay offices, because this office has not for years had an appropriation sufficient to handle the business. I trust that the membership of this House will not cripple this mining community by taking away the facilities for having their assays made close at home quickly and by governmental officials in whom they have absolute confidence.

Let me say in conclusion that this office for five years has cost, net, $17,922.04; or, in other words, for the five years past this office has cost the Government $3,584.41 a year, where we have been turning out almost eight millions of gold a year in that community. I ask the membership of the House to continue this office as it has been continued for years, an instrument of good in the mining community, an institution that means much to us in the mining canyons of the Black Hills. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is another instance of how difficult it is to abolish an office, even though there may be no real and sufficient reason for its continuance. I am not going into any discussion as to the general necessity of assay offices, except to make this declaration, that there is no member of this committee who can show to this House any real reason why any of these assay offices should be maintained except in the interest of a few who may come to deposit their ore and have it assayed so that they may quickly secure gold for it.

Now, the question is whether or not you will continue these offices and appropriations necessary to maintain them in the interest of the few who come to the assay office to have their ore assayed at the expense of the great body of the people, or will you require them to send their bullion to the mint, where it can be properly assayed, at their own expense.

We asked the Director of the Mint, Mr. von Engelken, when he was before the committee recently, why it was necessary to maintain these assay offices, and the only explanation that was given to the committee was that it was a convenience for a few who can deposit their bullion there. We asked why it was that the same men could not send their bullion to the mint at Denver and the mint at San Francisco and have it assayed there. The answer was that it would mean two or three or four days' delay in getting their money. He said it would take two days to send the bullion to Denver from the assay office, and a day to have it assayed, and two days for the check to get back to the miner. That was the only real reason advanced as to why any of the assay offices should be maintained.

You gentlemen will remember a session or two ago that the House by an overwhelming vote voted to discontinue all the assay offices except one at New York and the one at Seattle, but that they were subsequently put back in the Senate. When the new Director of the Mint, Mr. von Engelken, was before the committee I made this statement to him:

I do not know whether you are familiar with the discussion that has been going on year after year for the past four or five years in regard to these assay offices and some of the mints, for instance, this mint at Carson City, but there has been a disposition on the part of a great many Members of Congress—in fact, on at least one occasion—and I am not sure but on two occasions—the House voted to abolish all of these assay offices except the ones at Seattle, New York, and Helena, Mont. The House, by a pretty good majority, voted to abolish them. They were restored in the Senate and finally carried in the bill. That was done on the idea that a great number of these assay offices and a mint like this one at Carson City really performs no adequate service to either the Government or the people that could not be performed by the other assay offices and our mint at Denver—

And so forth.

And this was Mr. von Engelken's reply:

That is very true; if I were in the House I would vote the same way on that same proposition.

Now, I am going to ask gentlemen of the committee, in view of the statement of the Director of the Mint, are you going to vote an extra appropriation of $7,500 on the people that you represent and the people that I represent? The Director of the Mint has told you that if he was a Member of the House he would vote to cut out these assay offices.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. Would it not take expense to make the assay anywhere else—an extra expense?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; no extra expense.

Mr. GANDY. The office at Deadwood is loaded up; it is at a point where they have to refuse bullion because they are doing all that they have the money to handle. Now, another proposition. It does not cost $7,500 because the receipts taken in reduce that cost.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, let us see about the receipts of the Deadwood office. The gentleman says they received bullion amounting to over $661,000 last year. He says that they do more business than is done at the assay office at Carson. That is true in point of value of the bullion that is deposited, but let us see how many more people are accommodated at Carson than at Deadwood. Last year there were only 97 deposits made at the Deadwood assay office, and valued at the amount stated. What was the income received? The income was $2,033.63. What was the expense to the Government? The expense was $6,789.45—more than three times the amount of the income received from the office—with only 97 deposits. That is a reduction in the amount of business from the preceding year because during the preceding year 107 deposits were made. There is a falling off in the business.

At Carson last year there were 612 deposits. It is true those 612 deposits were only valued at $324,000, but that shows that the small miner was being benefited at Carson, and that these deposits of 97 amounting to over $661,000 were probably deposits from great mining companies, which would otherwise be compelled to send their bullion to our mints at their own expense and in order to secure gold in exchange. That is the case as to Deadwood. That is the reason the committee comes in here with the proposition to abolish it, and I want to appeal to you gentlemen of the committee, in the interest of economy, in the interest of saving some of the expenses of this Government, that where you find an office such as this that is absolutely unnecessary, where the Director of the Mint tells you in plain language that if he was acting under your oath and obligation he would vote to abolish it, that there can be absolutely no excuse for us to fail to register our vote in favor of abolishing this office at Deadwood.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. The Director of the Mint informed the gentleman who just spoke, in response to his question, that the big concern there did not use this office; that their bullion goes to New York City.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He stated that the Homestake Co., which I think is your largest company—and I asked him specifically with reference to that company—sent its bullion to New York City, and that is but another indication that this assay office is not necessary. I did not ask him about any other company. I do not know that you have any other company there; but I do say this, that the fact that you had only 97 deposits at Deadwood, and that they were valued at $661,000, compared with the fact that there were 612 deposits at Carson, valued at $324,000, would seem to indicate that the small miner is patronizing Carson to a greater extent than Deadwood. I do not say that in defense of the assay office at Carson, because, in my judgment, all of these assay offices, except one at Seattle and one at New York, could be abolished without doing a public injustice to anyone; but if any are to be maintained, then by all means keep those which afford some aid and convenience to the little fellow rather than the big gold-mining companies.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak a few words in support of this amendment. It has frequently been said that the Black Hills country, comprising an area of about 100 square miles, is the richest land in the world. The gold that comes from these mines constitutes one-eightieth of all the gold produced in the world since the discovery of America by Columbus. These mines are now at this time producing one-twelfth of all of the gold and silver produced in the United States, Alaska, and the Philippine Islands. These mines produce more than double the value of the gold and silver that is produced in the State of Montana. They produce nearly as much gold and silver as is produced in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and the Philippine Islands combined. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that this assay office has been largely crippled by taking away the funds necessary to operate it. The greatest mine in the world is located at Lead, in the State of South Dakota. That mine is not patronizing this assay office because it is not thoroughly equipped to do the work, because you have reduced the expenditures year by year, until now you in the last appropriation bill gave us only about $7,500 for this assay office, and when you take into consideration the receipts it is being operated at a loss of only about $3,000 a year. For more than 20 years this institution has been fostered and maintained by the Government. It has performed a wonderful mission to the people of that community. We have within the Black Hills enough gold to pave the streets of every village, town, and city in South Dakota, and why should the Congress of the United States at this time throw it out root and branch? It seems to me that if we take this position we are discriminating against one of the greatest States of the Union, so far as silver and gold production is concerned. Our State stands fourth in gold and silver production in the catalogue of States, and why should we be discriminated against and be refused the small appropriation that is necessary to sustain this institution? This assay office is in the interest of the small prospector, the small mining man in that region of the country. It seems to me it would be a discrimination to do it. If you want to abolish one, then why not abolish all of them? Why do you come here and seek to discriminate against this institution that is in a State that stands fourth among the States that produce silver and gold? I trust this amendment in the interest of fair and honest dealing will have the support of this committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 64, noes 11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs, wastage in the melting and refining department, and loss on sale of sweeps arising from the treatment of bullion, $76,000.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAYS: Page 65, line 10, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Salt Lake City, Utah, assay office: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, chief clerk, and cashier, $1,800; for wages of workmen and other employees, $1,500; for incidental and contingent expenses, $500. In all, $3,800."

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to put the same provision in the bill that exists in the law at the present time, namely, an appropriation of $3,800 for the assay office at Salt Lake City. The gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee have not given a chance to anyone who may be opposed to the abolition of this office to appear. In reading the hearings I have noticed that they asked only the Director of the Mint to give testimony in regard to the assay offices, and it is well known that the Director of the Mint is in favor of abolishing all of the assay offices except some central place like New York.

Why discriminate? Why not abolish them all except the one in New York, as the Director of the Mint suggests? Why leave in the law the offices at Carson City, at Boise, at Helena, and at other points and abolish only Deadwood and Salt Lake City offices? Rather should these offices be given sufficient help, and the business would soon vastly increase. The assayer at Salt Lake must act also as melter, as cashier, as chief clerk. He has only one man to help him, and necessarily the work of the office is limited. Many who would otherwise do so fail to patronize the office on this account.

The Chief of the Geological Survey is opposed to the abolition of this office or any other of these assay offices. He said that it is of service to the Geological Survey to have these offices in the localities in which they are now situated. Salt Lake City is the real mining center of the United States. Within a radius of 700 miles of Salt Lake City there is more gold and silver, copper, lead, zinc, and other valuable metals produced than within a similar radius in the world; and it seems to me it would be small business to abolish an assay office serving the people of a great mining center like that. Last year Utah stood first, next to Arizona, among all the mining States of the Union in the value of its metal output, producing over $55,000,000. Colorado produced $33,000,000 worth of ores; Idaho over $30,000,000 worth of ores; Nevada produced something over $30,000,000 worth of ores; Montana produced $47,000,000 worth of these ores. This year, from reports, I judge that Utah will excel all other States in such production. This is real wealth, and they are paying an income tax upon the mining corporations of Utah of over $400,000 a year. And yet these gentlemen, particularly the gentleman from Mississippi, say we are taxing their constituents to pay $3,800 for maintaining an assay office for the convenience of this great mining region of the country.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I think the gentleman ought to know before he makes a statement of that kind——

Mr. MAYS. Perhaps the gentleman had better ask me whether I will yield before he instructs me.

Mr. SISSON. I did address the Chair and asked the gentleman whether he would yield.

Mr. MAYS. I will yield.

Mr. SISSON. I say the gentleman ought to know what he is talking about, because he certainly does not seem to know his friends in reference to this particular item. I think the gentleman ought to go a little further before he makes a statement of that kind.

Mr. MAYS. That statement was made; of course, if it was not meant, I am glad to apologize for giving the inference. With regard to the Director of the Mint's testimony, which the chairman of the subcommittee quoted here so freely, I want to quote one thing from his testimony before this committee myself. The question was asked him why he would recommend the continuance of the office at Helena, for instance, or Carson City, or Boise City, and would ask that the office at Salt Lake City should be abolished, and this was his answer. He said, "There is a demand for the service at Helena, but you see Salt Lake City is within gunshot of Denver." That shows how much geography the Director of the Mint may know. He may be competent to be Director of the Mint, but he certainly does not know much geography. Gentlemen of the committee, Salt Lake City is 742 miles from Denver, and it takes 20 and some odd hours to go from Denver to Salt Lake City, practically as far as from Chicago to New York, and yet he says it is within gunshot of Denver, Colo. I believe it would be pursuing a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy to destroy this office. The prospectors especially out there want this office to remain there. Five hundred and fourteen dollar assays have been made this year, according to the report of the assayer, for prospectors who bring in their rock to be examined. The prospector is benefactor of his race, a creator of wealth, but generally contributes to the wealth of others and dies poor himself. He should not be forgotten. It would cost them to go to a private assayer from $3 to $4 for each assay, and they do not have the same confidence in the tests as they have in the Government assay office. When these great mining States are paying into the Treasury of this country many millions and pouring into the lap of the United States many hundreds of millions of dollars of real wealth it would be, it seems to me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAYS. I would ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYS (continuing). It would be a poor policy to refuse to continue the assay office in Salt Lake City, the real center of the mining industry of this country. [Applause.]

I insert statement of Assayer Gammon and letter from the Director of the Geological Survey.

SALT LAKE, UTAH, December 9, 1916.

JAMES H. MAYS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Office should be continued. Bullion deposits increasing. Ore assays will double coming year. Small expense, geographical center. In Federal building, saving expense. Earnings $526 on bullion; ore assays, $514; old material, $96. Two hundred prospectors served in all western mining States. Seventy bullion depositors accommodated. Assays made for Land Office, also Forestry Service at Ogden. Large shipper in eastern Nevada sending $10,000 bars to this office. Facts in detail by mail.

GAMMON, Assayer.

STATEMENT OF ASSAYER IN CHARGE.

The assay offices were created primarily to purchase gold and silver bullion and serve the immediate vicinity without the delay incident to shipping to a distant mint and waiting two weeks for a check on the United States Treasurer.

Salt Lake at one time melted, assayed, and purchased bullion amounting to $100,000 a month, when eight men were employed with an appropriation of $16,000 annually.

Now this office is down to two men (Mr. J. L. May and myself), with an appropriation of only $3,800 and earnings of about $1,000, leaving a net cost to the Government of only $2,800. This is very little to give to the mining public served by this office. Though we only purchased about $50,000 last year, the receipts are increasing.

The Director of the Mint has also requested that the office make ore assays for the prospector, such as lead, copper, zinc, iron, gold, silver, tin, and tungsten. This has met with the hearty approval of the prospector, and I receive ore assays from Arizona, New Mexico, Alaska, California, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, and Colorado. For this we make a charge of $1 a metal.

The argument might be raised that the Government is competing with the private assayer, but from talks that I have had with the members of eight assay firms here their business does not depend on work from the prospector, from whom they have so much trouble to collect. Their money is made from mine examination, samples, control samples (representing shipments to smelters), and smelter analyses. At any rate, this is not the only instance the Government has competed, as parcel post is in competition with the express companies, etc.

Also a point might be raised that when the offices were created that they were to be limited to melting, assaying, and purchasing gold bullion. Placer dust and grains and nuggets are merely high-grade ores, and it has always been the intention to handle such accumulations of the prospector.

If the geographical location of Salt Lake could be considered as a railroad center and equidistant from the mints of Denver and San Francisco, the proper and sane thing to do for economy's sake would be to abolish all the other minor assay offices and make Salt Lake the central and geographical assay office.

All the other assay offices have their own buildings to keep up, and are expensive in the way of heating, lighting, and the expense of employing watchmen, etc.

Of course, other States wish to keep their offices, and probably such facts could not be used against them.

This office has no watchman, and the contingent fund of $500 is ample for supplies, chemicals, etc., being favorably situated in the post-office building.

Even if this office was purchasing bullion to the value of $40,000 a month, or at the rate of $500,000 a year, which would seem a good showing to the Appropriation Committee, yet the earnings the office would be credited with—about $700—would be little greater than earnings from ore assays this calendar year ($514), which I expect to double the coming year. Ore assays to the prospector are what the Agricultural Department is to the farmers.

The Director of the Mint has directed the minor assay office to ship bullion by parcel post, which has meant a saving of 75 per cent over the old method of shipping by express.

The Winnemucca gold mines, of eastern Nevada, and C. J. Smith, of Blair, Idaho, have decided to send all their bullion to this office, as it is a more convenient railroad center. This amounts to $10,000 a month at least, if not more.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a year ago had a statement that I myself did not perform any work, which is untrue, as I not only do all the bullion and ore assaying but keep and check certain records and do all the typewriting since they eliminated my clerk.

CHAS. GAMMON, Assayer.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, December 13, 1916.

Hon. JAMES H. MAYS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MAYS: In reply to your letter of December 12:

The interest of the Geological Survey in the various Government mints and assay offices is mainly in the records kept of gold and silver deposits from mining operations in the respective territories served by them and in other information received relative to those operations. In the work of official compilation of gold and silver statistics the Bureau of the Mint and the Geological Survey cooperate, both in Washington and in the western mining States. Detailed data from these various Government assay offices have in the past been of assistance to the survey in this respect. It is understood that from the standpoint of the Bureau of the Mint some of these offices have in the past been run at a loss; that is, their working profits were exceeded by their expenses. This is true of many Government institutions, of course, for many are not expected to show cash profits at all. It seems to remain a question whether the continuance of the western assay offices at relatively small expense, perhaps, is not justified from the standpoint of Government interest and encouragement of the local mining industries served. Those offices are purchasers of bullion and make assays for the mining public, I understand, and there is a prevailing tendency to consider a Government assay as final beyond dispute. In these times of greatest activity among the mining districts and of increased output, therefore, the continuance of the offices may possibly be justified on the score of their local convenience as purchasers of bullion and because of their facilities for making assays.

In conclusion, the survey is not in a position to advise definitely the continuance or abandonment of the two assay offices mentioned, but must confine itself to the fact that in the statistical part of its work it has found the records of these offices of some assistance.

Yours, very truly,

GEORGE OTIS SMITH,
Director.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee rose. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope, notwithstanding their evident eagerness to vote money out of the Treasury, gentlemen will at least accord to me the right to make a statement. There may be some gentlemen upon the floor who hold that it is not a serious matter to vote money for offices which the Director of the Mint says are unnecessary. But I insist that the RECORD shall at least show exactly what the Director of the Mint said, and let those gentlemen know that when they vote to retain this proposition they are acting not only contrary to his statement in the hearing, but contrary to the report which he made to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MAYS. Did the gentleman call any mining men who are interested in this section out there for a hearing?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We did not.

Mr. MAYS. Did the gentleman call the Chief of the Geological Survey?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We did not. The Chief of the Geological Survey, Mr. Chairman, has absolutely nothing to do with this office and no control over it, because it is under the Treasury Department. It has absolutely nothing to do with the Department of the Interior or the Geological Survey.

Mr. HOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let me make this statement and then I will yield.

Mr. HOWELL. I just want to ask a single question, and that is, If the committee itself did absolutely ignore the suggestion of the Director of the Mint in providing for any assay offices?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; the committee has not ignored the suggestion of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. HOWELL. And they are voting money out of the Treasury directly contrary to the advice of the Director of the Mint?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. HOWELL. Is not the committee itself directly ignoring the opinion of the Director of the Mint as to these assay offices?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On the contrary, we are not; we are acting now in exact accord with his written report made to Congress.

Mr. HOWELL. Did not he say to the committee, as far as he was concerned, the assay offices perform no useful function and ought all to be abolished?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He said that if he rested under the oath and obligation under which the gentleman from Utah and myself rest as Members of this House, he would vote to abolish them; and yet the gentleman from Utah a moment ago voted to retain the assay office at Deadwood.

Mr. HOWELL. But the chairman of the committee has already laid great stress upon the advice of the Director of the Mint, and I was trying to show that the committee did not place so much reliance upon the recommendation of the director in some of these cases, but, instead, it sought to make invidious discrimination, striking out one or two offices and providing for all the rest.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Committee on Appropriations has brought in a report here on one or two occasions, and a majority of the House voted with that committee to abolish those offices, and the gentleman from Utah stood upon the floor and vigorously, if I remember correctly, opposed the action of the committee in undertaking to abolish them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in all good humor but in perfect seriousness, I want to say that the Committee on Appropriations did not act without consideration in this matter. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] said that we did not send to Utah and have some miners come down here and testify before us as to whether this assay office was necessary. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if there is any person in the world who ought to know and ought to be informed as to the advisability of this assay office it is the Director of the Mint, the man charged with the duty of administering the assay office, and the man who rests under the duty to inform the Congress and the country as to its operation.

I am going to appeal to the Democrats on this side of the House and ask them if they are going to vote for this, notwithstanding the fact that the Director of the Mint said that we ought to abolish the office? It is no more to me than to you, gentlemen. In standing here I am representing what I believe to be right and in the interest of economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, what does the Director of the Mint say? He says:

> A third recommendation is that the assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah, be discontinued. The deposits of bullion there are so few and small and the size of the office force so inadequate for business of serious proportions should it be offered, that I can see no need of maintaining it.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not now, but I will yield in a few minutes.

Now, more than that, Mr. Chairman, let us see what the business is at that office. There were 147 deposits for the year ending June 30, 1916. Now, what was their value? The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] spoke a few moments ago in regard to the Deadwood assay office, and commented upon the fact that the deposits at Deadwood were $661,000, and gave you that as the reason why the office should be discontinued.

At Salt Lake the value of the deposits last year was $48,722.28, the coining value of the deposits of bullion that were carried there. Now, what was the income? Listen to this: The income derived from the Salt Lake assay office was $908.69. And what was the outgo? The outgo was $3,844.59.

Gentlemen, there is the record. And I say it is of no more importance to me than it is to any one of you. You rest under the same obligations that I do, and if you care to vote it in it is all right with me. But I have done my duty in presenting the facts to you. I simply wanted you to know that when you vote to retain this office, as a majority of you seem determined to do, that you are doing so in defiance of the report and recommendation of the Director of the Mint, the regular and sworn officer whose duty it is to look after these assay offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 24.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I make a similar request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the Subtreasury this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks which he made on the Subtreasury this morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Chief of Staff: Chief clerk, $2,250; clerks—3 at $2,000 each, 6 at $1,800 each, 9 at $1,600 each, 12 at $1,400 each, 16 at $1,200 each, 10 at $1,000 each; captain of watch, $900; 3 watchmen; gardener, $720; packer, $840; chief messenger, $1,000; messenger; 17 messengers, at $720 each; laborer; 2 laborers, at $600 each; 5 charwomen; in all, $101,210.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves a point of order on the item.

Mr. DENT. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this item has heretofore been carried in this bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It has not.

Mr. DENT. It has been carried in the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not in this form. The clerks appropriated for have been carried in the bill, though not in this form.

Mr. DENT. Substantially in this form?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not by any means.

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think the form in which it is carried in the Army bill conforms at all to the paragraph in this bill.

Mr. DENT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let him make it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a statement?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill last year, when this item was reached in that bill, I took occasion to ask the then chairman of the committee whether he would have any objection to having these clerks carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The then chairman, Judge Hay, admitted that they were properly departmental clerks, and as the item had from the first been so segregated as to separate the departmental from the field clerks he recognized and approved the idea of having them carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Of course the opinion of Judge Hay is not binding upon the present chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and yet his opinion is worthy of consideration as to the administration not only of the War Department but of the Army service, and also the departmental service here in Washington. It was his judgment that these clerks were necessarily a part of the departmental service, just as much as any other bureau clerks in the War Department.

Can the gentleman advance any good reason why they should not be included in the legislative bill, in consonance with good legislation?

Mr. DENT. I will answer the gentleman. I do not recall that the former chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs made that concession. I was not aware of it until the gentleman made his statement. I have the greatest respect in the world for any opinion that the former chairman of the committee entertained, and am disposed to follow it. I repeat, I do not recall that he made that concession, but I know, as a matter of fact, that these clerks are subject under the law to be carried by the Chief of Staff anywhere out into the field at any time. They are not localized clerks here in the District of Columbia. The Chief of Staff can take them anywhere he wants to in the field.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where are they now employed in fact, and where have they been employed in fact?

Mr. DENT. They are in point of fact employed here, but at any time when the Chief of Staff desires to take them somewhere else he has the right to do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this identical question was decided in the House in 1904, shortly after the office of Chief of Staff with its clerks was created by the act of 1903. Mr. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, who was then a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, made a point of order against the appropriation brought in by the Committee on Military Affairs carrying this identical item.

Mr. STAFFORD. Right at that point——

Mr. DENT. Let me finish the statement. He made the point of order that this item ought to be appropriated for by the Committee on Appropriations instead of the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. OLMSTED, of Pennsylvania, was Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and he rendered an opinion that this item should be included in the Army appropriation bill instead of the legislative bill, reported by the Committee on Appropriations; and ever since 1904 this item has been carried in the Army appropriation bill instead of in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether, at the time Mr. UNDERWOOD made that point of order, the paragraph was the same identical paragraph, or was it in fact as it was prior to last year's Army appropriation bill, different, and included the Army field force?

Mr. DENT. No. It was practically the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, "practically"; yes.

Mr. DENT. It was practically the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will examine the item to which Mr. UNDERWOOD raised the objection, he will find that it carried field clerks. They are a part of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. DENT. The point of order was not overruled at that time on that point, but it was because the clerks and employees of the Chief of Staff were subject to removal to the field by the Chief of Staff at any time, and therefore they were subject to Army regulations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the gentleman's authority for the statement that these clerks are subject to be removed with the Army into the field?

Mr. DENT. It is under the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question that—that there is any such law, with all due deference to the gentleman's position as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chief of Staff has the right to detail the field clerks, it is true.

Mr. DENT. In order to bring this matter to a point, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to know where the Committee on Military Affairs stands on this proposition. We have had the Quartermaster General before us on this very subject. We have gone over it, and I do not want to duplicate the work, and I have no desire, so far as I am concerned, to have an Army bill brought in here larger than I can possibly help in order to carry out the law. I am perfectly willing for some other committee to take that responsibility. But I call the attention of the chairman to the fact that in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, section 4182, this identical question was decided in 1904, and ever since then this provision has been carried in the Army appropriation bill, and not in the legislative bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to volume 4, page 700, of Hinds' Precedents. I just want to read a portion of it. I read:

4033. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations over appropriations as related to the jurisdiction of other committees having the power of reporting appropriation bills.

The services of the departments in Washington, except the Agricultural Department, are appropriated for in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which is reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

While the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction to report appropriations, the power to report legislation authorizing appropriations belongs to other committees.

In general, the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of appropriations for all the offices and clerkships in the departments of the Government in Washington.

I am sure that no one will deny that that holding is not supported by all the authorities. Reading again from page 701 of Hinds' Precedents:

While the Committee on Military Affairs report the Army appropriation bill and Military Academy appropriation bill, and also all legislation authorizing new military posts, military parks, new arsenals, soldiers' homes, etc., yet the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of a range of appropriations relating to the Military Establishment. Thus, appropriations for machinery, care, preservation, improvements, etc., of armories and arsenals, for military posts, for military parks, and for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are provided by the Appropriations Committee. Fortifications are, by rule, within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee.

And the same is true of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the appropriations for the Naval Committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama has called your attention to a decision rendered in 1904, on page 773 of volume 4, Hinds' Precedents. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that that decision was rendered on an item which provided—for pay to clerks and messengers at headquarters of divisions and departments and office of the Chief of Staff.

Naturally, there was no way for the Chair or anyone else to segregate the clerks who were going to be employed here in Washington under the office of the Chief of Staff from those who were going to be employed as clerks and messengers at headquarters of divisions in the field, and that was the theory upon which the Chair went at that time. Now, that does not obtain at this time, Mr. Chairman, because the whole situation has been changed. The method of making the appropriations has been changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman this question: Is there any law providing that the Chief of Staff shall keep his office in Washington?

Mr. KAHN. I can answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought probably the gentleman in charge of the bill could answer it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the last Army appropriation bill segregated the employees and provided for a number of clerks, messengers, and watchmen in the following form:

Clerks, messengers, and laborers, office of the Chief of Staff.

And under that heading set forth the appropriation that is sought to be made in this particular bill. Then it followed with a paragraph:

Clerks and messengers for headquarters of the several territorial departments, districts, divisions and brigades, and service schools.

And under that heading set forth the number of clerks and messengers who were to be employed in the field.

Therefore, I say that it must appear to the Chair that these clerks and these messengers and these watchmen are to be employed here in the city of Washington, and that this is a matter for the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again ask the gentleman whether there is any law which provides that the Chief of Staff shall keep his office in Washington or whether it may be moved to other places?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He is here now. His office is in the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. If the occasion should require to-morrow, could he move his headquarters from Washington to some other place, and carry with it the different clerks and other employees provided for in this bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. His office is in Washington. Quarters are assigned to him in the War Department. His permanent place is here in the city of Washington.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will yield right at that point——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. DENT. There is a proviso carried in the last Army appropriation bill, and I do not know how far back it has been carried, and it is in the tentative bill that we are now considering, providing that these men may be moved from place to place.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, I beg to differ with the gentleman. There is no such proviso in this bill.

Mr. DENT. I am talking about the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have the last Army appropriation bill here before me, and I beg to differ with the gentleman. There is no such provision as that. There is this kind if a proviso, which probably the gentleman refers to:

That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of tactical divisions, military departments, brigades, service schools, and office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty in any bureau of the War Department.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman did not read the first part of that provision.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will read it:

Provided, That said clerks, messengers, and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve.

That applies not to the clerks under the Chief of Staff, but to the Army and field clerks and clerks and messengers for the headquarters of the several territorial departments, districts, divisions and brigades, and service schools. I submit, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness, that that provision has absolutely no application to the paragraph preceding, which makes appropriation for clerks and messengers in the office of the Chief of Staff.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MANN. What, then, does the proviso mean?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. What, then, does the proviso to the proviso mean? Here is the first proviso, which relates to "said clerks," and so forth. Then there is a second proviso limiting the first proviso, the second proviso expressly naming the clerks in the office of the Chief of Staff. That proviso is a limitation on the first proviso.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman certainly would not contend that a proviso attached to one paragraph would apply to a preceding paragraph in the bill, without specifically saying so.

Mr. MANN. This proviso is not attached to any paragraph.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, it is a part of that paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is so printed.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The proviso comes in as a separate paragraph, after the paragraph reading "for commutation of quarters and of heat and light." It follows as a separate paragraph, but referring back to the previous paragraph by saying "said clerks," and names specifically all of the offices to which the clerks belong, and one of them is the office of the Chief of Staff. There can be no question about that proviso.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I take it that the reason which actuated the committee in separating this force was the desire to provide commutation of quarters and heat and light. That is a further argument in favor of the position I am taking. It was desired, by making this separation, to provide commutation of quarters and heat and light for those clerks not employed in the city of Washington.

I take it the object of the Military Affairs Committee in undertaking to segregate these clerks and messengers required for headquarters in the War Department was for the purpose of giving to the field clerk commutation of quarters, heat, and light. I can see no other reason that could actuate the committee in segregating the force carried theretofore under general terms.

I contend that the decision cited by the gentleman from Alabama can have no application to the question here, because we are operating under a different form of appropriation entirely.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, the Chief of Coast Artillery, whose clerks were carried under the Army appropriation bills last year and the preceding year, has made his estimate and submitted it to the Committee on Appropriations, and it is contained in this bill. I can see no reason why, if those clerks are to be carried in this bill, these clerks here should not be carried in this bill also.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is bound to concede that the Chief of Staff can be ordered by the President or the Secretary of War anywhere he wants him to go throughout the continental limits of the country. Would the gentleman hold that he could not take his clerks along with him, his messengers, and people he had in his employ?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The President, of course, is the Commander in Chief, and he can always order the Chief of Staff to any point, but the gentleman does not mean to contend that he would take all of his clerks, his watchmen, and his messengers when ordered to some particular detail?

Mr. DENT. He may not take all, but he may take those he needs.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The law allows him to take all the field clerks and the headquarters clerks, but these are not field clerks or headquarters clerks.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the chairman's attention to the act approved February 14, 1903, establishing the General Staff. That act prescribes the duties, the terms of service, the details, restrictions, and exceptions relating to the General Staff. It includes the duties of the Chief of Staff, but nowhere in that act does it locate or attempt to fix the office of the Chief of Staff in Washington. There was a purpose in that, because it might possibly become of prime importance or vital necessity that the Chief of Staff should remove his headquarters to some other place than Washington. If so, are we to have a Chief of Staff elsewhere without a clerical force to assist him, and at the same time to have a considerable clerical force in Washington with nothing to do? That would be the possible and logical result of the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee. There is nothing in the law that fixes the headquarters of the Chief of Staff in Washington, and the necessary clerical force for those headquarters should not be provided for in a bill restricted to appropriations within the District of Columbia.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] assumes that the Committee on Military Affairs segregated these clerks, because some of them were to be employed in Washington and some in the field. The gentleman is mistaken. Under the national-defense act the field clerks were given a new status. They were given commutation of heat and light in addition to their pay, and that is why they were segregated. But the national-defense act provided for new conditions in the General Staff. That act reads that—

Not more than one-half of all the officers detailed in said corps shall at any time be stationed or assigned to or employed upon any duty in or near the District of Columbia.

In other words, the national-defense act says specifically that not over one-half of the officers of the General Staff can remain here in Washington.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, that has reference to the officers. With reference to these clerks, are they not all clerks employed in Washington, and have they not been employed here from year to year?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so. They are doubtlessly subject to detail, to be transferred with the staff officers.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wish the gentleman would point to some law that authorizes the detail of these clerks employed in the city of Washington and in the War Department to be detailed to the field.

Mr. KAHN. I think they have been doing that right straight along.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like the gentleman to furnish some law authorizing the detail. The bill carries an appropriation for field clerks.

Mr. KAHN. The field clerk does a specific work that is done by no other clerk, and the committee segregated him from the other clerks because the committee allowed him commutation of heat and light in addition to his pay. But, as I understand it, under the new law when the staff officers are sent away from Washington they will have to have clerical assistance, and these men will go.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Was not that the object in providing for the field clerks?

Mr. KAHN. No; field clerks have been in the department right straight along. It was the purpose of the committee to give them an addition to their pay, and the committee gave them heat and light. That is why they were segregated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like the gentleman to show the law authorizing the detail of these clerks to the field service.

Mr. KAHN. I think that that has been the custom of the department right along.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, as bearing further upon the point made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that not more than half of the officers shall at any time be on duty in the District of Columbia, I desire to submit this observation: As I understand it, these are the clerks and other employees of the Chief of Staff. The law specifically provides that not more than half of the officers of the Chief of Staff may at any time be on duty within the District of Columbia or near thereto, but under the law more than half of them may be detailed to the field service. Therefore one-half of them or more could at all times be in the field service, which would properly be field clerks, and I think that the War Department in submitting the list of estimates so classifies them. In that part of the list of estimates submitted, under which the Committee on Appropriations is operating, this item carrying these clerks does not appear, but on page 300 in the list of items of the Military Establishment, the list under which the Committee on Military Affairs is operating, this item carrying these clerks does appear. Therefore it is clear to my mind that the list submitted by the War Department supports the contention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman does not intend to argue that, because the War Department has seen fit to follow the course always followed and submit its estimate to the Committee on Military Affairs for these clerks, that very fact is any reason why they should be carried in the military rather than in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill? That is a matter which must be decided by the rules of the House.

Mr. FIELDS. That is true, but the War Department understands the rules of the House, and I would consider the War Department good authority on the question as to whether or not these clerks belong permanently within the District of Columbia, and the point I am making is that the War Department has not classified them as District clerks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think we are prepared to permit the War Department to construe the rules of the House with reference to appropriations or any other matter that may come before us. I want to ask the gentleman another question—if the Chief of Coast Artillery is not a part of the office of the Chief of Staff?

Mr. DENT. Oh, no; he is not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was under the impression that he was.

Mr. FIELDS. No; I have the law before me. It is perfectly plain.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The reason I asked the question is this. In the national-defense act I read this:

And the Chief of Coast Artillery shall be an additional member of the General Staff Corps and shall also be adviser to, and informant of, the Chief of Staff in respect to the business under his charge.

I think that would make him a member of the office of Chief of Staff.

Mr. DENT. No more than any other person is adviser to him.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But it says that he shall be an additional member of the General Staff Corps, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was just reading the law and arguing the proposition that the Staff Corps should not be permitted to stay in one place more than a certain period of time. I submit that if the Chief of the Coast Artillery is a member of the Staff Corps, and this law seems to clearly indicate that his clerks are appropriated for in this bill, then the War Department, upon which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] so confidently relies, is on record as saying that his force should be properly carried in this bill.

Mr. FIELDS. I read from the law, section 5 of the defense act of June 3, 1916, as follows:

The General Staff Corps shall consist of one Chief of Staff, detailed in time of peace from major generals of the line; two assistants to the Chief of Staff, who shall be general officers of the line, one of whom, not above the grade of brigadier general, shall be the president of the Army War College; 10 colonels; 10 lieutenant colonels; 15 majors; and 17 captains, to be detailed from corresponding grades in the Army, as in this section hereinafter provided.

And paragraph 2 of the section continues:

Not more than one-half of all of the officers detailed in said corps shall at any time be stationed, or assigned to or employed upon any duty, in or near the District of Columbia.

Which proves conclusively to my mind that this is a field and not a District organization. Therefore, I maintain that the point of order should lie.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the question for the Chair to decide is whether these clerks are connected with the War Department or any bureau thereof here in Washington or whether they are connected with some service in the field. Under the rules of the House if they are connected with the departmental service they must necessarily be included as a part of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, for certainly the authority conferred by the rules on the Committee on Military Affairs gives it no jurisdiction so far as these clerks are concerned if they are connected with the bureau here in Washington. The authority of that committee is limited under the rule, as follows:

To the Military Establishment, the militia, and the public defense, including the appropriations for their support and for that of the Military Academy, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Last year for the first time in the Army appropriation act, as is confirmed by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when this item was under consideration, the clerks connected with the Chief of Staff, so far as the department is concerned, and the clerks connected with the Chief of Staff, so far as the field service is concerned, were separated. I direct the attention of the Chair to the compilation of the appropriation acts of the last Congress, pages 58 and 59. On page 58, under the heading "Clerks, messengers, and laborers, office of the Chief of Staff," are included those clerks now carried in this item, and it was admitted last year by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that the clerks connected with the Bureau of the Chief of Staff were properly a part of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Then follows the next paragraph, which for the first time segregated those Army field clerks under the title "Clerks and messengers for headquarters of the several territorial departments, districts, divisions, brigades, and service school," to which are attached the provisos which have been called to the attention of the Chair by the chairman of the committee, Mr. BYRNS, and by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. That second provision adverted to by the gentleman from Illinois in no wise militates against the position of the Committee on Appropriations that these field clerks may be in the judgment of the Chief of Staff delegated from field duty to the bureau here, and that is all the effect of the last proviso. Is there anything in the law creating the office of the Chief of Staff suggesting a different construction? I have here the act referred to by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], and other gentlemen who have participated in the debate, of February 14, 1903. That act creates the office of the Chief of Staff, but there is nothing in that act which shows that the Chief of Staff shall not have his office here in the city of Washington.

His office has certain duties to perform, just like the office of the Bureau of Naval Operations. The work of that bureau extends entirely out in the field, and yet they have the office here in Washington. Why, the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the field forces, can detail the Secretary of War, can detail the Secretary of the Navy, or any of these officers who are assigned to departmental work, out into the field, but departmental officials connected with the executive branch of the Government are rightly carried in this bill. To confirm that position I would direct the Chair's attention to this phraseology of this act creating the office of the Chief of Staff to show it was the intention of Congress that this bureau should be established here. I direct the Chair's attention to part of section 3, which is as follows——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. STAFFORD. Section 3 of the act creating the office of Chief of Staff:

All officers detailed in the General Staff Corps shall be detailed therein for periods of four years, unless sooner relieved. While serving in the General Staff Corps officers may be temporarily assigned to duty with any branch of the Army.

That is the rule applicable in the Navy Department. The law says they may be assigned to duty only in connection with these bureaus for four years, and that very idea was carried out by Congress in creating this office of Chief of Staff.

Great stress is laid by the chairman of the Military Committee on the decision of Mr. Olmsted, but that decision, instead of upholding his position, upholds the position of the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Olmsted could not do less than decide in favor of the Committee on Military Affairs, because that was before these clerks were divided into departmental clerks and field clerks, and the phraseology which is referred to by Mr. Olmsted in that opinion shows that they were governmental clerks connected with divisions in the field. I read to the Chair from the opinion of Mr. Olmsted:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks as the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Salaries for such clerks and employees are properly carried in the legislative and not in the Army bill. As to what constitutes a "department," I call the attention of the Chair to an opinion of the Attorney General of the United States directly in point. It is found in Opinions of the Attorney General, volume 15, page 267, and reads as follows:

The several executive departments are by law established at the seat of government. They have no existence elsewhere. Only those bureaus and offices can be deemed bureaus or offices in any of these departments which are constituted such by the law of the organization.

And this is a bureau; there is no question about that. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] admits that these clerks are employed in a department here in Washington. The gentleman admits that.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman admits what?

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact that they are here in Washington. It is true they have been paid for out of the Army appropriation bill, because they were bulked with the Army field clerks, but last year for the first time they were segregated so that the proper committee could take legislative authority over them.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman stated what, he claims, I admitted. Indeed, I do not admit clerks in the office of the Chief of Staff are clerks in a bureau, for my contention is that the Chief of Staff is not a bureau, and that is exactly what Mr. Olmstead decided.

Mr. STAFFORD. You may call it a division, or call it what you will, the fact remains the gentleman admitted without any question or quibble that they were assigned to work here in the District of Columbia. You may call it a bureau or call it a division or a department or an establishment, but the fact is they are employed here in Washington.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield.

Mr. TILSON. But the gentleman does not contend they could not be removed from here to-morrow if it was desired to have them removed to Baltimore or Seattle or to wherever they wished to remove them?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do. There is no authority of law authorizing their deportation out of the District of Columbia.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman contend there is anything that established the Chief of Staff's office in Washington?

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact remains it is here, and there is no authority of law that shows it is established anywhere else. Being here as part of the War Department and with officers detailed under the act originating the Chief of Staff shows that it was intended that it should be here. Of course, the Chief of Staff himself may go out in the field when the exigency arises, like the Secretary of War, or any admiral connected with the bureaus of the Navy Department. Now, if the Chair please, going on with this decision, it says:

The words embraced in lines 13, 14, and 15, on page 6, "And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve," would if introduced for the first time in this bill be open to objection, but it appears to be the identical language which is in the existing law, the Army appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. Olmsted held:

This paragraph appropriates "For pay to clerks and messengers at headquarters of divisions and departments and office of the Chief of Staff."

There is mixed up in that amendment provision for clerks out in the field. We do not contend for one minute if the amendment in this bill provided for clerks at divisions that it would be permissible for the Committee on Appropriations to incorporate them into this bill; but it is admitted by Mr. DENT that they are connected with the Chief of Staff, who has his headquarters here, a fact which is admitted and acknowledged, and they are performing work just like the Bureau of Navigation and other bureaus of the Army and Navy. So we respectfully contend that they are part of the legislative bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman what is the difference between the commanding general of the Army and the Chief of Staff?

Mr. STAFFORD. Only that the Chief of Staff is subject to the orders of the Commander in Chief of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. Could not the commanding general and the Chief of Staff be one and the same person, and are they not one and the same person in the event of war?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. Under the Constitution the President is commanding general of the military forces of the country, and, of course, we could not vary a constitutional provision by any legislative enactment.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I understand the Chairman to refer to what was formerly the commanding general of the Army, whose duties by this particular act were passed over to the Chief of Staff, whose duties very largely become the duties of the Chief of Staff, and are to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] agree to that statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not acquainted with the history of the merger of these two services. I do not know where the commanding general had his headquarters prior to the enactment of this law. I only know that the Chief of Staff has his headquarters here in Washington, just as the head of the respective bureaus of the Navy Department and the War Department. The head of the Bureau of Ordnance, Gen. Crozier, has his office here, and yet his work applies to all the arsenals throughout the country.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, every officer of the United States Army may be detailed, and if the Chair will get this idea I think he will find a difference between the detail of officers and detail of clerks. Now, any officer of the United States Army is subject to detail at any time, either in Washington or in the field. You could take Gen. McCain, The Adjutant General of the Army, and he is subject to detail at any time, but his clerks are not, nor any clerk in that department. So you can take every bureau of the War Department presided over by an Army officer, and it is subject to detail. If you will read all those provisos, Mr. Chairman, there is a general statute providing that they can not detail men here in the office in Washington to the field, though men in the field, under the general statute, may be detailed here to Washington.

Now, as to the Army field force. In order to make it more mobile it is provided that the field force may be detailed to come to Washington, and when they are detailed to come to Washington to perform certain functions they do not lose their post as field clerks; but all of those employed here permanently, as the force here in the city of Washington and not the field force, is the force that we are contending is carried regularly in this bill under the rules of the House. But the provisos permit—and it is necessary to have that proviso there—that in the reorganization of the Army the field force can be brought to Washington, and then be taken back. But that is not true as to any permanent force in any department. Any force in the War Department that is maintained here must stay here. That is for the purpose of keeping segregated the items of appropriation in reference to pure administrative matters here in the city of Washington, and the field operations of the Army or the field operations of the Post Office Department or the field operations of the revenue department and all other departments of the Government.

So, Mr. Chairman, in the appropriation bill itself these items are kept absolutely separate although presided over by the same committee, for the reason that you want to keep the purely administrative force here in Washington separated from what may be a field force. So the right contended here to have the field force sent into the city of Washington by detail does not mean that that applies to the regular force here in the department. And since these regular clerks have been segregated here, doing the official work here in the office of the Chief of Staff, they ought to be carried in this bill, and all the field force is carried in the other bill.

I want to call your attention to another statute in reference to naval operations. And, by the way, they have been trying practically to get some kind of organization. Now, in naval operations they were kept separate. It says:

There shall be a chief of naval operations, who shall be an officer on the active list of the Navy appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the officers of the line of the Navy not below the grade of captain for a period of four years, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, be charged with the operations of the fleet, and with the preparation and readiness of plans for its use in war: Provided, That if an officer of the grade of captain be appointed chief of naval operations, he shall have the rank, title, and emoluments of a rear admiral while holding that position.

Now, this officer in the Navy occupies identically the same place in the organization of the Navy that the Chief of Staff occupies in the organization of the Army. That field force is called upon to make reports to this office here of all of their doings in the field, and the purpose of this force is to keep straight all of the accounts, all of the orders, the whereabouts of all the officers in the Army, just as this force keeps up with the whereabouts of the Navy. Therefore, this head of the Army has an office here, and with that office he has nothing to do, and you do not give him the right to tear up his permanent organization here, the duty of which is to keep perfectly straight the accounts of all the officers in the field. That is the rule that prevails in the Army and should prevail in the Navy. And as they separated the clerks from that item in the appropriation bill under the rules of the House, they should be carried as a part of the force here in the city of Washington. That is the contention that they made here, and if the Chair will take the law and read it he will find it runs clear through the Army and Navy. You may say that the Army and Navy officers should do that. It is not their duty to see that it should be done; it is the duty of Congress to see that it is done, and then keep absolute track of the expenses in Washington and in the field. A great evil grew up some years ago, and it took a long series of rules in the House, and a great deal of legislation, to get those items separated. The reason that rule grew up is because of the line of demarkation that is followed in all of the departments.

The Post Office Department and the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Lighthouse Service and the Navy and in all the Army except the office of the Chief of Staff, where they keep the clerks in Washington mixed and mingled with the other clerks, that is the situation; and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House not being able to segregate them, was compelled to say that if those clerks were mixed together, he could not segregate the two kinds; but they are segregated, and the Chief of Staff of the Army should be dealt with just as the Chief of Staff of the Navy is dealt with.

The CHAIRMAN. In the discussion on the point of order to the provision carried in the Army bill in 1904, to which the attention of the Chair has been called by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], the Chair finds this language employed: "That the Chief of Staff, under the law creating the office, took the place of the commanding general of the Army," and that whenever the commanding general of the Army is mentioned in either law, it applies to the Chief of Staff; and it says, "that where the commanding general of the Army or the Chief of Staff goes, he necessarily or naturally carries with him his chief clerk or the men who attend to those duties." The Chief of Staff is the headquarters of the Army whether he is located in Washington, New York, or El Paso. That being true, it would remove him from the ordinary cases where the office is by law located—in Washington. If a war should break out, naturally the Chief of Staff might need his chief clerk and might very necessarily carry the chief clerk as well as these other employees to the place wherever he establishes his headquarters. That being true, an appropriation being called for to maintain the Army, the question of jurisdiction would come up as to whether or not the Committee on Military Affairs, which is supposed to be composed of Members who have given special study and possessed of peculiar knowledge of military affairs—and I take it that that is true with respect to this committee—or the Committee on Appropriations, composed of Members who are not supposed to have given this special study to military questions, would have jurisdiction. The Chair thinks that the Committee on Military Affairs would be the appropriate committee and should have jurisdiction to handle in that event these appropriations.

In the decision to which the Chair is directed, rendered by Mr. Olmsted, that distinguished Chairman employs this language:

He is, speaking of the Chief of Staff, among other things, to "have supervision of all troops of the line" and to "perform such other military duties" as may be lawfully assigned him by the President. The Chair is of the opinion that he is not the head of a "department" within the meaning of the law and ruling of the Attorney General, but his relation to the War Department, so far as the bill is concerned, is of a character similar to that formerly sustained by the lieutenant general.

The proviso cited in the last appropriation bill, and to which the attention of the Chair has been directed, reading as follows:

Provided, That said clerks, messengers, and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve: Provided, That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of tactical divisions, military departments, brigades, service schools, and office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty in any bureau in the War Department—

Certainly carries with it the idea that these places are not of a civil character, but are of military character, and the second proviso specially provides that these places "shall not be assigned to duty by the Chief of Staff in any bureau of the War Department."

The Chair is therefore of the opinion that the provisions herein contained, and which have been uniformly carried in the Army bill, are properly within the jurisdiction of the Military Affairs Committee and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Quartermaster General: Chief clerk, $2,750; principal clerks—5 at $2,250 each, 3 at $2,000 each; clerks—15 of class 4, 29 of class 3, 50 of class 2, 93 of class 1, 59 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each; advisory architect, $4,000; draftsmen—3 at $1,800 each, 7 at $1,600 each, 5 at $1,400 each; supervising engineer, $2,750; hydraulic and sanitary engineer, $2,000; civil engineer, $1,800; electrical engineer, $2,000; electrical and mechanical engineer, $2,250; marine engineer, $3,500; sanitary and heating engineer, $1,800; 6 messengers; 14 assistant messenger; 12 laborers; laborers, $600; in all, $410,340.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DILL: On page 69, line 6, strike out "12" and insert "13"; and strike out the words "laborers, $600"; and strike out "$410,340" and insert "$410,400."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order will not lie against this amendment, for the reason that we are simply increasing the number of laborers by one, and in the ruling of the Chair yesterday, which was as to a similar amendment regarding messengers, the point of order did not lie.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the amendment on its face shows that it is nothing more nor less than an effort—and I do not think the gentleman from Washington will deny that—to increase the salary of this laborer from $600 to $660, and under the law, as fixed in the last appropriation bill, his salary is $600. The amendment on its face shows that.

Mr. DILL. The same may be true with respect to the messenger, for that matter, and the ruling yesterday was that an amendment providing for a new messenger was in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order should be sustained. It increases the appropriation.

Mr. DILL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making some observations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DILL. I am not surprised that the chairman of the committee makes the point of order. In the light of the attitude of the committee regarding these low-paid employees, I may mention that I was reminded repeatedly yesterday in the discussion, by both the chairman of the committee [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], of the statement of Mr. Denning—I think that is his name—of the Post Office Department, to the effect that the salaries paid to Government employees are from 15 to 30 per cent higher than are paid to similar kinds of employees in private work. I have since taken occasion to read the statement of Mr. Denning, and on page 367 of the hearings I find that Mr. Denning, the man to whom the gentlemen of the committee was so glad to refer as an authority, recommends an increase in the pay of laborers from $660 to $720. And on page 373 he makes the statement that he believes that $720 is the lowest wage upon which a man can live in this city.

Now, I take it that the position of the committee was that if a man received $660 a 10 per cent increase would bring him up to the $720. But such an argument can not be made in explanation of retaining laborers at $600, because the 10 per cent increase will only bring them to the $660 limit. Yet the committee insists upon holding these and other laborers down to the $600 standard. If the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee, who were so willing to support their position yesterday on the testimony of Mr. Denning, who had made these investigations, believe his argument good then, they should be willing to accept his other statement now.

Mr. Chairman, considerable was said in the discussion to the effect that private employers are not paying any more than the Government, or not paying as much. When you propose to raise the wages of a poorly paid Government employee, the argument is always made that the private employer does not pay as much; and the private employer points to the Government as proof conclusive that he should not pay any more, and in that way both of them manage to keep these wages down.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Solicitor: Solicitor, $4,000; law clerks—1 $2,500, 1 $2,250, 2 at $2,000 each; clerks—1 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 1 $840; messenger, $600; in all, $20,590.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a typographical error in line 23, page 76, where the dollar mark is transposed.

Mr. MANN. And there is another typographical error in line 8, page 73, where the word "adjacent" is spelled with two "d's."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk correct those errors.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, they will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pension Office: Commissioner, $5,000; deputy commissioner, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $3,000; assistant medical referee, $2,250; qualified surgeon, $2,000; 11 medical examiners, at $1,800 each; 8 chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,250; chief of board of review, $2,250; 39 principal examiners, at $2,000 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, $2,000; 11 assistant chiefs of divisions, at $1,800 each; 3 stenographers, at $1,600 each; disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions, $4,000; deputy disbursing clerk, $2,750; 3 supervising clerks in the disbursing division, at $2,000 each; clerks—97 of class 4, 89 of class 3, 259 of class 2, 328 of class 1, 69 at $1,000 each; 39 copyists; 28 messengers; 10 assistant messengers; skilled laborer, $660; 9 messenger boys, at $400 each; superintendent of building, $1,400; 23 laborers; 10 female laborers, at $400 each; 15 charwomen; painter and cabinetmaker, skilled in their trades, at $900 each; captain of the watch, $840; 3 sergeants of the watch, at $750 each; 19 watchmen; 2 firemen; in all, $1,434,470.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 93, in line 8, strike out the words "qualified surgeon, $2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "two qualified surgeons, at $2,000 each"; and in the same line strike out "eleven" and insert in lieu thereof "ten"; and on page 94, in line 3, strike out the sum "$1,424,470" and insert the sum "$1,424,670."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, $36,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In last year's legislative appropriation act a provision was carried in the following language:

The Attorney General is authorized to enter into a contract for the lease of a modern fireproof office building for the use of the Department of Justice, for a period not exceeding five years, renewable at the option of the Government for an additional period not exceeding five years, at an annual rental not exceeding $36,000, and a rate per annum per square foot of available floor space not to exceed 36.3 cents.

A similar provision was carried in the act authorizing the Secretary of Labor to enter into a like contract.

When the hearings were had this year, to my amazement I found that the Department of Justice had failed absolutely to carry out the clear mandate of Congress in entering into a lease for a period of five years without any option for an extension of five years. The lease for the new building was for the period of five years with the right to terminate it at the end of any year. You would have thought that if there would be a department of the Government that might be at fault in carrying out the clear language expressive of the intention of Congress it would be some other department than the Department of Justice. The Department of Labor had no difficulty in determining what was the intention of Congress in that clear language. The purpose of Congress was that there should be a lease not only for the term of five years, but that at the expiration of that time if it was found advisable and for the best interests of the Government to renew that lease for another five years, the department should have that right, and not be at the risk of being held up by the lessor.

I have no question with the department as to the rental that is paid for this new building or the character of the building. I do criticize the Department of Justice for acting directly contrary to the mandate of Congress, when it deliberately stated its policy so far as this lease was concerned. What was the purpose of Congress in providing that this lease should contain an option of renewal for five years? We all know that when these real estate owners get a department into a building, at the end of the first term of years they increase the rental. That has been the case with any number of these privately owned buildings. And yet we find the Department of Justice going directly contrary to the express will of Congress.

No excuse is given, none whatever, for this infraction of law; no language could be clearer than that which the House adopted last year. Perhaps the Attorney General may have been engaged during that time in campaigning about the country and did not have time to give his attention to this requirement of Congress. But even if the Attorney General did not have time to attend to this authorization, you would think that there would be some assistants, or even clerks, attached to the Department of Justice who would be able to interpret clear language and carry out the intendment of the law. They offer no excuse whatever.

I am taking this occasion to call the attention of the House to the matter, so that when the lease expires in five years, if the owners of the building should hold up Congress by charging an exorbitant rental for extension of the term, the fault will not lie with the Committee on Appropriations, but will be laid at the door of the Department of Justice.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the chief clerk of the Department of Justice stated that under the contract made for this building the Government will only be required to pay 33½ cents per square foot of space. The rent is no greater than that which was paid for the several old buildings occupied by the Department of Justice, and which had less space. It is a better rental rate than has been made by any department of the Government, so far as I know. Some are paying 40 and 50 cents per square foot. I think it is a favorable rental contract, when you take into consideration what other departments are paying per square foot.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. What apology has the gentleman to offer for the Department of Justice refusing to follow the clear mandate of Congress in the terms of the lease?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not offering any apology for the Department of Justice in failing to make a contract giving the Government an option for a lease for an additional five years, except to say that it is well known that the Government intends to erect a building for the Department of Justice. That matter has been under discussion for several years, and I think it is generally expected that before the five years have expired such a building will be erected by the Government, and the Department of Justice will not need to occupy the present building. Now, taking into consideration that fact, the Department of Justice has gone further than Congress required it, and has made a rental contract which will protect the Government and prevent it from having to pay a continuing rent at the end of any one year. So if the Government does decide to erect the building within the next two, three, or four years, it is not required to continue occupying the building which it at present occupies. In other words, the Government has the right to terminate the lease at the end of any one year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, it is purely problematical whether the Government, in view of the tremendous deficit that it is facing, will launch into a large building program for Government buildings, especially when it has favorable leases for departmental purposes. But suppose the owners of the buildings at the expiration of the five-year period, when they have the department in there, demand an enormous rental; what will Congress do when there is no available space except in private office buildings where the rent is a dollar a square foot and over?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is nothing for Congress to do except——

Mr. STAFFORD. To be held up.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; not necessarily to be held up; we might do as we did in another department with which the gentleman is familiar and with which he had something to do—we could authorize the renting of other quarters, as we did in the case of the Department of Labor. I am not seeking to justify the department in failing to make a contract for an additional five years at its option, but I wanted to make this statement in justice to the department, which I think is entitled to credit for making a contract whereby we are paying less rent now than is paid by any other department of the Government for similar quarters, in so far as I have any knowledge.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commercial attachés: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; and for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés, to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each, and for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, books of reference, and periodicals, travel to and from the United States, exchange on official checks, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $100,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The item which has just been read covers a most important work of our Government in trying to extend our foreign trade. The appropriation for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for commercial attachés and commercial agents and other activities has not been increased in this bill over that carried in the last appropriation bill. The head of the bureau came before the committee this year and made a strong argument showing the need of additional employees in his bureau and in the field in trying to capture foreign markets. I regret exceedingly that the committee did not think it wise to grant any of these allowances. Particularly was a strong showing made as to the need of commercial attachés to develop our export business with India and Russia and South America. This is the one bureau of the Government which must necessarily take care of the growing foreign commerce. I can only register my dissent to the policy of the committee, a niggardly policy, I regret to say, in not providing the necessary means to carry on this great work which is so valuable, especially at this time, in developing our foreign trade.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Has the gentleman sufficient information upon the subject to be willing to propose an amendment to add what he thinks would be a sufficient amount to do this work as it should be done?

Mr. STAFFORD. The appropriation should be increased at least $100,000, but perhaps in view of the policy adopted here this afternoon of extravagance in expenditures in respect to the retention of needless assay offices and Subtreasuries, those gentlemen who voted for their retention might wish to justify their position by voting against any proposed increase which I might suggest upon the ground of economy.

Mr. TILSON. I agree with the gentleman that it is a work of great importance, and I should be prepared to vote for any reasonable amendment increasing the amount appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Realizing there is not much hope of any such amendment being adopted, with the opposition of the committee to it, I shall not offer any.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steamboat-Inspection Service: Supervising Inspector General, $4,000; chief clerk and Acting Supervising Inspector General in the absence of that officer, $2,000; clerks—one of class 4, two of class 3, one of class 2, one of class 1, two at $1,000 each, two at $900 each; messenger, in all, $18,240.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18542, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of destitution in the families of guardsmen now stationed on the Mexican frontier, with leave to incorporate therein an article from the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I was about to ask unanimous consent to have sent to conference the bill H. R. 10384, the immigration bill, but gentlemen have asked that I withhold that request and make a request that the bill as it is reported from the Senate be printed, and I accordingly make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there shall be a print of the immigration bill as it comes from the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Of course, under that it will remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire that it shall remain there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected WILLARD SAULSBURY, a Senator from the State of Delaware, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from time to time during the pleasure of the Senate in accordance with the terms of its resolution passed March 12, 1890.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 9856. An act granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association and to the Manufacturers' Railway Co. permission to transfer certain rights of easement for railway purposes heretofore granted by the United States to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, respectively; and

H. R. 10049. An act for the relief of Capt. Harvey H. Young.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. FOSTER to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 6862, Sixtieth Congress, Emaranda Sommerville, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Also, to Mr. SHOUSE, to withdraw the papers in the case of Nicholi L. Nelson, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. KITCHIN (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 16, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 8 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 16, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our hearts, we trust reverently, to Thee, seeking Thy guidance anew for this day's labor. We have come into the presence of great issues that call upon us to consecrate every power to the development of the Nation in purity, in peace, in righteousness; and we seek the Divine guidance to help us in the discharge of our duties. Save us from the conceit of ignorance, from the pride of opinion. Give to us such willing hearts and devoted purpose that we may be guided by the great God, the God of our fathers, in the discharge of our duties, so that the outcome of this day's labor may redound to the honor and glory of Thy name and the good of all the people whom we serve. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

SHOSHONE AND WIND RIVER RESERVATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 1478).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, plans and estimates of character with cost of structures necessary for completing the irrigation of all irrigable lands of the Shoshone and Wind River Reservations, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURNETT, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. HAYES managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 8816. An act authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the sailing vessel Golden Gate to be registered as a vessel of the United States; and

H. J. Res. 282. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Springfield, Ill., with a special canceling die for the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Federal Union.

SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN.

Mr. HUSTING. I present the credentials of my colleague, Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, elected United States Senator from the State of Wisconsin for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1917, which I ask may be received.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be printed in the RECORD and placed on the files of the Senate.

The credentials are as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF WISCONSIN,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, John S. Donald, secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby certify that Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE was, on the Tuesday next succeeding the first Monday in November, A. D. 1916, duly elected United States Senator from the State of Wisconsin for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1917, as appears from the official canvass of the votes given at a general election held in the State of Wisconsin on the day and year first above written, and that he was so elected in accordance with the laws of the State of Wisconsin.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal at the capitol, in the city of Madison, this 7th day of December, A. D. 1916.

[SEAL.]

JOHN S. DONALD,
Secretary of State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Business Men's League of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Civic Association of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the action of the excise board in granting licenses to liquor establishments on Capitol Hill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Retail Grocers' Protective Union of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the National Consumers' League, in convention assembled at Springfield, Mass., praying for the establishment of an eight-hour workday for women, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Municipal Board of Manila, Philippine Islands, on the death of Hon. James P. Clarke, late a United States Senator from the State of Arkansas, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a copy of the grand jury report, special November, 1916, term for the first division, District of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of the Brotherhood of the Calvary Baptist Church, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against a referendum on the question of prohibition in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. OVERMAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Elizabeth City and Dunn, in the State of North Carolina, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Peru, Auburn, and Terre Haute, all in the State of Indiana, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—J. L. CAMPBELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Senate bill 5311 for the relief of J. L. Campbell and others was by mistake referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The bill should be referred to the Committee on Claims. I ask that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged and that the bill be so referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Public Lands will be discharged, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4360. A bill authorizing the President to exchange land set aside for military purposes in the Territory of Hawaii for private land (S. Rept. No. 877); and

H. R. 9547. An act authorizing the acceptance by the United States Government from the Kenesaw Memorial Association of Illinois of a proposed gift of land on the Kenesaw battle field in the State of Georgia (S. Rept. No. 878).

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5262) for the relief of John B. Hoover, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 879) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12426) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 880) thereon.

ADDRESS BY ROBERT R. PRENTIS (S. DOC. NO. 639).

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 293), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] on December 8, 1916, entitled "Address of Robert R. Prentis, president of the National Association of Railway Commissioners, at Washington, D. C., November 14, 1916," be printed as a Senate document.

By Mr. GORE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 185) restricting the right to vote for Senators and Representatives in Congress and presidential electors to citizens of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. THOMPSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD to the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORT ON SUBMARINE BATTERIES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk a Senate resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 294) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate reports made in 1916 on submarine batteries, including the report on the explosion in the submarine E–2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. GORE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 295), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on the Agricultural appropriation bill for 1917, entitled "Cotton-futures amendment" be printed as a Senate document, and that 10,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—LOUIS M. LEA.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 6019, Sixty-third Congress, granting an increase of pension to Louis M. Lea, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES (S. DOC. NO 640).

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask the permission of the Senate to have printed as a public document an abstract of the limitations on campaign expenditures by party committees, taken from the statutes of the various States, and also an abstract from limitations on campaign expenses of candidates for United States Senator and Representative in Congress under State laws in force in 1916. They are not very long and are to be used by the committee and by the Senate in dealing with the corrupt-practices act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That Mr. OLIVER be appointed chairman of the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That Senator ROBERT L. OWEN be, and is hereby, appointed a member of the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there concurrent or other resolutions? If there be none, morning business is closed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1082.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas. Those in favor of the motion will say "aye"; those opposed will say "no." The ayes have it, and the Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent, which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is this a request for a unanimous-consent agreement for a final vote on the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is. I shall endeavor by this proposition to secure an agreement for a time at which to vote upon the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire first to make a parliamentary inquiry. I think I know what the Senator from Texas has in view, and I am in sympathy with his desire to get a vote on the bill, but I will inquire of the Chair if a request of that kind can be entertained when the bill is not before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not so understand. Another bill is the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas has had the bill taken up on motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that. My attention was momentarily diverted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may not the request for a unanimous-consent agreement be first reported?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; it may be first read.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I did not hear the negative of the question put on the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill. I understood that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] had risen and asked some question. I am told by Senators that the Chair did not put the question on the negative. My attention was diverted, and I did not hear the negative put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair put the negative of the question, but no Senator voted "no." The Secretary will state the request for unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] asks for the following unanimous-consent agreement.
